On Saturday "Les Huguenots" was the opera, this having also been given for the first time this season, and likewise with a cast including many well-known features. Madame Caroline Salla, as Valentine, sang and acted with much effect, as did Mdlle. Alwina Valleria as Margherita di Valois; Mdlle. de Belocca as the Page, Signor Fancelli as Raoul, Signor del Puente as Di Nevers, Signor Galassi as San Bris, and Signor Foli as Marcello.

On Tuesday Mdlle. Marimon appeared for the first time at this house, and repeated her well-known charming performance as Amina, in "La Sonnambula"—the cast having included Signor Fancelli as Elvino, and Signor Foli as Count Rodolfo.

"Il Barbiere di Siviglia" was to be repeated on Wednesday, and "Il Trovatore" on Thursday. For Friday "La Figlia del Reggimento" was announced, with Mdlle. Marimon as Maria; and to-night (Saturday) Signor Marchetti's opera, "Ruy Blas," is to be produced.

OPERA COMIQUE THEATRE.

On Saturday a new opera was produced here, entitled "The Sorcerer," the libretto by Mr. W. S. Gilbert, the music by Mr. Arthur Sullivan, who, it will be remembered, were coadjutors in the very successful piece "Trial by Jury." The work now referred to is in two acts, the leading incidents of the book being the absurd effects produced by the administration of a philtre, by which all the inhabitants of the rural village of Ploverleigh are coupled as lovers, in the most incongruous manner—the old with the young, the handsome with the ugly, the rich with the poor, &c. This is the act of Alexis (son of the Baronet, Sir Marmaduke Pointdextre), who is betrothed to Aline (daughter of the aristocratic Lady Sangazure), the young fiancée being reluctantly induced by her lover to taste the potion, in order, as he believes, to ensure the permanence of their attachment. The result, however, is the reverse of this, for Aline immediately falls desperately in love with the sentimental Dr. Daly, Vicar of the village of Ploverleigh, among the previous effects of the potion having been the association of the proud Baronet with Mrs. Partlet, the pew-opener, whose pretty young daughter falls in love with the deaf old Notary; the courtly Lady Sangazure being fascinated with the agent from whom the philtre has been obtained. This is a certain John Wellington Wells, of the firm of J. W. Wells and Co., Family Sorcerers, of St. Mary-axe. In this character the combination of the cockney tradesman with the purveyor of necromantic charms is a piece of burlesque of the most violent absurdity, the piece, indeed, being farcical throughout. The horror of this last victim—"hoist with his own petard"—leads to the catastrophe. Matters can only be set right by the sacrifice of the life of either himself or Alexis; and, the general voice being in favour of the preservation of the latter, the supplier of the potion sinks resignedly through a trap in the midst of red fire.

Forced as are these incidents, they may be accepted on account of the large amount of fun evolved from them; indeed, the piece is provocative of hearty laughter throughout; and abounds in pungent and good-humoured satire, one strong point being the reversal of the theory enunciated by the romantic Alexis, who, in the matter of marriage, wishes to "break down the artificial barriers of rank, wealth, education, age, beauty, habits, taste, and temper." On this subject he says he has lectured "at mechanics' institutes, and the mechanics were unanimously in favour of my views; I have preached in workhouses, beershops, and lunatic asylums, and I have been received with enthusiasm; I have addressed navvies on the advantages that would accrue to them if they married wealthy ladies of rank, and not a navvy dissented." Satirical hits are also aimed at some of the conventionalities of opera, foreign and English. Thus we have a caricature contract scene, a burlesque incantation scene, a "Tea-Cup Brindisi" (during the administration of the potion), and frequent use of the recitative form showing the absurdity of that declamatory style in association with a colloquial text of common-place phrases, such as is found in a certain class of English opera. Mr. Gilbert's book is based on a Christmas tale previously written by him.

Mr. Sullivan has entered fully into the spirit of the fun—as shown in several instances, among others in the capital patter-song in which J. W. Wells enumerates the supernatural articles supplied by the firm. Delivered with genuine humour by Mr. G. Grossmith, this song had to be repeated. The mock solemnity of the preceding contract scene is much heightened by some effective touches of the grandiose style; the "Incantation" being a good bit of musical burlesque. Very good indeed is the duet, "Welcome joy," between Lady Sangazure and the Baronet, their stilted courtesy being very successfully expressed in the music. It was well sung and acted by Mrs. Howard Paul and Mr. Temple, and was one of the encores of the evening; another repetition having been, in an earlier part of the opera, the sentimental ballad for Aline, "Oh! happy young heart." This was sung with brilliant voice and execution by Miss Alice May. This piece is in the genuine sentimental style, of which there are several specimens assigned to other characters, some of which, if not all, will doubtless become popular in drawing-rooms. To revert to the comic aspect of the music, we may refer to the pseudo-sentimental song of Dr. Daly, in which he laments the several refusals he has met with long ago in his attempts at a matrimonial engagement, the ladies' replies having been, "I'm engaged to So-and-So"—the reiteration of the words "so-and-so" forming the refrain of the song, interspersed with a faint tinkle-tinkle on the flageolet with which the Vicar is solacing his melancholy. Delivered as this was, by Mr. Rutland Barrington, with a sustained calm pensiveness, it formed a rich bit of quiet humour. Indeed, this gentleman's representation of the character was throughout excellent in appearance, make-up, and perfect maintenance of bland melancholy.

As a piece of structural music, the finale of the first act is the best, as it is the most important, portion of the opera. In interest of detail and effective combination of chorus and solo voices it is excellent, and worthy of a work of more serious character. Next to this, perhaps, in intrinsic musical interest is the beautiful quintet in the second act. This pleased so greatly as to necessitate its repetition. Among several short choral pieces, the chorus of girls, "With heart and with voice," was prominent from its bright melodiousness.

We have incidentally spoken of the performances of some of the principals, and have to add a line or two in praise of Miss Giulia Warwick, who was an excellent representative of Constance, the Pew-opener's daughter, secretly in love with the Vicar. The lady named gave her arias, "When he is here" and "I love him very dearly," with much effect. Of Miss May we have already spoken, but may add that her fine soprano voice and her co-operation generally formed an important feature in the performance of the opera. Mr. Bentham, as Alexis, sang well, although indisposed; Miss Everard was a good representative of the demure pew-opener, the small part of the deaf old notary having been satisfactorily sustained by Mr. Clifton. Mr. Grossmith made his stage debut on this occasion, with complete success. In short, the ensemble was excellent, including the chorus-singing, which was unusually good.

The opera has been extremely well placed on the stage; two very pretty scenes are supplied by Messrs. Gordon and Harford; the costumes are excellent and appropriate; and the good stage management testifies to the efficiency of Mr. Charles Harris in that department. The success of the opera was most decided.

Mr. Sullivan conducted, and he and Mr. Gilbert were called forward at the end of the performance.

"The Sorceress" was preceded by Mr. Alfred Cellier's bright little operetta "Dora's Dream," the two lovers (there are no other characters) having been well represented by Miss Giulia Warwick and Mr. Temple. Mr. Cellier conducted.

"THE LADY OF THE LAKE."

As stated last week, the new public halls at Glasgow were inaugurated on the Tuesday by a grand performance of "The Messiah," which was followed by a series of choral and orchestral concerts (the fourth given by the Glasgow Choral Union), opening on the following Thursday, when Professor G. A. Macfarren's cantata "The Lady of the Lake" was performed for the first time. The cantata is based on Scott's well-known poem, the text having been adapted by Madame Macfarren. The work consists of a series of pieces for solo voices and chorus, the characters in the supposed action being—Ellen, the Lady of the Lake (soprano); Malcolm Graeme and Blanche of Devon (contraltos); James Fitzjames, the Knight of Snowdon (tenor); Roderick Dhu (baritone); James, Earl of Douglas, and John of Brent, the English yeoman (basses); the chorus sometimes presenting the author, sometimes reciting the narrative, sometimes personating Clan-Alpine, the soldiery, or the courtiers.

The music is throughout highly characteristic, a distinctive northern tone being felicitously attained without apparent effort or strain.

In the performance of Thursday week the soloists were—Madame Lemmens-Sherrington (Ellen), Madame Patey (Malcolm and Blanche), Mr. Shakespeare (Fitzjames), Mr. Santley (Roderick), and Mr. Hilton (John of Brent).

Among the pieces that produced the greatest effect were—the chorus, "The morning sun;" the boat-song, "Hail to the chief;" the anathema, "Woe to the chief;" "Harp of the North;" the "Coronach;" Ellen's air, "For me, whose memory scarce conveys;" Blanche's ballad, "The toils are pitched;" Malcolm's song, "My hawk is tired;" and the duet for Ellen and Fitzjames, which latter was encored.

As usual in Professor Macfarren's works, the skilful and picturesque orchestral writing is a special feature in the cantata. These details were given with fine effect by the excellent band, headed by Mr. J. T. Carrodus as principal first violin. The choral music was also well rendered by the Glasgow choir, trained by Mr. Lambeth, who conducted the performance. The chorists maintained the high reputation which they had previously gained.

The cantata was enthusiastically received, and the composer called forward. We shall soon have occasion again to speak of the work in reference to its first hearing in London.

Besides the choral concerts, the Glasgow scheme comprises several orchestral concerts to be conducted by Dr. von Bulow, whose pianoforte playing is also to form a feature in the programmes.

The seventh of the present series of Crystal Palace concerts, on Saturday last, included a fine performance of Schumann's Symphony in E flat (No. 3), known as the "Rhenish" symphony. The concert began with Mr. C. V. Stanford's "Festival Overture," of which we have already spoken in reference to its first hearing, at the Gloucester Festival, in September last. A specialty at Saturday's concert was Miss Emma Barnett's skilful rendering of Beethoven's third pianoforte concerto (in C minor). The other instrumental music consisted of the ballet music of "Mose in Egitto," added by Rossini for the reproduction of the work at Paris. Madame Osgood sang the air, "Flowers of the Valley," from Weber's "Euryanthe," and declaimed with great effect the scene of Isolde's death, from Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde," Mr. Vernon Rigby having rendered the air, "Refrain thy voice," from Mr. Sullivan's oratorio "The Light of the World," and songs by Schubert and Schumann.

The second of the new series of Saturday concerts at the Alexandra Palace took place last week, when Rossini's "Stabat Mater" was given, with Miss José Sherrington, Miss Marion Severn, Mr. J. H. Pearson, and Mr. Wadmore as solo vocalists, in co-operation with the band and choir of the establishment. The second part of the programme was miscellaneous. Mr. Frederic Archer occupied his post as the regularly-appointed conductor.

The fourth and last of the fourth series of Herr Franke's interesting chamber concerts took place at the Royal Academy of Music on Tuesday evening, when his programme included Beethoven's string quartet, No. 10 (op. 74), and Schumann's pianoforte quintet, with Mdlle. Anna Mehlig as pianist.

The London Ballad Concerts (directed by Mr. John Boosey) opened their twelfth season at St. James's Hall on Wednesday evening, with a programme of varied and popular interest.

Of the first concert of the seventh season of the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society (conducted by Mr. Barnby) we must speak next week. Verdi's "Requiem" was the work to be performed, the solo singers announced having been Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Mdlle. Redeker, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Thurley Beale.

The Sacred Harmonic Society opened its forty-sixth season yesterday (Friday) evening with a performance of Mendelssohn's "St. Paul." Mesdames Wynne and Patey, Mr. Vernon Rigby, Mr. Santley, Mr. C. Henry, and Mr. De Lacey were the vocalists announced.

The grand piano used for many years by Haydn, properly authenticated, has of late become the property of Kapellmeister Richter, of Vienna (well known here by his conducting the Wagner festival at the Albert Hall in May last). He is desirous of selling the piano for the benefit of the Wagner Academy now being formed at Baireuth.

THEATRES.

The chief event of the week is the reappearance, after the lapse of many years, of Mr. Henry Neville in his original character of Henry Dunbar in Mr. Tom Taylor's version of Miss Braddon's interesting novel. The scenes from the romance are well selected in the play, and form an exciting drama, besides giving abundant opportunity for excellent acting, Mr. Neville's delineation of the conscious homicide, assuming the person and taking the property of his victim, forms as complete a portrait of the unhappy man as could be rendered by the most finished artist. The actor has studied every phase of the character, and brings out every turn of the situation. He is well assisted by Miss Bella Pateman, who, as Margaret Wentworth, kindled into energy by her desire of vengeance on her father's supposed murderer; and, ultimately finding in her father himself the guilty man who had sacrificed his employer to his greed and resentment, surrendered herself to the stirring emotions which she had to express, and won a well-merited triumph from a large and fashionable audience. In other respects the revival was ably acted. Mr. Forbes Robertson as Clement Austin was good, as was also Mr. Robert Pateman as Henry Carter, the detective. Especially welcome to us was Mr. G. W. Anson, who presented an amusing caricature of the Major; and the same commendation may be bestowed on Mr. J. W. Hill's Jerrams, the waiter at the George. The parts of Mary Madden and Laura Dunbar were pleasingly interpreted by Miss Gerard and Miss Ellen Meyrick. Moreover, the play was elaborately mounted, and illustrated with efficient scenery. It was preceded by the farce of "The Rough Diamond," in which Miss Gerard distinguishes herself as Margery, and Mr. Charles Harcourt admirably impersonates Sir William Evergreen. The performances were successful, and deserved the applause with which they were received.

Goldsmith's comedy of "She Stoops to Conquer" was performed with marked success at the Globe, at a matinée on Saturday. Miss Stammers, an accomplished actress, acted Miss Hardcastle charmingly. Miss Rachel Sanger delighted her audience as Miss Neville; and Mrs. Chippendale was perfect in the part of Mrs. Hardcastle. Then there were Mr. W. Farren as Hardcastle himself, and Mr. Righton as Tony Lumpkin, both of them decided hits. Adequately supported throughout, the performance will be long remembered as one of great excellence.

A pleasing little drama, entitled "Never Again"—a comedietta adapted from the French by W. H. Butterfield (Thomas Scott)—is cleverly adapted and skilfully written by a gentleman well acquainted with the French stage. The dialogue is conducted by four persons only, and the play could therefore be conveniently acted in a drawing-room.

The medals of the Royal Society for the present year have been awarded by the president and council as follows:—The Copley medal, to Professor James Dwight Dana, for his biological, geological, and mineralogical investigations, carried on through half a century, and for the valuable works in which his conclusions and discoveries have been published. A Royal medal to Mr. Frederick Augustus Abel, F.R.S., for his physico-chemical researches on gun-cotton and explosive agents. A Royal medal to Professor Oswald Heer, of Zurich, for his numerous researches and writings on the Tertiary plants of Europe, of the North Atlantic, North Asia, and North America, and for his able generalisations respecting their affinities and their geological and climatic relations; and the Davy medal to Robert Wilhelm Bunsen and Gustav Robert Kirchhoff, for their researches and discoveries in spectrum analysis. This is the first award of the Davy medal, which, as will be remembered, was founded by the proceeds of the sale of the service of silver plate bequeathed for the purpose by Sir Humphry Davy. The medals will be presented at the society's anniversary meeting on the 30th inst.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

ADMIRAL SIR ADOLPHUS SLADE

Admiral Sir Adolphus Slade, R.N., K.C.B., died on the 13th inst., at 3, Hyde Park-place, aged seventy-four. He was the fifth son of General Sir John Slade, Bart. (so created in 1831), by Anna Eliza, his wife, daughter of James Dawson, Esq., Assistant Barrister for the county of Armagh, and obtained his first commission in 1827, in which year he was present at Navarino. In 1850 he entered the Turkish navy, in which he served during the Crimean War. He received the Orders of the Medjidie and Osmanieh, the English, Sardinian, and Turkish war medals, and the Sebastopol clasp. Sir Adolphus was the author of "Turkey and the Crimean War," and "Records of Travel in Turkey." He was created a K.C.B. in 1858, and attained flag rank in 1866, when he retired from the Ottoman service. A Portrait of Sir Adolphus Slade appeared in this Journal in 1854, and another of the deceased will be given next week.

MR. CAREW O'DWYER.

Andrew Carew O'Dwyer, Esq., late of Orlagh, Templeogue, in the county of Dublin, died, in London, on the 15th inst., in his seventy-eighth year. He was born in 1800, the son of Joseph O'Dwyer, a merchant of Waterford, and was called to the Irish Bar in 1830. He soon became one of the leading political adherents of O'Connell, and from 1833 to 1835 he was M.P. for Drogheda. He held at one time the office of Secretary of the Exchequer in Ireland, which was abolished shortly after his appointment, and Mr. O'Dwyer was accorded a large pension. He married in 1828, Selina, daughter of Sir R. Gillespie, K.C.B., and leaves issue.

MR. CHRISTOPHER ST. GEORGE.

Christopher St. George, Esq., of Tyrone House, in the county of Galway, J.P. and D.L., died there on the 12th inst., aged sixty-seven. He was the eldest son of the late Arthur French St. George, Esq., of Tyrone House, by Lady Henrietta St. Lawrence, his wife, daughter of William, second Earl of Howth, and was grandson of Christopher French, Esq., of Tyrone, who assumed the surname of St. George in 1774 in compliance with the settlement of his great grandfather, Lord St. George. Through his mother, Lady Harriet St. George, he was one of the coheirs of the barony of Athenry, a claim to which was instituted before the House of Lords many years ago, upon which no decision was had. Mr. St. George received his education at Trinity College, Dublin. He sat in Parliament for the county of Galway from 1847 to 1852, and was a well-known patron of the turf.

MR. GEORGE DARBY.

George Darby, Esq., of Markly, Sussex, died on the 16th inst., at 18, Down-street, Piccadilly, in the eighty-first year of his age. He was the third son of John Darby, Esq., of Markly, and of Leap Castle, King's County, by Anne, his wife, daughter of Samuel Vaughan, Esq., and was educated at Westminster School, and Catherine Hall, Cambridge, where he graduated in B.A. in 1820 and M.A. in 1823. He was called to the Bar by the Hon. Society of Lincoln's Inn in 1821, and was a J.P. and D.L. for Sussex. He sat in Parliament for the Eastern Division of that county from 1837 to 1846, and was for a time a Commissioner of Inclosures. Mr. Darby married, in 1827, Maria, youngest daughter of Samuel Homfray, Esq., M.P., of Coworth House, Berks, and had a large family.

MISS JULIA KAVANAGH.

Miss Julia Kavanagh, a well-known litterateur and novelist, died suddenly at Nice on the 28th ult. She was born at Thurles in 1824, but resided nearly her whole life in France. Her numerous works were almost exclusively confined to the delineation of French life and character, which she most faithfully portrayed. Besides being the authoress of many stories and essays contributed to periodical literature, and of various novels, we may mention, amongst Miss Kavanagh's well-known productions, "Nathalie," "Woman in France during the Eighteenth Century," "The Women of Christianity," "French Women of Letters," "English Women of Letters," "Queen Mab," "Beatrice," and "Sylvia."

The deaths have also been announced of—

Major Walter Saxton Bold, on the 11th inst., at Preston, near Brighton, aged eighty.

Lieutenant-Colonel George Pott, of Todrig, late Bengal Army, on the 15th inst., at Borthwick, Roxburghshire.

The Rev. John F. T. Wolley, formerly for more than thirty years Vicar of Beeston, on the 16th inst., aged eighty-one.

Thomas Whitmore Wylde-Browne, Esq., J.P. and D.L., of the Woodlands, Shropshire, at his seat near Bridgnorth, on the 8th inst., aged seventy-six.

Captain Hugh Allen Mackey, R.A. Brigade-Major, eldest son of Lieut.-Colonel J. A. Mackey, of Fairhill, Exeter, on the 21st ult., at Bermuda Mount, Jamaica, aged thirty-seven.

The Rev. Robert Smith, D.D., senior minister of the parish of Old Machar, on the 11th inst., at the Manse, Old Aberdeen, in his eighty-first year.

Baron Charles Joachim Hambro, on the 17th inst., at Milton Abbey, Dorsetshire, aged seventy. He was the eldest son of the late Charles, Baron Hambro, and is succeeded by his son, Charles Joseph Theophilus, Barrister-at-Law, J.P. and D.L. for Dorsetshire.

Lady Mary Stanley, on the 8th inst., at 14, Grosvenor-square, W., in her ninetieth year. Her Ladyship was the second daughter of James, eighth Earl of Lauderdale, by Eleanor, his wife, only daughter and heir of Anthony Todd, Esq., and was married in 1819 to Edward Stanley, Esq., of Cross Hall.

Augusta, Viscountess Campden, on the 5th inst., at Spetchley Park, Worcester, aged twenty-five. Her Ladyship was the eldest daughter of Robert Berkeley, Esq., of Spetchley Park, Worcestershire, by Lady Mary Catherine, his wife, sister of the present Earl of Kenmare, K.P., and was married, May 9, 1876, to Charles William Francis, Viscount Campden, elder son of the Earl of Gainsborough.

Commander William Watson, Naval Knight of Windsor, on the 8th inst., at Travers College, Windsor Castle, aged thirty-seven. He was the second son of the Rev. George Watson Smyth, of Sherborne Lodge, St. Leonard's-on-Sea; entered the Royal Navy in 1854, and served in the Baltic. He also served in the New Zealand and Chinese wars, and in the Pacific.

James Christopher FitzGerald Kenney, Esq., of Kilclogher House, in the county of Galway, and of Merrion-square, Dublin, J.P., B.A., M.R.I.A., Barrister-at-Law, whose recent death was so much lamented, was eldest son of Lieutenant-Colonel James FitzGerald Kenney, Esq., of Kilclogher, and was nephew of the present Earl of Westmeath. Mr. FitzGerald Kenney represented a very ancient family settled for many generations at Kenney's Hall, in the county of Wexford. He married, Aug. 17, 1870, Miss Crean Lynch, of Clogher House, in the county of Mayo, eldest daughter of Major Patrick Crean Lynch, by whom he leaves issue.

CHESS.

H. W. H. (Portland).—Problem No. 1769 is quite correct, as are the conditions of mate.

E. L. G.—Your solution of Enigma No. 14 is perfect.

A. N. CHERNIEFF.—If in Problem No. 1757 Black play 1. Q to Q 3rd, the continuation is 2. Q to Q 4th (ch), Q takes Q, and 3. P to B 7th, discovering check and mate.

W. H. T. (Yokohama).—Your Problem can be solved in three moves by 1. P to K 6th Q to K 2nd; 2. B to B 7th (ch), Q takes B; 3. P takes Q, mate. If Black play 1. Q takes P, then 2. R to K 5th, &c.

W. S. B.—Problem No. 1764 is the composition of the late R. B. Wormald.

M. R. (Preston), J. de Houserville, E. L. G., and Others. See notice in our last issue.

W. B. GUYER (Birmingham).—In the end game which you have been good enough to send us Black can certainly win in the manner you indicate. He could also reply to 1. K to B sq with 2. P to B 6th (dis. ch). The position is rather curious, undoubtedly.

A. BLOKE.—White's move of 5. Kt to Kt 5th constitutes the Allgauer Gambit (Proper). It is still sometimes played by strong players, but cannot be considered sound, though its character has been to some extent rehabilitated of late by 7. P to Q 4th (after 6. K takes Kt), which move has been introduced with much success by Mr. Thorold. 5. Kt to K 5th (the Allgauer-Kieseritzki Gambit) is the recognized mode of pursuing the attack, and the opening as thus continued is frequently adopted in match games by first-class players. Your solution of Problem No. 1768 is incorrect. As to No. 1760, please refer to our notice of last week.

CHESS INTELLIGENCE.

Much progress has been made in the second round of the City of London Chess Club Tournament. In division A (for first and second prizes) Messrs. Beardsell, Block, Bussy, Delannoy, Huckvale, Long, and Manning have won their matches; while in division B (for third and fourth prizes) the following players have achieved a like result—Messrs. Earle, George, Heywood, Israel, Kindell, jun., and Stanforth. The matches between Messrs. Boden, MacDonnell, and Potter, and their respective opponents in division A are still in progress.

A contest has lately taken place between the North London and the Kentish Town Clubs. The former was victorious by seven games to one.

The score in the match now going on at Bristol between Mr. E. Thorold and Miss M. Rudge, at the odds of a Knight, stands as follows:—Mr. Thorold, four; Miss Rudge, two; and no draws. Two previous matches at the same odds were won by the lady player, the first by seven to three, with two draws, and the second by seven to two, with two draws.

It may interest some of our readers to know that a very good chess club exists at Croydon. It meets every Tuesday at seven p.m. at the Surrey Club-House, Wellesley-road. Among members recently elected may be mentioned the Right Hon. Robert Lowe, M.P., the Rev. G. A. MacDonnell, and the Hon. Granville Leveson-Gower. We understand that visitors from other clubs are at all times cordially welcomed as guests.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will and two codicils (dated July 10, Sept. 15, and Oct. 7, 1877) of Mr. William Wagstaff, late of No. 91, Westbourne-terrace, and of Plas yn Viood, near Llangollen, Denbighshire, who died on the 11th ult., were proved on the 7th inst. by John Charles Best, the son-in-law, and William Appleton and Henry Appleton, the nephews, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £160,000. The testator makes bequests to many of his relatives, including his sisters, Mrs. Appleton and Mrs. Dickson, and his niece, Mrs. Pierce, and their children; to his daughter, Mrs. Best, he gives his furniture, pictures, plate, and effects at Viood. All his real estate in Denbighshire is settled to the use of his daughter and her husband, for their joint lives, with benefit of survivorship, with remainder to his grandson, William Best; his leasehold property in the same county, a sum of £60,000, and certain specific stocks and shares, are to be held upon trusts similar to the uses declared of his real estate, with the exception that the stocks and shares are to accumulate for twenty-one years. The residue of his property he leaves to his daughter for her life, and then to all her children.

The will and five codicils (dated July 28, 1859; May 18, 1866; Oct. 27, 1870; May 6, 1873; Sept. 13, 1876; and March 28, 1877) of Mr. William Evill, late of Bushey House, Streatham-hill, who died on the 17th ult., were proved on the 7th inst. by John Kemp Welch and William Evill and Arthur Evill, the sons, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £140,000. The testator leaves legacies to a servant and others; £50 for distribution among the poor of the district of Emanuel Church, Streatham; and the remainder of his property to his four sons and three daughters, in equal shares.

The will and codicil (dated July 22, 1874, and Jan. 27, 1877) of the Hon. Charles Skaffington Clements, late of No. 44, Grosvenor-street, Hanover-square, and of Mortimer House, near Reading, who died on Sept. 29 last, were proved on the 8th inst. by Robert Birmingham Clements, the nephew, the acting executor, the personal estate being sworn under 70,000. The testator leaves legacies and annuities to servants and others, and the residue upon trust for his sister, Lady Elizabeth Victoire Clements, for life, and then to her said nephew.

The will and codicil (dated Dec. 23, 1874, and March 19, 1877) of Mrs. Eleanor Anne Addington, late of No. 78, Eaton-place, who died on the 17th ult., were proved on the 31st ult. by Miss Mary Anne Harriet Bucknall Estcourt, the sister, the acting executrix, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. Among other bequests, the testatrix gives upwards of £20,000 Consols, various other sums of stock, and certain shares, together with her houses in Lowndes-square and Eaton-place, and the furniture, plate, pictures, and household effects in the last-named house, which formerly belonged to her late husband, to Viscount Sidmouth; and she states she does this in conformity with what she believes to be the wishes of her late husband; and she desires thus to record the sentiments of grateful affection entertained by him for his venerated uncle and benefactor, Henry, first Viscount Sidmouth. The residue of her estate she gives to her sister, Miss Bucknall Estcourt.

The will and codicil (dated July 30, 1874, and September, 1876) of Mr. Henry Creed, formerly of Bucknalls, near Watford, Herts, and late of No. 21, Warrington-crescent, Maida-hill, who died on the 3rd ult., were proved on the 1st inst. by Mrs. Cecilia Aurelia Creed, the widow, the acting executrix, the personal estate being sworn under £20,000. There are a few legacies; and, subject to them, he leaves his property upon trust for his wife for life, and then for all his children.

ASTRONOMICAL OCCURRENCES IN DECEMBER.

(From the "Illustrated London Almanack.")

The Moon is near Mercury on the 5th, Jupiter on the 6th, Venus on the 8th, Saturn on the 12th, and Mars on the 13th. Her phases or times of change are:—

Mercury is an evening star, and sets on the 2nd at 4h. 15m. p.m., or 23m. after sunset; which interval, after sunset, slowly increases to 34m. on the 7th, to 49m. on the 12th, to 1h. 7m. on the 17th, to 1h. 25m. on the 22nd, to 1h. 34m. on the 27th, and then decreases to 1h. 32m. on the last day of the year; the planet setting on this day at 5h. 30m. p.m. He is near the Moon on the 5th, near Jupiter on the 15th, at his greatest eastern elongation (19 deg. 44 min.) on the 25th, and in his ascending node on the last day of the year.

Venus is an evening star, setting on the 7th at 7h. 20m. p.m., or 3h. 30m. after sunset; on the 17th at 7h. 42m. p.m., or 3h. 53m. after sunset; on the 27th at 8h. 0m. p.m., or 4h. 6m. after the Sun; and on the last day of the year at 8h. 5m. p.m., or 4h. 7m. after sunset. She is near the Moon on the 8th; and at her greatest eastern elongation (47 deg. 16 min.) on the 11th. She is due south on the 1st at 3h. 14m. p.m., and on the last day at 3h. 12m. p.m.

Mars sets on the 1st at 0h. 55m. a.m., on the 8th at 0h. 48m. a.m., on the 18th at 0h. 40m. a.m., on the 28th at 0h. 34m. a.m., and on the last day of the year at 0h. 31m. a.m. He is near the Moon on the 13th, and in his ascending node on the 23rd. He is due south on the 1st at 7h. 2m. p.m., on the 15th at 6h. 33m. p.m., and on the last day of the year at 6h. 2m. p.m.

Jupiter sets on the 7th at 5h. 26m. p.m., or 1h. 36m. after sunset; on the 17th at 4h. 57m. p.m., or 1h. 8m. after the Sun; on the 27th at 4h. 29m. p.m., or 35m. after the Sun; and on the last day of the year at 4h. 18m. p.m., or 20m. after sunset. He is near the Moon on the 6th. He is due south on the 1st at 1h. 49m. p.m., on the 15th at 1h. 8m. p.m., and on the last day of the year at 0h. 21m. p.m.

Saturn is an evening star, and sets on the 1st at 11h. 42m. p.m., on the 7th at 11h. 20m. p.m., on the 17th at 10h. 43m. p.m., on the 27th at 10h. 6m. p.m., and on the last day of the year at 9h. 52m. p.m. He is in quadrature with the Sun on the 5th, and near the Moon on the 12th. He is due south on the 1st at 6h. 21m. p.m., on the 15th at 5h. 28m. p.m., and on the last day of the year at 4h. 28m. p.m.

From the returns issued at Liverpool of the number of emigrants sailing from that port in the month of October last it appears that seventy-five vessels took their departure, having on board 4853 persons. Of these 3122 were English, 30 Scotch, 312 Irish, 851 foreigners, and 537 whose nationalities were not known. The numbers and destinations were:—To the United States, 3560; to British North America, 728; to Australia, 33; to South America, 131; to the East Indies, 295; to the West Indies, 20; to China, 13; and to the West Coast of Africa, 67. When the figures are compared with those of the previous month it is seen there is a falling off to the extent of 1655, and a decrease in comparison with the corresponding period of last year of 653.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1877.

The all but total absorption of public attention by the vicissitudes of war between the Russian and Ottoman Empires and by the struggle in France between Parliamentary Government and the personal pretensions of Marshal MacMahon, deprives the domestic politics of this country of their rightful importance in the eyes of the people. The greater suppresses the less. So much interest has been taken in the affairs of Russia, Turkey, and France that little or none is left for those of the United Kingdom. In the former, however, there is just now a brief lull, of which we may avail ourselves to take a hasty glance at two or three subjects which concern our own national well-being. We put aside, for the present, the state of our trade and commerce, which, however, will claim consideration at no distant interval of time. Meteorological phenomena of a rather disastrous character might well invite notice; but, violent as they have been, scarcely demand comment. They have made their impression—we need hardly say, a painful one—but they require and will admit of little or nothing in the way of elucidation. There has been lately a slight revival of political feeling in these Islands, but as it is chiefly of a party kind we, observing the general rule by which we are guided, prefer to let it pass. It is of no very serious promise just yet either one way or the other, nor has it laid any deep hold upon popular sympathy. Two or three questions, however, regarding Colonial and Foreign affairs have almost simultaneously cropped up, at which it may be well to give a momentary glance at least. These are, the Chefoo Convention with China, the Halifax Fisheries Commission, and the state of affairs in South Africa. Neither of these, perhaps, at the best of times, would very closely touch national political feeling. But each of them is important in its way, and each deserves to be watched with scrupulous regard by all who contribute, or may contribute, to the public opinion of the country.

The Chefoo Convention is a sort of Treaty engagement with the Chinese Empire. It was drawn up by a diplomatist of our own. It exacted from the Chinese Government some important concessions. It obtained an indemnity for the assassination of Mr. Margary. It opened five new ports to our commerce in China. It regulated the mode of diplomatic intercourse between representatives of the two Empires, and it settled certain rules as to the manner in which commerce should be conducted. The Treaty was signed. It was sent over here for ratification. That ratification, so far as our own Government was concerned, was deferred until the opinion of the Indian Government could be obtained upon such clauses of the Treaty as touched the Opium Traffic.

The Convention has not yet been ratified on our side. Meanwhile the Chinese have acted with good faith. They have paid their indemnity for the murder of Mr. Margary. They have opened their ports. They have practically fulfilled the obligations which they took upon themselves. No judgment need be pronounced upon the merit or demerit of the Opium Traffic from India. We have pledged our word to certain stipulations which may be found to affect it, and thereby to affect Indian Finances. But ought we at this time of day to make the fulfilment of our obligations dependent upon the convenience of the Government at Calcutta? We have received the good things promised us by the Chinese Government—ought we not to reciprocate their good faith? The Treaty was of our own devising—should it not be ratified, after having obtained from it the advantages we proposed for ourselves? This is one of the questions which, perhaps, would have been settled before now had not the attention of the British public been almost exclusively preoccupied by the chances and changes of war in South-Eastern Europe and Asia Minor.

The Award of the Halifax Fisheries Commission will under no circumstances, perhaps, secure the same amount of public attention in this country as in Canada. The Commissioners have, with some dissent on the part of one of them, awarded to Canada five-and-a-half million dollars in satisfaction of the Balance due to the Dominion under the mutual concessions settled by the Treaty of Washington for twelve years therefrom. It was agreed by that Treaty that terms of mutual compensation should be fixed by a subsequent Commission, liberty being meanwhile granted to the citizens of the United States to fish in Canadian waters and liberty to the Canadian fishermen to fish off the coasts of the United States down to a certain degree of latitude. The Commissioners for adjusting the terms of compensation have, as we have said, come to a decision in which M. Delesfosse (the President) and Sir Alexander Galt have concurred; Mr. Kellogg, the third Commissioner, representing the United States, dissenting from their award on the ground that the privilege of fishing on the coasts of the United States has not been adequately valued. There seems to be no great probability that his representation of the case will guide the ultimate decision of the Cabinet at Washington. The award will most likely be paid, and the Authorities of the Dominion will accept it. So far, good. But the decision of the Commission does not clear all grounds of dispute for the future. It applies to only a temporary period. It omits questions (at least, we have no authentic information as to whether or not they have been finally dealt with) relating to those Canadian waters back of headlands the entire coasts of which are in the possession of Canada. The award, therefore, necessarily falls short of the demands of the case, and leaves open issues which may lead to future dispute. The Colonial Office, we trust, will seek and obtain the concurrence of the Government at Washington in some arrangement which will be final. It is not to be concealed that concessions will have to be made by both parties, but the probability is that the fruit of such concessions will be of far greater value to those who make them than any probable amount of gain to be derived from the privileges conceded.

Then comes the war in South Africa. Practically, it is said to be at an end. It is to be hoped that it may prove so. Really, it is between two tribes of Kaffirs, originating in a drunken dispute, but involving to a considerable extent the authority and responsibility of the Government at the Cape. We need not enter upon the particulars of the case. It may suffice to observe that Sir Bartle Frere is on the spot, and that the Colonial Forces have been found strong enough to put down those of the headstrong Chief who refuses to recognise the obligations which devolved upon him. The affair is of no further immediate importance than as presenting a practical illustration of the necessity which exists for internal confederation—at least for defensive purposes. Whether the occasion will be so utilised remains to be seen. The confidence of the British Public is given, and, as it appears to us, is justly given, to Sir Bartle Frere. It may be some time before his statesman-like judgment becomes stamped upon the minds of the South African Provinces; but in the end we can hardly doubt a mutual confidence will be established between the Native Populations and the White Settlers. Justice will, it is to be hoped, constitute the basis of relations between the two parties, and, so far as civilisation can permanently benefit inferior races, such civilisation will be eventually theirs.

On Thursday evening Mr. W. H. Smith, M.P., was entertained at a grand banquet in St. James's Hall, in celebration of his appointment as First Lord of the Admiralty. In responding to the toast of his health, the right hon. gentleman adverted to the state of the Navy, which he regarded as highly efficient, and said it would be his duty to keep it up to the standard which it reached under his lamented predecessor. In regard to the war the highest British interests would be subserved by peace in Europe and throughout the world; and he fervently hoped that after so much bloodshed and the satisfaction of the military honour both of Russia and Turkey some Power would arrest the hands of the belligerents before further misery was inflicted. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, in acknowledging the toast of "Her Majesty's Ministers," referred in eulogistic terms to the great qualifications of Mr. Smith for such a high and responsible position. Earl Beauchamp responded for the "House of Lords," and Mr. Cross for "The House of Commons."

THE COURT.

The Queen and Princess Beatrice returned from the Glassalt Shiel yesterday week to Balmoral Castle. Her Majesty held a Council, which was attended by Prince Leopold, the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, and Sir Stafford Northcote. Mr. Peel was the Clerk of the Council. The Queen gave an audience to the Duke of Richmond and Gordon. Her Majesty's dinner party included the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, Sir Stafford Northcote, and Mr. Peel. The Duke of Richmond and Gordon, and Mr. Peel left the castle on Saturday. Sir Stafford Northcote dined with the Queen. Her Majesty and Princess Beatrice attended Divine service on Sunday, performed at Balmoral by the Rev. Archibald Campbell, of Crathie. The Queen and the Princess have taken their customary out-of-door exercise. The departure of her Majesty from the Highlands has been deferred, owing to Prince Leopold's indisposition. An invalid couch has been dispatched to Balmoral for the accommodation of the Prince if he should require it on the journey south next week, when it is arranged for the Court to return to Windsor Castle. Sir Stafford Northcote has left and Mr. Collins has arrived at Balmoral.

The Queen has presented to the town of Heywood, Lancashire, twenty acres of land for the purposes of a public park. The money has been set apart by her Majesty out of a sum exceeding £10,000 which fell to her as Duchess of Lancaster, through the death, without heirs, of Mr. C. M. Newhouse, of Heywood.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Princess of Wales and Princesses Louise Victoria and Maud of Wales left Abergeldie on Thursday week for the south. The Princess drove to Ballater in the same carriage with Miss Knollys, who was still very weak, and was lifted into a saloon carriage, which had been heated to a temperature proper for the invalid. The Royal party arrived at Clarence House, St. James's, at twenty minutes to nine the next morning. The Crown Prince of Hanover visited the Princess in the afternoon. The Prince of Wales, accompanied by the Princess and their daughters, left Clarence House on Monday for Sandringham House. The Hon. Mrs. Stonor, Mdlle. Vauthier, Major-General Sir Dighton Probyn, Major Russell, and Mr. Holzmann were in attendance.

The original model of the marble bust of the Prince of Wales, taken from the life in 1857 by the late J. Evan Thomas, F.S.A., sculptor, has been bought by his Royal Highness, and was on Wednesday sent to Sandringham.

Princess Louise of Lorne and the Marquis of Lorne have been to the Gaiety and Royalty Theatres.

Princess Louise, accompanied by Lady Sophia Macnamara, visited the Victoria Hospital for Children on Wednesday afternoon. Her Royal Highness, who is patron of the institution, showed great interest in the children, graciously bestowing a kindly word and smile on each of the occupants of the sixty little cots. This charity is wholly without endowment, and sadly in need of funds.

The Crown Prince of Hanover, accompanied by the Duke and Duchess of Teck, returned to town yesterday week from Masham, where he had been the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Villebois. The Prince dined with the Duke and Duchess of Teck at Kensington Palace.

The Prince Imperial has been visiting the Earl and Countess Delawarr, and was present at one of the balls recently given at Buckhurst.

His Excellency Count Schouvaloff, the Russian Ambassador, accompanied by the Countess, left Cheam House on Monday for Dover. The Countess and family proceed to St. Petersburg, his Excellency accompanying them a portion of the route, and then returning to London.

Countess Olga Münster arrived at the German Embassy on Carlton House-terrace on Sunday from Germany.

The marriage of Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. Lionel Massey, late Scots Guards, third son of the late Lord Clarina, to Miss E. Bannatyne, eldest daughter of Alexander Bannatyne, Esq., of Woodsdown, in the county of Limerick, was celebrated at St. Peter's Church, Bournemouth, on Saturday last.

"THE ENGAGED RING."

"With this ring I thee wed," is a sweet sentence to the maiden's ear, when at length she is standing at the altar beside the man of her choice. An earlier giving and putting on of what is called "the engaged ring" is sometimes allowed to precede the acceptance of the ring matrimonial; and this pleasing custom, we suppose, has more significance in those countries where a formal solemnity of "Verlobung," or Betrothal, is the recognised preliminary step to ordinary marriage. The foreign artist, whose picture, from a photograph published by the Berlin Photographic Company, is copied in our front page Engraving, has a very fair notion of a pretty girl's face, in her prettiest humour, when she is playing with the tiny golden circlet on a finger of her left hand, while she waits, at the corner of her father's vineyard wall, the coming of her affianced lover. The "Promessi Sposi" claim our cordial sympathy. We can but wish and hope that the course of their love may run tolerably smooth, and that neither the engaged ring nor the wedding ring may ever become a token of a sorrowful mistake in this most important contract of two human hearts and lives.

Mr. Gladstone gave a lecture yesterday week, in the Hawarden National School-room, in aid of the fund being raised for the benefit of the refugees in Dalmatia and Montenegro, taking for his text an article by Mr. Forbes in the last number of the Nineteenth Century upon "Russians, Turks, and Bulgarians at the Theatre of War." He described the conduct of the Turkish Government as unparalleled for wickedness in the whole history of the world, and characterised the Government itself as a combination of fraud and falsehood and robbery; and said that systematic lying and systematic slander were the daily instruments by which it carried on its work. Whilst admitting Mr. Forbes's description of the prosperity of the Bulgarians, he pointed out that their lives and property were at the absolute will of the Government, whose cruelty was only limited by regard for the raising of the taxes and the necessary cultivation of the land. As long as the British Cabinet observed its conditional neutrality the Liberal party would observe a conditional quietude; but if the Government desisted from its conditional neutrality, they would desist from their conditional quietude. They would fight like Englishmen and leave the nation to decide. He regretted the errors which placed Russia in a position of such power; but he had confidence in the honour of the Emperor, and in the humanity of the Russian people. If Russia misused her position we should be strong enough to restrain her; but, if she acted up to her pledges, she would do a service which mankind would always remember.

THE CHURCH.

Holy Trinity Church, Halifax, which has undergone much internal improvement of late years, has been reopened.

The Dean of Llandaff has been presented by his former parishioners at Bridgend with a handsome silver tea service.

Mrs. Walter Hemming has given £3000 towards the erection of a new church at Wribbenhall; and Mr. A. Baldwin has promised to erect a new church at Wilden at his sole cost.

The new Church of St. Cuthbert, Everton, was consecrated last week by the Bishop of Chester. The total expenditure in connection with the building will be about £9000, the greater part of which has been subscribed.

Bach's cantata, "My Spirit was in heaviness," will be sung, with orchestral accompaniment, at St. Anne's Church, Soho, under the direction of Mr. Barnby, every Friday evening during Advent, beginning Dec. 7.

There will be special evening services in the Temple Church on the three Wednesdays in Advent, Dec. 5, 12, 19, at eight o'clock, with sermons by Dr. Vaughan, Master of the Temple. The subject of the sermons will be St. John the Baptist.

There have just been added to the many beautiful specimens of Munich glass which the fine church of Stoke-on-Trent already possessed two more works from the same city of art, consisting of a three-light and a two-light window. These, as well as the other windows are from Mayer and Co.

The Bishop of Peterborough on Tuesday addressed a large combined meeting of the Church Missionary Society and the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel at Northampton; and, in speaking of the work of the societies, he remarked that they could not help seeing how missions had influenced the history of nations.

The Bishop of Carlisle spoke on Tuesday evening at a gathering in Leeds in connection with the Church Institute and Sunday School Association. He said they must not be ashamed of the Reformation. It was a great crisis in the history of the Church, but she remained the same Church after it as she was before it, but purified, restored, and reformed.

Archdeacon Allen was presented on Tuesday, at Shrewsbury, with an illuminated address and nearly £200, in recognition of the way in which he has performed the duties of his office for thirty years. In compliance with Archdeacon Allen's wish, the sum subscribed will be expended in the rebuilding of a portion of Whixall church, in his parish.

The final sitting of the Manchester Diocesan Conference was held on the 22nd ult., the Bishop presiding. Papers were read on the Relations between Church and State, by the Dean and the Hon. Wilbraham Egerton, M.P.; on Diocesan Finance, by Mr. H. B. Jackson; and on the Church Missionary Work, by Mr. R. Fletcher, jun., and the Rev. H. L. Heywood, each subject being discussed at considerable length.

The restoration of that magnificent and venerable relic of mediæval England, Tewkesbury Abbey, has made such rapid progress that on Sunday, the 18th ult., the restored choir was opened for Divine service, it being the intention to use it for that purpose, with temporary seats and fittings for the congregation, while the nave is in the hands of the workmen. The work of restoration in the choir is complete, with the exception of the mosaic floor and the stalls. It has been carried on, under the superintendence of Sir Gilbert Scott, by Mr. Thomas Collins, of Tewkesbury, the contractor.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated March 31, 1875) of Mr. Henry Henderson, late of No. 5, Stanhope-street, Hyde Park-gardens, who died on Oct. 25 last, was proved on the 16th ult. by John Arundel and Henry William Henderson and John Thomas Henderson, the sons, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £180,000. The testator leaves to his wife, Mrs. Jane Henderson, all his furniture and effects, £100, and an annuity of £500; to his executors, £100 each; and the residue of his property among all his children.

The will and codicil (dated Jan. 25, 1871, and April 1, 1873) of Mrs. Mary Coles, late of No. 30, Portman-square, who died on the 2nd ult., were proved on the 12th ult. by John James and Charles Ainslie Barry, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. The testatrix bequeaths annuities to her sisters, legacies to her executors, and makes liberal provision for her servants; the residue of her property she gives to the children of her brother, the Rev. Roger Bird—viz., Reginald Bird, Edith Barry, Lucy Bird, and Mary Grundy.

The will and codicil (dated Sept. 9, 1874, and Feb. 26, 1875) of Mr. David Henry Walsh, late of Bristol, and of Stoke Bishop, Westbury-upon-Trym, who died on Oct. 7 last, were proved on the 2nd inst. by James Derham, the acting executor, the personal estate being sworn under £70,000. The testator gives to his wife, Mrs. Sarah Walsh, pecuniary legacies amounting to £1050, and his residence Ivywell, and the income of £10,000 for life; to the London Missionary Society and the Bristol City Mission, £100 each; and legacies to his executors. The residue of his property he leaves upon trust for all his children. The share which his deceased son would have taken is to be set aside, and thereout £300 per annum is to be paid to his said son's widow, Mrs. Clara Walsh, the remainder of such share to go to their daughter Mabel.

The will and two codicils (dated Sept. 1, 1869, June 15, 1870, and March 27, 1875), of Mr. William Sharp, late of Croydon, who died on the Oct. 4 last, were proved on the 3rd ult. by Mrs. Eleanor Sharp, the widow, William Richard Rickett, and William Drummond, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £40,000. The testator leaves to his wife £300, and his furniture, plate, and household effects; he also leaves her his house in the Wellesley-road, and £700 per annum for life; to each of his executors £100; to his daughters, Sarah, Eliza, and Ann, annuities of £400, subject to increase on the death of other annuitants; to his daughter-in-law, Mrs. Maria Louisa Perkins Sharp, an annuity of £400, to be increased to £700 on the death of his widow. The residue of his estate is to accumulate for twenty-one years, and is to be held upon trust for the children of his four children, William, Sarah, Ann, and Eliza.

The will and two codicils (dated Jan. 4, 1872, June 23, 1874, and Jan. 28, 1876) of Sir James Douglas, K.C.B., late of Victoria, British Columbia, who died on Aug. 2 last, were proved in London on the 13th ult. by Alexander Grant Dallas, the acting executor, the personal estate in England being sworn under £35,000. The testator bequeaths to the Christ Church Sustentation Fund 500 dols.; to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, 1000 dols.; and makes ample provision for his wife, Lady Amelia Douglas. There are various pecuniary bequests and specific devises of his freehold lands in favour of the children of his daughter Cecilia, his daughters Agnes, Alice Jane, and Martha, and his son, James William; and the rest of his property he gives to his said son.

THE WAR.

Reports of the opening of negotiations for the surrender of Plevna were rife on Wednesday and Thursday last. It had previously been rumoured that Osman Pasha had broken through the Russian lines of investment, but scarcely any credit was given to this report. It is now stated, in explanation of it, that he made a sortie in force on Friday week, but was driven back to Plevna, after several hours' fighting. Turkish accounts, however, speak of his capturing three redoubts; which accounts, indeed, seem not to be well founded. The Roumanians on Sunday last made an attack on Widdin, and were repulsed; the Russians, on the same day, failed in an attempt to cross the Danube at Rustchuk. Bombardments have again, been exchanged between the Turkish garrison there and the batteries at Giurgevo, on the opposite side of the river. The army of Suleiman Pasha on Monday had an affair of outposts with that of the Czarewitch on the Lom, but with no important results.

To the south-west of Plevna, in anticipation of Mahomet Ali Pasha's expected advance to relieve Osman Pasha, the Russians have captured Etropol, a town not far from Orkhanieh, commanding the Kaba Konnik Pass over the Balkans. This was effected, yesterday week, by a force under Duke Alexander of Oldenburg, while another force, led by General Rauch, engaged the Turkish Commander near Orkhanieh. The immediate consequence is to cut off the communications of Mahomet Ali Pasha with the city of Sophia, and with Adrianople and all the provinces south of the Balkans.

There is every probability that Serbia will in a few days again join in the war against Turkey; a detachment of Serbian troops, the other day, actually crossed the frontier, but only, they say, to protect Bulgarian fugitives from ill-treatment by the Bashî-Bazouks. It is not expected that Austria will interfere.

The position of the Russians before Erzeroum appears to be rendered doubtful by the inclemency of the weather. The Daily Telegraph publishes a statement, not yet authenticated, that their capture of Kars was effected by treachery, a Turkish officer having been bribed to give information of the state of the garrison and the forts most exposed to be taken by assault.

SKETCHES OF THE WAR.

Our Special Artist, Mr. Irving Montagu, now with the Russian army in Bulgaria, supplies for this week's Number of our Journal a few characteristic sketches of the manner in which their encampment before Plevna, and the winter quarters both there and on the Danube, have been arranged, with the Imperial staff-quarters at Sistova, and the incessant passage of army stores, continued night and day, over the bridge of boats across the great river at that place. We give his notes upon the subjects of these sketches. The first is an example of the winter quarters of the Russians before Plevna, sketched on a frosty morning, of which he writes as follows:—

"In the first place, a hole, say 20 ft. or 30 ft. long and 5 ft. deep, is dug in the earth, and over this a sort of gable roof is constructed, of any old boards or boughs conveniently at hand; and over this again is laid mud, of which material at least there is never any lack. This is piled up until the only possibility of rain or wind finding their way inside is through the open entrance. Against this entrance brambles are placed, or old tarpaulings are hung, as night closes in. The Russians at least understand most thoroughly the art of winter campaigning."

The next sketch represents a party of Turkish prisoners making roads for the Russian army with Turkish gravestones, near Sistova. "Let it at once be said that this is not a compulsory service. Turkish prisoners have the option of going to Russia or being told off for this work; and only those who have an objection to 'a journey due north,' and have no great scruples about the graves of their ancestors, remain to do the very necessary work of making roads to the front. The graveyards in this country are situated generally on the hill-side outside a town or village. They sometimes cover an immense space of ground, and the quantity of material which can be got together for the purposes for which it is required will be something enormous. The flat stones are generally covered with verses from the Koran; but in an ordinary way there are no inscriptions whatever. The surmounting fez or turban, as the case may be, marks, I understand, the social distinctions of the defunct. These ornaments are in many cases elaborately painted in red, blue, yellow, and specially green, which is the colour of the Prophet, and they are also sometimes made doubly brilliant by the addition of gold-leaf. Some of the smaller and comparatively light stones the men are able to carry on their shoulders for the short distance they have to go before they are handed over to the hammer. But, in an ordinary way, they are too heavy for this, and appear to be broken up into little heaps where they are unearthed."

"Bury your dead" is the proclamation made in a village near the Gravitza redoubt. "With an audience of sick and wounded soldiers," says our Artist, "many looking as if their own internment, if any, were a matter of no far distant date, there was, at times, something so grim and gaunt about this little episode that I send you a sketch of it. The crier is paid by the villagers, a general collection being, I understand, made for the purpose, at the rate of about fourpence a day. He takes upon himself, for this consideration, the entire responsibility of disposing of, or seeing disposed of, any carcasses which may happen to lie in or about the neighbourhood of the village in which he lives. This is not, however, considered as an equivalent altogether for the high remuneration he receives. So, by an old Bulgarian law, he has also to provide any strangers who may enter the village after sunset with supper and a bed. I have had his charge translated to me; and it runs as follows:—'Do ye hear! do ye hear! do ye hear! Bury your dead! oh, bury your dead! Good people, all listen; then bury your dead!' One Georgovitch, on the day previous to my arrival, had neglected this very necessary sanitary measure; but whether it applied to his wife, his grandmother, or his cow, I could not ascertain. The crier, however, who knew how 'to point a moral and adorn a tale,' took advantage, on arriving at the delinquent's house-top—for he always mounts on the house-tops—of referring to the matter. 'Do ye hear! do ye hear! oh! wicked Georgovitch! Pay no more fines, but bury your dead!' And the burial of the dead is a great matter just now round about Plevna."

Some Russian officers lost in a fog near the Turkish lines about Plevna discovered their perilous vicinity by listening to the muezzin's call to prayer, at early morning, which is customary in every Mohammedan community. Our Artist writes:—"As I happened to be one of the party, I took advantage of the occasion to make a sketch of the little group of anxious listeners. Anxious, I assure you, we all were, as we had been three hours out, long enough to have gone several times into the Turkish lines and back again, had the return journey been possible. We had not the remotest idea which way to turn, but presently we heard voices, and the strains of the muezzin's chant, as we supposed, floated across the foggy air. We had lost the high road, indeed, all trace of any road, for some time, and when some horsemen became indistinctly visible through the gloom, every revolver was ready in the event of their turning out to be Circassians. But, happily for us, they were Cossacks, in whose sense of locality the Russians put their faith. Indeed, they seem instinctively to know their way about, and in this case served to get us out of what might have been a rather awkward predicament."

The Sistova Bridge across the Danube at night is shown in another sketch, of which the Artist says:—"As every hour is now of importance in getting winter supplies to the other side of the Danube, work goes on night and day. An almost unbroken train of ammunition-waggons, commissariat stores, ambulance carts, and horse and foot soldiers, are to be seen crossing any time in the twenty-four hours. The sketch I send was taken on the island, there being three similar bridges across the entire span of the Danube; and these, when brilliantly illuminated at night for the purpose of this warlike traffic, have a most picturesque appearance."

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

A new Ministry has at length been constituted, and is to be characterised as a "Ministère d'Affaires," not one of the men composing it being either a Senator or a Deputy; nor is it marked by any decided political colour.

The Cabinet is formed as follows:—President of the Council and Minister of War, General Rochefort; Minister for Foreign Affairs, Marquis de Banneville; Minister of the Interior, M. Welche; Minister of Justice, M. Lepelletier; Minister of Finance, M. Dutilleul; Minister of Commerce, M. Ozenne; Minister of Public Works, M. Graeff; Minister of Instruction, M. Faye; Minister of Marine, Admiral Roussin.

Marshal MacMahon's new Ministers met the Chambers on Saturday afternoon, and an identical declaration of their policy was read in each House. The Ministers announced their determination to maintain order and peace, and to respect and cause to be respected the Republican institutions of the country. These institutions they promised to hand over intact to a Parliamentary Cabinet which the Marshal would call to office as soon as he should judge the present dissensions to be sufficiently allayed. In the Senate the Ministerial declaration, read by General de Rochebrouët, was received in silence by the Left, and was faintly cheered by the Right. No steps were taken upon it, and the Senators at once proceeded to the election of a life senator, when M. Grandperret (Bonapartist), who at the first ballot ten days ago failed to obtain an absolute majority, was elected by 145 votes against 135 given for M. Victor Lefranc. In the Chamber of Deputies, directly the Ministerial statement had been read, M. de Marcère put a question to the Government asking for information respecting its policy; and the question, by a vote of the House, was at once debated. M. Welche, the Minister of the Interior, replied to M. de Marcère; and after a speech from M. Floquet, an order of the day was brought forward by M. Jules Ferry declaring that the House could not enter into relations with the new Ministry, as its composition and origin constituted a denial of the rights of the nation and the Parliament. M. Baragnon thereupon moved the order of the day pure and simple. This was rejected by 322 to 207 votes, and M. Ferry's was adopted by 323 against 208 votes.

The new Ministers attended in both Houses again on Monday. In the Upper House the Ministry supported a motion for an inquiry into the present commercial depression. In the Lower House the Minister of the Interior presented a bill to separate the four direct taxes from the rest of the Budget. He demanded that this should be at once sent before the Budget Committee, but his request met with no attention, and was ignored. M. Bardoux, a member of the Left Centre, brought in two bills to restrict the power of the Government in proclaiming a state of siege and in dealing with the press. Subsequently the Chamber proceeded to consider the disputed elections, and resolved to postpone the case of M. de Fourtou, ex-Minister of the Interior, until after the Election Commission has reported. By this decision M. de Fourtou's right of voting is suspended.

The Marshal, according to the Moniteur, regards the votes of the Chamber as a declaration of war. The new Ministry and its manifesto were intended, he says, as an armistice; that having been rejected, he has no alternative but resistance; every concession would now be a capitulation. This is said to have been the purport of his remarks at a grand military dinner which was given at the Elysée on Saturday night. The new Ministry, in the meantime, does not please the Bonapartists. M. de Cassagnac styles it "a mustard plaster on a wooden leg."

Neither the Senate nor the Chamber met on Wednesday. In the morning a Cabinet Council was held at the Elysée, after which the Minister of the Interior ordered all the Prefects who were at Paris to return at once to their posts. The Budget Committee met, and collated the Léon Say and Caillaux Budget schemes, in most cases adopting the former. It is understood that they did not enter on the question of passing the four direct taxes.

An address signed by eighty of the leading tradesmen of Paris has been presented to Marshal MacMahon, begging him to put an end to the existing conflict "by giving complete and sincere satisfaction to the wish of the country, which was clearly and loudly expressed at the last election."

A monster gun, weighing 45,000 pounds, was transported on Wednesday from Vincennes to Versailles. Twenty horses drew the car, which was escorted by fifty men under two Captains and a Lieutenant.

Forty-two prefects have sent in their resignations.

The Fine-Arts Department in the city of Paris has under consideration a plan for adorning the promenades and open spaces, down to the smallest squares, in a way similar to what has been done in parts of the Park Monceau. Galignani states that the idea is to place, at certain distances, busts of all the historians who have left studies of the manners and customs of the capital in the great avenues, such as the Champs-Élysées, the Avenue du Bois de Boulogne, &c. In the squares will be erected statues of notable personages, provosts of the guilds, judges, soldiers, &c., of all periods who have in any way illustrated Paris. Finally, in the large spaces, such as the Bois de Boulogne, the Buttes-Chaumont, and Montsouris, groups will reproduce historical events which have occurred in the city from the most distant times.

SPAIN.

The King on Sunday reviewed 14,000 infantry, 2000 cavalry, and 48 guns in the presence of the Moorish Envoys and an immense crowd.

In honour of the King's birthday, there was a reception at the palace at Madrid on Wednesday, reported to have been the grandest affair that has been seen in the Spanish capital since the Restoration. There was a banquet in the evening in connection with the same event.

The Foral deputies of the Basque provinces, having declined to carry out the laws of the Imperial taxation, have been dissolved. Marshal Quesada has appointed delegates to enforce the collection of the taxes.

The only loans actually completed amount to two millions sterling, which are guaranteed by bonds and bear 9 per cent interest, in order to meet the next coupon and current expenses. Other plans are under consideration for the floating debt and the extension of the stamp monopoly if the Syndicate consents to give four millions sterling.

ITALY.

The inauguration of a monument to the patriots killed at Mentana in 1867 was celebrated on Sunday by a great multitude from Rome and all parts of Italy. Telegrams from the correspondents of the Daily News, Standard, Vossische Zeitung, and other newspapers were refused transmission, as containing the reports of disloyal speeches. Republican flags were seized. In Tuesday's sitting of the Chamber of Deputies, Signor Nicotera, Minister of the Interior, admitted that he had prohibited the dispatch of these telegrams. He stated that words likely to promote foreign complications were used.

The Chamber of Deputies discussed on Wednesday the first volume of the Penal Code, and adopted by a large majority the clause abolishing capital punishment. The announcement of the vote was greeted with loud cheers.

An international exhibition, under the patronage of Prince Humbert, is to be held at Milan in 1879.

HOLLAND.

The Second Chamber on the 22nd ult. discussed the Dutch Indian Budget, and passed by 62 against 2 votes the estimates of the expenditure, amounting to 112,000,000 fl. No question of general politics was touched upon. The clauses relating to the increase of the salaries of the officials attached to the High Court and to the remuneration of certain assistant residents were withdrawn. The debate was resumed on the 23rd, when the Second Chamber voted unanimously the remaining sections. The Minister for the Colonies declared, in the course of the debate, that he did not intend increasing the sales of Java coffee in view of the present state of the finances.

GERMANY.

The Emperor William gave a solemn audience on Monday to the members of the Chinese Legation. Herr von Bülow, Minister of State, was present.

Lord Odo Russell, our Ambassador at Berlin, who has been in England on a visit, returned late last week to his post.

The German Government has declined the proposal of the Austro-Hungarian Government to conclude a commercial treaty on the basis of the most-favoured-nation clause, on the ground that such an arrangement is incompatible with the economical interests of Germany.

The Bavarian Minister of Finance, Herr Berr, has resigned. The portfolio has been offered to Herr von Landgraf, but declined in consequence of that gentleman's serious illness.

The death is announced of Professor Lucas, director of the Academy of Architecture, at Berlin.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

An Imperial decree was promulgated on Tuesday, according to which the delegations are to meet on Dec. 5 next at Vienna.

On Tuesday the Lower House of the Austrian Reichstag continued the debate upon the paragraphs of the Bank Bill. The motion of the minority of the committee, proposed by Dr. Herbst, for the appointment of a vice-governor, was adopted by 144 against 119 votes, the Ministers voting for the motion.

Several Austrian papers state that authorisation has been given to Sir A. Buchanan, the British Ambassador, to conclude with Austro-Hungary a treaty of commerce on the basis of the most-favoured-nation clause.

ROMANIA.

The Chambers were opened on Tuesday by M. Bratiano, the Prime Minister, in the name of Prince Charles. He said that the proclamation of Roumanian independence made in the last Session had been energetically confirmed by Roumanian soldiers on the battle-field. "We shall have," continued the Prince, "to add to our country's annals the names of Rahova and Grivitza, and we are firmly convinced that, once Plevna has been taken, all Europe will recognise the independence of Roumania, and will understand that our country is equal to the fulfilment of the mission reserved for her on the Lower Danube. All Roumanians will have the same wish, the same will to secure the prosperity, independence, and greatness of the country." The speech was greatly cheered.

AMERICA.

After twenty-eight hours' continuous session, the United States Senate on Tuesday evening passed a resolution discharging the Election Committee from the duty of considering the credentials of Mr. Butler, thus bringing the case of that gentleman before the Senate itself, which has yet to act in the matter. Messrs. Conover and Patterson, the Republican Senators for Florida and South Carolina respectively, voted with the Democrats.

The House of Representatives has passed the Anti-Resumption Act by 133 against 120 votes. The bill repeals the clause of the Resumption Act which provided for the gradual withdrawal of greenbacks, and fixed Jan. 1, 1879, as the date for the final resumption of specie payments.

According to the American, journals litigation has begun in the New York courts over the colossal fortune of the late Commodore Vanderbilt, amounting to £20,000,000. The will is contested by one of his sons, in consequence of himself and his sisters being cut off with only a million sterling!

The Senate, without disposing of the South Carolina case, has taken up Mr. Kellogg's claim to the Louisiana senatorship on Wednesday. Mr. Conover voted with the Republicans, thus causing a tie. The debate continued.

A resolution has been introduced in the House of Representatives proposing a vote of thanks to Mr. H. M. Stanley, the African explorer.

In the South Carolina corruption cases, Francis Cardozo, State Treasurer, has been sentenced to two years' imprisonment and 4000 dols. fine; Robert Smalls, member of Congress, for bribery, is sentenced to three years'; L. Cass Carpenter, member of Congress, to two years'.

Terrific storms have prevailed along the Atlantic coasts, causing floods in Virginia and the Carolinas, washing away bridges and obstructing railways. A train near Charlotte, North Carolina, fell through a bridge, which had been undermined by a flood on the night of the 22nd ult., and several lives were lost. The United States steamer Huron was wrecked on the coast of North Carolina during a gale on Saturday morning. Eleven officers and eighty-nine men were drowned.

The Halifax (Nova Scotia) Fishery Commission has awarded to Great Britain 5,500,000 dols. as compensation from the United States in the matter. Two Commissioners, M. Delfosse and Sir Alexander Galt, concur in the award; but the United States' representative, Mr. Kellogg, dissents, because it does not place a sufficiently high value on the concessions made by the United States. No decision, however, on the Headland question has been come to, that remaining for further negotiation.

CANADA.

About 1000 persons, mostly young men, assembled last week at Montreal to inaugurate a "Canadian National Society." All the speakers strongly favoured the continuance of connection with Great Britain.

The official Canadian Gazette promulgates a full amnesty accorded by Lord Dufferin, the Governor-General, to the persons implicated in the north-west troubles in 1869.

Mr. Cauchon, the newly appointed Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba, arrived at Winnipeg on Nov. 22, and assumed office without experiencing trouble or resistance of any kind.

THE CAPE COLONIES.

Cape Town despatches of the 6th ult. state that the Galekas have been completely crushed, and are breaking up into small parties, pursued by the colonial force and resisted by the Chief Momi. The Cape Government has announced that the disturbance may be considered at an end.

INDIA.

A telegram from Calcutta announces that the expedition under General Keyes has successfully attacked the Jowakis and destroyed several of their villages and fortifications, as well as their crops. An attack upon their principal stronghold was being prepared. The object of the Indian Government, it is stated, is simply to open up the country, not to occupy it.

The Government have (says a Calcutta telegram to the Times) at last released Ameer Khan, the Wahabee convict. The prisoner is a very old man, suffering from failing health. This act of leniency is generally approved.

With regard to the famine, the same correspondent says that the reports from Madras are still favourable. In Bombay the general condition of the people continued to improve, and prices were falling considerably.

AUSTRALIA.

A Reuter's telegram from Melbourne, dated the 12th ult., says that Chester won the Melbourne Cup. Chester (three-year-old, 6 st. 12 lb.) was owned and trained by Mr. E. De Mestre, of Sydney.

A telegram from Sydney of the same day informs us that the general elections of New South Wales are concluded, and that the Parliament would meet on the 20th ult.

We have news from Sydney, by way of San Francisco, to Oct. 10. The Legislative Assembly had passed the Appropriation Act and Loan Bill, authorising an expenditure of £1,200,000 for public works. Parliament was to be dissolved on Oct. 12, and the new elections to be held between Oct. 24 and Nov. 12. Mr. Garrett, the Secretary for Lands, had resigned in consequence of a difference of opinion between himself and the Premier on the Land question, his successor had not yet been appointed. The revenue of New South Wales for the September quarter amounted to £1,296,575, showing an increase of £81,310 over the corresponding quarter of last year.

The Financial Separation Bill has been withdrawn in the Queensland Assembly. The revenue of the colony for the September quarter was £470,000, showing an increase of £62,000 over the corresponding quarter of last year.

Sir W. Robinson, late Governor of Western Australia, arrived at Singapore on Oct. 29, and assumed his new post as Governor of the Straits Settlements.

The King of Italy has forwarded, through the Italian Ambassador, to Commander L. Verney Cameron a golden medal in commemoration of his travels across Africa.

The Khedive of Egypt, by special decree, has nominated Mr. E. A. R. Acton, formerly of the Board of Trade, and late member of the Supreme Council of the Egyptian Treasury, counsellor to the Ministry of Agriculture and Commerce.

The Copenhagen correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette writes that it is intended to establish a new University in the Norwegian town of Bergen. Eighty thousand crowns have already been subscribed towards this object. The other Scandinavian Universities are at Upsala and Lund, in Sweden, Christiania, in Norway, and at Copenhagen.

Another step towards the civilisation of Africa has, says the Standard, been made by this country, the King of Lualla, a district lying to the south-east of St. Paul de Loanda, having been induced to enter into an engagement to put a stop to all human sacrifices amongst his people.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Though, as we have previously remarked, there has been little of interest in the racing way since the termination of the Houghton Meeting, still the game has been played out to the very end. Indeed, those who were kept at Warwick to witness the decision of nine races last Saturday afternoon, and then were delayed some two hours on the homeward journey by a truck running off the rails, were fain to admit that it is very possible to have too much of a good thing. Turning first to Manchester, which, on the whole, proved far more attractive than Warwick, we find that Hophloom (7 st. 9 lb.) followed up his recent success by winning the November Handicap in a common canter; so, though he disappointed the Duke of Montrose as a hurdle-racer, he has not proved a dear horse at the £2000 that was paid for him. Old Industrious was to the fore in a hurdle-race at Warwick; and Strike (10 st. 4 lb.) again appeared in winning colours, as he secured the Great Autumn Welter Cup from five opponents. Irenta, who is evidently a very useful filly, credited Lord Bradford with two races, in the second of which she beat that gay deceiver Jupiter, who must have cost his backers more money than they would like to think of, as, though he invariably starts a strong favourite, he can never be persuaded to do more than run second. The heavy state of the ground exactly suited Scamp (7 st. 2 lb.), though Norwich (7 st.) ran him to half a length in the Great Midland Counties Handicap, and the latter fully confirmed his Newmarket form with Albert Edward (7 st. 6 lb.), who was only a bad third. F. Archer appropriately won the last race of the season, and this year his persistent followers have had a grand time of it. We shall give a few statistics of winning jockeys on a future occasion.

"Le Roi est mort! Vive le Roi!" The flat-racing season ended on Saturday; and on Tuesday steeplechasing commenced in earnest at Croydon. Of course, the great event of the first day was the Grand National Hurdle-Race, for which eleven ran, among them being Woodcock (12 st. 7 lb.), who won this event last year. He was not, however, at all fancied on the present occasion, and had nothing to do with the finish, which lay between Citizen (10 st. 12 lb.) and Royal Oak II. (10 st. 5 lb.), a most exciting struggle, ending in the victory of the former by a head. The Great Metropolitan Steeplechase on Wednesday was a partial failure, as neither Citizen nor Antidote, who were greatly fancied, put in an appearance. Pride of Kildare (11 st. 4 lb.), the victress of last season, had, therefore, only four to beat, and, as she had escaped with a lighter weight than could have been anticipated, none of the quartet could fairly extend her, and she cantered quietly home in front of Chimney Sweep (10 st. 12 lb.). Sandown Park, on Tuesday and Wednesday, is the next fixture of any importance, and there is every prospect of a most successful meeting.

The list of nominations for the Waterloo Cup has been published. Several new names are in the list, and it seems likely that the prestige of the greatest coursing meeting of the year will be fully sustained.

On Saturday evening last the ninth annual assault-of-arms of the London Athletic Club took place at St. James's Hall. Unfortunately the heavy rain, which fell in torrents all the evening, kept away scores, even of those who had secured seats; still, there was a large and enthusiastic assembly. Nearly everything on the programme received great applause; but, undoubtedly, the success of the evening was the boxing of the two professionals, Tom Allen and Ned Donnelly, in which the latter, though considerably the smaller man, displayed such wonderful quickness and cleverness that he fairly outfought his opponent at all points.

THE ADVANCE ON ERZEROU.

The Russian advance westward in Asia, since the great defeat of Moukhtar Pasha on the 15th ult. at Yagni Tepe and the Aladja Dag, has brought their army, independently of the capture of Kars, quite close to the important city of Erzeroum, the Armenian provincial capital. From the frontier town of Bayazid, which lies south-east of Kars on the road between Georgia and Armenia, there were several points at which the march towards Erzeroum might have been opposed, notably at Kuprikoi and Hassan Kaleh; but the Turkish forces seem to have exhausted their power of resistance in earlier conflicts. We give some views of these "stepping-stones to Erzeroum," from the Sketches made there by one of our Special Artists lately with the Turkish army in Asia. It will be remembered that Bayazid was taken and retaken at a previous period of the campaign. The position of Kuprikoi was occupied on the 28th ult. by General Heimann, and that of Hassan Kaleh on the next day; Moukhtar Pasha still retiring before his assailant. The Turkish Commander-in-Chief then made a stand in the fortified mountain pass of Deve Boyoun, six miles east of Erzeroum. The Daily News correspondent says:—

"The pass of Deve Boyoun is a narrow valley, leading due east from Erzeroum to the wide plain of Hassan Kaleh, the latter an old-fashioned Turkish town, near which are the fountains of the Araxes. The pass is skirted by round hills, and near its eastern extremity is crossed by a ridge, which constitutes the second line of defence. Then comes a deep, precipitous ravine, and immediately beyond another ridge. On this is situated the head-quarters of the army. It is the link between the hills which form the first and principal lines. Opposite its centre, slightly to the left, is a long hill, crowned by a steeply-bounded plateau, narrow, like the hill itself. It is strongly intrenched, and forms the centre of the defence. To its right are two conical hills, somewhat oblique to the front, on which are two redoubts, armed with guns of position, and occupied by several battalions. To the left of the long hill is a rounded mamelon, projecting spur-like from the lofty mountains which fringe the plain. From this mamelon long trenches extend further east, intended to secure our left flank. In front of all run two riviulets, which, uniting, form one of the tributaries of the Araxes. In case of need, a large portion of the front could be inundated by blocking the course of these streams. From every point of view the line is exceedingly strong, and, unless I am much mistaken, the Russians will not try to carry it by direct attack. But it has its weak points; to my mind, fatal ones. To the north is the valley of Olti, parallel to the pass; to the south, another similar valley coming from the direction of Bayazid, and both debouching into the plain before Erzeroum. These valleys are separated from the plain of Hassan Kaleh by lofty mountains, at this season heavily covered with snow. By either of the valleys the enemy can turn the formidable barrier in their path; and our latest intelligence informs us that they are doing so."

Erzeroum lies on a slightly sloping plain at the foot of a range of rugged mountains, which rise six thousand feet behind it. Upon either side of the city a spur of hills runs from the mountain buttress behind far out into the plain. These side ranges are some six miles apart. Erzeroum cannot be attacked in the rear, but must be assaulted either from the plain in front or over one or other of the flanking hills. The northern of these hills commands the roads from Ardahan, Kars, and Bayazid; the southern hill those from Trebizond and Constantinople. Thus the Russian lines of operation are commanded by the northern hill, those of the Turkish communication by the southern hill. Upon both of these hills are strong intrenchments, carefully constructed, those upon the northern hill being a good deal stronger than those upon the south.

The defences of Erzeroum consist of detached works grouped together at three points, and of a citadel. The most important group of advanced works is that situated on the heights of the Top Dag. These are constructed in two lines. The first comprises the three lunettes of Azizieh, of which two have their gorges defended by casemates, while the third is open. The second line lies about 600 yards in front of the wall of the town, and consists of two works, of which one is inclosed and the other open. The second group of works, of much inferior value to the first, is placed on the heights of the Keremet Dag. The third group consists of the fort of Akhali and its adjuncts, and lies on the south of the town. None of these works are very strong, but that of Azizieh, which affords casemated shelter for thirty guns, is the strongest. The wall around the town is strengthened by eleven bastions, which are connected by means of trenches with the outworks. The citadel in the centre of the town is guarded solely by an old stone wall, flanked by eleven antiquated towers. It is used as an arsenal, but could not be expected to offer any serious resistance to an assailing force which had already carried the outworks and the ramparts of the place. To defend Erzeroum properly a garrison of at least 20,000 men would be required, and these should be supported by 150 guns. Moukhtar Pasha has, probably, the proper proportion of soldiers within the place; but before the war there were only 116 guns in the works, of which sixty were of obsolete patterns. Such lines could not long resist bombardment and assault; but Moukhtar Pasha has now had some time at his disposal, and may have supplemented the original defences with earthworks as formidable as those that Ghazi Osman threw up so unexpectedly round Plevna. But when the troops of Melikoff from Kars come up, if they can invest the place, Moukhtar Pasha will suffer under a disadvantage which has never oppressed his comrade in Bulgaria. Erzeroum contains 60,000 inhabitants, and in case of a siege or blockade these must be fed as well as the garrison. There will thus be a severe daily drain on the magazines, which must provide for these numerous useless mouths as well as for the fighting troops engaged in the defence of the ramparts. Before the arrival of Moukhtar Pasha these magazines were certainly not well filled, and it must be doubtful whether that General will have time to replenish them before the Russians completely invest the place. In these circumstances, unless bad weather should very seriously impede the march or the supplies of Melikoff's columns, it would seem very doubtful if Erzeroum can hold out.

THE TOWN AND CITADEL OF KARS.

The capture of Kars by the Russians on the night of Saturday, the 17th inst., was described in our last publication. A small map of the surrounding country, with the Turkish forts and lines of circumvallation, was also given in our Supplement of last week. It should again be referred to in reading the account of these fortifications here borrowed from a military correspondent of the Times, who was in Armenia during the late campaign:—

Now that Kars has fallen it is permissible to give you a more detailed description of the fortress, which was twice before taken, first in 1828. At that time the fortifications consisted of an irregular quadrilateral figure, the northern face of which followed the course of the crest of the perpendicular cliffs on the right bank of the Kars Tchai; the western extremity was flanked by the citadel, a massive masonry building on a knoll commanding everything within range, ascended by 300 steps; the eastern end by a lofty circular tower. The east and western faces ran due south for about 320 yards, and were connected by the southern rampart, about 500 yards in length. The south-eastern angle was protected by the Yuseuf Pasha Redoubt. The Karadagh Hill, which lies to the east, at a distance of nearly a mile, and which commands the fortifications as well as the town, had been occupied, and a redoubt containing fourteen guns thrown up.

In 1855 Kars once more found itself captured by the Russians. The works had been much strengthened, and, thanks to the untiring energy of Sir Fenwick Williams and his subordinates, Lake, Teesdale, Thompson, and Zohrab, extensive earthworks had been thrown up on the north of the Kars Tchai, as well as to the south of the town. The hills on the western face, which ran, generally speaking, in a northerly direction, were defended by a line of works called the Tahmasp Batteries. In the centre was a redoubt named, after its commandant, Teesdale Tabia. The southernmost battery was within range of the river, the northern one close on the village of Tchakniak. These were, again, defended by an inner line of works, styled the English Tabia. The eastern banks of the Kars Tchai were guarded by the Arab and Karadagh Forts; while to the south of the town an intrenchment connecting the Hafiz Tabia on the south-east angle with the Khanli Tabia on the south-west, and then running up to the Takmasch Lines, completed the chain.

The position taken up by the present work is very much what it was in 1855. The northern face stretches from the Veli Pasha in the north-west corner on the left bank of the Kars Tchai to the Arab, or Kara-Paltch, on the right bank in the north-east corner, thence the line runs nearly due south to the Karadagh Fort, across the plain, still in a southerly direction, to the Hafiz Pasha Tabia, where, branching off to the west, the line of intrenchments meets the Khanli Tabia at a distance of about 3000 yards; then, bearing north-west, we have the Suwarri Tabia, on the eastern bank of the river; and on the Tahmasp Hill, a mile north-west, we have the strongest fort in the place, which takes its name from the hill on which it stands. To the north of this we have the Tek Tabia, the Laz Tabia, and the Veli Pasha Tabia, while between it and the Arab Tabia are the Moukhliis, and Blum Forts. There are three advanced works, one 800 yards north of the Moukhliis, which, with its supports, enfilades the Kars Tchai ravine; one containing two mortars, one mile north-east of the Arab; and one 900 yards east of the Karadagh Fort. This work is constructed on a solid masonry plinth some 15 ft. in height, and commands the redan in its front, which is open at the gorge. The redan is armed with four 12 and one 15-centimetre guns; while the fort in its rear contains but one 15-centimetre and three 8-centimetre pieces. The Kara-Paltch redan is of irregular construction, thrown up to suit the ground; it contains three 15-centimetre, two 12-centimetre, two heavy mortars, and six field pieces. The profile is very slight; the gorge is open, but a long traverse runs down the centre of the work, against which the garrison have improvised hasty bomb-proof shelter huts. Otherwise the men on both these works live in tents. None of the parapets in the works were revetted when I went over them, except in the Hafiz, Khanli, and Suwarri Tabias, where the sods were laid on vertically, not horizontally. The Karadagh position was considered the key of the work. It commanded the citadel which contained all the ordnance stores, and the town which contained the commissariat magazines, and yet it presented every facility for a night attack. Neither of the forts on this face had ditches, they had no flanking defence for their parapets, nor did they offer to each other mutual support. I am aware that, according to our acceptance of the term, they ought not to be termed forts; but, as they have illegally assumed the title, we may let them retain it. All along the slopes of the Karadagh Hill are innumerable folds in the ground, affording cover to any number of men. Advancing up these, the assaulting columns might creep unnoticed (for such a thing as an outlying picket is unknown in the Turkish army) and overpower the garrison of the forts before help could arrive. We know that prior to the assault Hafiz Pasha Tabia had been abandoned and that the southern extremity of the town was undefended, save by the line of intrenchments of very slight profile which ran from fort to fort. The trous de loup were constructed on the most approved plan for conversion into rifle-pits by an intelligent enemy; in fact, on the southern and eastern faces Kars was quite open to assault.

We know that after the battle of the Aladja Dag Mukhtar Pasha was only able to leave 10,000 men in the place. These, though sufficient to carry on ordinary siege duties, were by no means enough to man the defences to repel an assault directed on more faces than one. It must be remembered that the banks of the Kars Tchai are excessively steep, and that it takes a regiment nearly two hours to march from the eastern to the western forts, so that reinforcements could not readily be thrown from one position into another; a feint on the Tahmasp Tabia would necessitate the garrison of that portion of the fortress remaining on the alert, while the weak detachments in the Karadagh position might be overpowered by superior numbers, without it being possible for the commandant of the Tahmasp to detach a man to help them.

To me the fall of Kars by assault in the actual circumstances is a matter of no surprise. If well provisioned, it would stand a siege for ever. The batteries cannot be enfiladed—they cannot be commanded. Situated, as nearly all are, on the crest of a mountain, the casualties in their garrisons are necessarily small, for the majority of shot either pass over the works or bury themselves in the hillside below them. With a powerful garrison, strong reserves, and ready means of communication between the eastern and western systems of fortification, the place would be impregnable; but with a garrison scarcely sufficient to man the intrenchments, from the Arab to the Hafiz Pasha Tabia, it is not to be wondered that Kars has fallen.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

The will of the late "Commodore" Vanderbilt, who began life about sixty-seven years ago as a bargee plying between Staten Island and New York, and with a capital of five dollars fifty cents, and who died the other day, aged eighty-two, leaving behind him the comfortable sum of 100,000,000 dols.—say twenty millions sterling—has given rise to some very lively litigation in the Surrogate's Court of New York. Two sons and eight daughters survived the Commodore. To his daughters he bequeathed legacies ranging between 300,000 dols. and 500,000 dols. each; to his second son, Cornelius, he left only a life income in the interest at five per cent on the sum of 200,000 dols., without any power of anticipation or alienation; and his general and specific legacies, amounting to about 5,000,000 dols., he devised the residue absolutely to his eldest son, Mr. William J. Vanderbilt. His relatives think that 95,000,000 dols. is a trifle too much for him; and one of his sisters, Mrs. La Bar, has come forward to contest the validity of the will, on the score of undue influence having been exercised over her papa. I have met the old gentleman in my time, at a New York Club. His manners were bluff and his language was strong; but he had an eye that went right through you, so that you felt inclined to look at the wall behind you in quest of the bullet mark. A wondrously accumulative man. For the truth of the story that he could neither read nor write I am unable to vouch. When a man begins to be worth a few millions there is nothing more common than for people to go about declaring him to be wholly illiterate, and that when he was married he signed the register with his "mark." I should very much have liked to have the Commodore's x to a certified cheque.

Much sympathy is felt, I read, in American Society for the virtually disinherited Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt. For my part, I never pass through Lincoln's-inn-fields without feeling intense sympathy, when I look at the severe stone front and shining plate-glass windows of the Soane Museum, for the unfortunate gentleman (a ripe scholar and accomplished writer) who was utterly and irrevocably disinherited, for a mere boyish escapade, by the stern architect, his father.

Miss Braddon (Mrs. Maxwell) is very angry, and justly so, with the Steam Roller, and is not overpleased with the verdict of a British jury who recently declined to award compensation for her carriage being smashed, her coachman disfigured for life, two valuable horses irreparably injured, and her children terrified half out of their wits by a puffing, snorting, gasping, rumbling, fuming Iron Monster which was taking its walks abroad in the Knightsbridge-road. Miss Braddon has written a letter to the Times eloquently dwelling on her wrongs. Ladies have a right to be angry whenever they please; still, it is obvious that the decision of a British jury must not, lightly, be impugned. Those decisions are sometimes, it must be granted, very wonderful. This week, before Lord Coleridge, a case was tried in which a gentleman of antiquarian tastes strove to recover damages for the destruction of some ancient documents of great value which he had left in a house which he had rented, but of which his tenancy had expired. A woman was put in to take care of the empty house; and this lady appears to have lighted her kitchen fire with some of the ancient manuscripts, and to have crammed a portion of the remainder into the dust-bin. Some of the rescued MSS. were exhibited in Court. They included a deed-poll of the time of one of the Edwards, and a schedule of Civil List Pensions granted by Charles I. The Judge ruled that there was no evidence to show that the document-burning lady had been put into the house by the defendants, and the plaintiff was accordingly nonsuited. Do you remember a case some years since of the wife of the office keeper of a provincial probate court using a will, temp. Elizabeth, for the purpose of singeing a goose withal?

There should be no wrong without a remedy; and I strongly advise Miss Braddon (who, at least, has my hearty and respectful condolence, to "take it out" of the Iron Monster by introducing a most abandoned and flagitious steam-roller into her very next novel. The Metallic Wretch might be made to do the most fearful things. Seriously, I thoroughly agree with Miss Braddon when she says that the Law should compel this very dangerous machine to do its work only in the dead of the night or in the early morning, when it would hurt no one.

A baked apple was the recipe for lowness of spirits prescribed in the case of the young lady who eloped from school in "The Boots at the Holly-Tree Inn." But I have a better cure for the megrim. Read the "Personal" Column of the New York Herald, and you will at once and infallibly obtain the wherewithal to laugh dull care away. I do not set so much store by the first notice in the newest column of "Personals" which has come under my notice:—"My Mother-in-Law is always delighted when I smoke Browne's Ecstatic Bliss Tobacco;" since that is obviously a puff for Browne. But the following strikes me as genuine and delicious:—"Five hundred babies are wanted immediately at Midget's Hall, corner of Fifth Avenue and Fourteenth-street, for the Great National Baby Show. Apply between two and two o'clock. 1000 dols. in premiums to first-class babies." I hope that the exhibiting (and fond) mam-mas will mark their infants before they take them to Midget's; otherwise some confusion might arise, even to the realisation of the equivocal in one of the most fantastic and the most delightful of Mr. Gilbert's "Bab Ballads," when the "exhibits" are returned. One more personal and I have done:—"Third Avenue Car.—Sunday evening.—Gentleman whom lady in corner shook her head at would be pleased to hear from her in confidence. Address, mentioning what occurred, 'Diamond,' Herald office." I wonder what occurred. What did "Diamond" do? Did he wink, so as produce an angry shake of the head from the lady in the corner? American young ladies (who are the most charming of their sex) can give to their features, when they are displeased, a very formidable expression. I remember one broiling summer afternoon during the Great Rebellion riding with the staff of a Federal General into the town of Culpepper, Virginia. Culpepper was dead Seesh. The men were all away, fighting in the Confederate ranks; but the ladies were gathered on the "stoops" of their houses, holding high aloft their parasols, and making faces at us.

Either Pious Mirandolus, Prince of linguists, is not dead, or Cardinal Mezzofanti, Pontiff of polyglot scholars, has come to life again; or else both have found a worthy successor in the "thoroughly educated and respectable Merchant of the best family," who advertises in the Times that he is a master of the Latin, English, German, Dutch, French, Italian, Spanish, and Russian languages, and that he is prepared to open a course of one hundred and eighty lessons for teaching Russian on his own method, intending to share the revenue accruing therefrom with the suffering families in the iron districts of South Wales and Monmouth. Had I time I should very much like to sit under this wonderful Merchant; but I have no doubt that he will find plenty of pupils; and I hold that dissimination of a knowledge of Russian among our educated classes would be a very great blessing. There is no nation whom we more systematically vilify, misunderstand, and misrepresent than we do the Muscovites; and one of the prime causes of our ill-founded aversion to a very gallant, intelligent, and warm-hearted people lies in the fact that we are almost entirely ignorant (I think Mr. W. H. Ralston will agree with me) of their speech. We have yet to learn that Slavonic is by no means a harsh or discordant tongue; that its gutturals are not more obtrusive than they are in Spanish; and that the language of the Czar's subjects has not been idly christened "the soft-flowing Russ." To hear a lady talk Russ, or, better, sing it, is, next to strawberries and cream on a hot July day in Piccadilly, the nicest thing that I know. I grant the language to be a difficult one; but much may be done in a hundred and eighty lessons.

Temple Bar is really to come down without delay. The City Comptroller has advertised for tenders from "Public Bodies" or "other persons" who will undertake to demolish the ugly structure at the western extremity of Fleet-street forthwith. This is excellent news; but—well; are you superstitious? Have you any faith in portents? Have you noticed that there is something the matter with the Dragon on the summit of Bow Church steeple, and that a scaffold has been erected round him for the workmen who are putting him to rights? This gilded vane is, manifestly, not the Old Original Dragon of Bow Church, about which so many grim legends have been told; but he may inherit some of the sentient feelings of his predecessor; and my belief is that the Dragon "felt bad" at the intelligence of the proximate demolition of Temple Bar, and that by too much "swindgeing the scaly horrors of his folded tail" he hurt himself. We shall hear of Gog and Magog going weak at the knees next, and tumbling prone on their faces in Guildhall. Remember the terrible portents which preceded the insurrection of the Iceni under Boadicea against the Romans.

Mr. William Cullen Bryant's "Index Expurgatorius," which was transcribed in Mr. W. Fraser Rae's "Columbia and Canada," and to which, I think, I was the first to call attention in an "Echo," two or three weeks since, is going the round of the papers and giving rise to much healthy controversy. The general impression among educated people concerning Mr. Bryant's "Index" seems to be that the amiable and accomplished poet and Editor of the New York Evening Post has, while very properly objecting to the use of some palpably vulgar, impertinent, or trivial expressions, shown himself fastidious overmuch as to the employment of many perfectly legitimate words. For example, Mr. Bryant places the verb "inter" under interdict. We must write in its stead, forsooth, "bury," for the reason, apparently, that "bury" is derived from the Saxon word "byrgan," whereas "inter" comes from the Latin "terra." All I have to say on this head is that if "interment" is to be "tapid"—not tabooed—in consequence of its Latin etymon, we must surrender "tureen," which we get remotely from the Latin, but directly from the French "terrine," an earthen vessel; that we must never speak of "territory," or "terrace," or "terrestrial;" and that we must abandon "terrier"—literally, a dog that goes to earth. Mr. Bryant, perhaps, might prefer to call a terrier an "earth dog;" but in that case confusion might arise. A Dresden porcelain puppy or one of Minton's big bull-dogs in stone china is an "earth-dog" baked.

These "Echoes" are substantially of little worth, or none; but philosophically they are to me a continual source of pleasant and I hope not unprofitable meditation. They furnish me with ever fresh experience bearing on the various tempers of mankind. For instance, I very often perpetrate blunders in this column. Humanum est errare. Forthwith a host of correspondents from all parts of the world come forward to correct my mistakes. Some do their spitting gently; others good-humouredly; others quite complacently; others sneeringly; others spitefully; and others personally abusively. The last two classes of correctors are always anonymous. I take them as they come, and put them in a little pair of scales which I carry within me; and I rejoice to say that, as a rule, I find the good-humoured letters outweighing the malevolent ones to a surprising extent.

McM: In connection with the above, I beg to thank a thoroughly genial correspondent who writes from Birkenhead, pointing out that the comic compound German word which I wrote "Constantinopolitanischersachsenspeifiger" should be "Constantinopolitanischdudelsachsenspeifergeselle." Of course it should. Thank you, Sir. I also warmly thank the gentlemen who have written to me vituperatively on the same subject; and I respectfully recommend them, in future, to put just a little less cayenne into their mulligatawny soup. An excess of cayenne is bad for the temper. G. A. S.

The Town Clerkship of Leeds has become vacant by the resignation of Mr. C. A. Curwood, who has been appointed solicitor to the Great Eastern Railway.

At a large meeting held at Falmouth on Tuesday in aid of the funds of the Mount Edgecumbe Training-Ship at Plymouth, the Earl of Devon, the Bishop of Truro, and Mr. John Tremayne, M.P., forcibly urged on the meeting the benefit, not only to the boys but to the country at large, of such institutions; and Mr. Tremayne, in alluding to the Pimm's agitation, expressed his belief that more ships were lost from want of good seamen than from their hulls being rotten.

The former pupils of Professor Hirsch, of Connstadt, on the Neckar, have presented him with a memorial of £350, as a slight recognition of their appreciation of the kind and considerate treatment received at his hands. To his judicious training upwards of a hundred former pupils in England and Scotland desire to attribute their success in life, both as professional men and as connected with manufactures, trade, and commerce, and are contributors to the memorial fund.

A large gathering was held in the Birmingham Townhall on Wednesday night, when prizes, publicly subscribed for, were distributed to such of the Board School children as had succeeded either by writing essays or answering questions in connection with the subject of kindness to dumb animals. Mr. George Dixon presided, and the prizes, numbering 557, were distributed by Professor Rolleston. The following letter was read from Mr. Bright at the opening:—"Rochdale, Nov. 22. Dear Miss Goddard,—I cannot come to your meeting, but I am very glad your good cause excites so much interest as to enable you to hold a public meeting in its favour. If children at school can be made to understand how it is just and noble to be humane even to what we term inferior animals, it will do much to give them a higher character and tone through life. There is nothing meaner than barbarous and cruel treatment of the dumb creatures who cannot answer us or resent the misery which is so often needlessly inflicted upon them. Wishing you a constant and growing success, I am, very sincerely yours, John Bright."

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The Bank directors, at their weekly court on Thursday morning, reduced the rate of discount from 5 per cent, at which it was fixed on the 11th ult., to 4 per cent.

The annual dinner of the Inventors' Institute took place on Wednesday evening at St. James's Hall, Regent-street, Sir Antonio Brady in the chair.

Alderman Sir Francis Truscott on Wednesday evening entertained the members of the Police Committee or the Corporation and other friends at the Guildhall Tavern.

A timepiece and a purse of sovereigns have been presented, as a mark of regard, to Captain Charles Mercier, on his resigning the chairmanship of the Hospital Saturday Fund.

Mr. Walter, M.P., presided on Wednesday at the annual festival dinner in aid of the Home for Little Boys at Horton Kirby. Subscriptions amounting to £1140 were announced.

The University College (or North London) Hospital has received £2000 under the will of the late Mr. George Moore, of Whitehall, Cumberland, and Bow Church-yard, London, to be applied in some way that may yield a permanent benefit to the institution.

The Society of Apothecaries have decided to offer two prizes for competition by young women under twenty years of age in the science of botany. The prizes will consist of a gold medal and a silver medal and books, to be awarded to the first and second candidates respectively in order of merit.

An address illustrative of experiences in war correspondence was delivered in the Opera Theatre of the Crystal Palace on Wednesday by Mr. Archibald Forbes, Special Correspondent of the Daily News. Mr. Forbes's narrative of the incidents of the campaign was told to a numerous and interested audience, by whom he was warmly cheered.

Mr. Goschen, M.P., in presiding at a meeting of the Hudson's Bay Company on Tuesday, alluded to the unparalleled fall which had taken place in the price of furs. One cause was the general depression of trade, and another was the war in the East. Russia was their great customer. The causes, therefore, were temporary.

Superintendent Mott, who, as being chief of the A division, has for some years had charge of the police on public occasions at Westminster, died, after a short illness, last Saturday morning. Mr. Mott, who was greatly respected, was in his forty-ninth year, and was the father of Miss Emily Mott, a well-known vocalist.

Temple Bar, which, having been propped upon crutches for nearly two years and a half, is at length about to disappear. In the Times advertising columns has appeared an official notice from the Controller's Office at Guildhall, inviting applications from public bodies or private persons for the "immediate removal" of the structure. The existing structure dates from the reign of Charles II., and is said to have been designed by Sir Christopher Wren.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers at the end of the third week of November was 80,487, of whom 39,116 were in workhouses and 41,371 received out-door relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, these figures show a decrease of 1234, 3969, and 12,275 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 812, of whom 578 were men, 191 women, and 43 children.

At the Society of Arts on Wednesday evening Professor Bell gave a lucid description of his invention, the telephone, for the transmission of articulate sounds. Conversation was carried on by the lecturer, Mr. Le Neve Foster (the president of the society), the Earl of Caithness, and other gentlemen, with correspondents at a neighbouring hotel, and with another correspondent in Gough-square, nearly a mile distant, through the medium of the underground wires of the postal telegraph.

The Veterinary Department of the Privy Council having issued authority to the Smithfield Club for the transit of live stock through the metropolis upon the occasion of the cattle show to be held, as usual, at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, the council of the club have given notice to all exhibitors of the special arrangements to which they will have to conform. The show opens on Monday week. The entries are equal to those of any previous year, and the Queen and the Prince of Wales will exhibit in the Devon, shorthorn, and sheep classes.

At a meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works yesterday week an attempt was made to reverse the decision of a special meeting held on the 14th ult., that two bills should be prepared and submitted to Parliament with a view to the board having charge of the water supply of the metropolis. The contention was that sufficient time had not been afforded properly to consider so great an undertaking. The motion to rescind the previous resolution was lost by a majority of three in a full board.

The expectation that the Mansion House Fund for the relief of the sufferers by the famine in India would reach a total of half a million sterling is not unlikely to be realised, after all. On Wednesday the Mayor of Sydney telegraphed to the Lord Mayor to the effect that by the mail that day he had remitted £6000 in aid of the fund, and that more would follow. The fund, reckoning that contribution, amounts to £482,400. Remittances to the extent of £455,000 have been made to India, and a further sum will be dispatched after the meeting of the committee on Monday next.

A quarterly court of the governors of the Hospital for Consumption, Brompton, was recently held—Mr. T. P. Beckwith in the chair. It was stated that a grant of £823 6s. 8d. had been received from the Hospital Sunday Fund. The following legacies, &c., had been announced:—Mrs. Rose Taylor, £10; executors of the late James Graham, Esq., £2000, and for the "Rose Charity Fund," £250; Miss Crowe, £100 duty-free; executors of the late T. and W. Milner, £200; ditto of Mrs. Alicia Harvey, £100. The number of in-patients admitted since Aug. 2 was 281; discharged, many greatly benefited, 244; died, 53; new out-patient cases, 3355. The report was unanimously adopted.

Lord Derby on Wednesday afternoon received a deputation from the Society for the Protection of British Interests against Russian Aggression in the East, the Turkish Defence Fund Association, and the Polish Society of the White Eagle, headed by Lord Stratheden and Campbell, who presented a long memorial setting forth the reasons why, in the opinion of the memorialists, England should at once intervene to save Turkey from being crushed by her foe. In the course of his reply, Lord Derby said that he could not endorse the proposition that the true line of communication between England and India lay through the Euphrates Valley; for while the navigation of the Suez Canal was uninterrupted, it was sufficient for all purposes. With respect to the Ministerial policy, the Government had held the same course throughout, and had not deviated from a line of conditional neutrality. The Government had already expressed its views as to the necessity of not allowing the Turkish capital to pass into other hands, and from these they did not intend to depart in the slightest degree.

The Lord Mayor, Lady Mayoress, and two or three ladies of the civic party, visited the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind, at Upper Norwood, last Saturday afternoon, before proceeding to the Crystal Palace. The institution, of which Sir. and Mrs. Francis Campbell are, as principal and lady superintendent, the guiding spirits, is now in the fifth year of its labours. Its object is to lead the pupils through an ordinary education to such useful knowledge of music and musical instruments as will enable them to earn a livelihood either as performers, as tuners, or as manufacturers. A concert was given by the pupils of the college during the stay of the Lord Mayor, whose visit was one of state, the City Marshal and the sword and mace bearers being in attendance.

At the weekly meeting on Wednesday of the School Board for London—Sir Charles Reed presiding—the debate was resumed on Mrs. Surr's motion to the effect that, after a period of probation, the length of which should be determined by the School Management Committee, children who evince no talent for drawing be permitted to discontinue its study, geometrical drawing excepted. The proposition was negatived by a large majority. The board resolved to adjourn on Dec. 19, over Christmas, to Jan. 9.—On Monday night the new schoolhouse erected by the School Board for London in Boundary-lane, Walworth-road, was opened by Sir Charles Reed, chairman of the board. The building is on the model generally adopted, will accommodate 810 children, and has cost £13,675, inclusive of site and legal charges.

There were 2398 births and 1571 deaths registered in London last week. Allowing for increase of population, the births were 4, and the deaths 142, below the average. The deaths from smallpox, which in the two preceding weeks had been 25 and 14, rose to 27 last week, a higher number than in any week since the end of July last: 13 cases were certified as unvaccinated, 3 as vaccinated, and in the other 11 the medical certificates gave no information as to vaccination. There were 82 deaths from measles, 55 from scarlet fever, 11 from diphtheria, 32 from whooping-cough, 38 from different forms of fever, and 13 from diarrhoea. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs, which had been 338 and 313 in the two previous weeks, rose to 409 last week, but were 56 below the corrected average; 267 resulted from bronchitis, and 104 from pneumonia. The widow of a farmer died at 103, New-street, Deptford on the 18th ult., whose age was stated to be one hundred years. In Greater London 2884 births and 1823 deaths were registered. The mean temperature was 42.8 deg., being 1.0 deg. above the average. The duration of registered sunshine in the week was 11.9 hours, the sun being above the horizon during 59.7 hours.

At a meeting of the board of the Great Eastern Railway, held on Wednesday, Sir Henry Whatley Tyler was elected a director of the company in the place of Sir Edward William Watkin, M.P., resigned.

The Duke of Westminster presided on Wednesday at the annual meeting of the Cheshire Chamber of Agriculture. There are twenty-two agricultural pupils at the school.

VICE-ADMIRAL SIR ADOLPHUS SLADE.

This distinguished old naval officer died at his London residence, 3, Hyde Park-place, on the 13th ult., in his seventy-fourth year. He was fifth son of the late General Sir John Slade, Bart., G.C.H., of Maunsel, Somerset. He comes of a family which has devoted nearly all its sons to the military and naval services, no less than seven of them having been engaged during the Crimean War. Adolphus Slade, in his youth, carried off the gold medal at the Naval College at Portsmouth; served at the battle of Navarino in the Hind cutter; also served in H.M.S. Tyne, on the South American station; was engaged at Algiers on board the flag-ship Revenge, in 1827; travelled extensively in Turkey and Russia, during the campaign of 1828-9, and wrote an account called "Records of Travels in Turkey," which has gone through three editions. In the year 1834 he was appointed additional Lieutenant to the flag-ship Caledonia in the Mediterranean, and for the next three years, with his knowledge of Turkish, was employed in confidential diplomatic missions. In 1841 he was promoted to the rank of Commander, and in 1846 was appointed to take the first iron ship in the Navy, the Recruit, on an experimental cruise. In 1846 he received his Post-Captain's rank, and shortly afterwards was specially selected by the Foreign Office to proceed to Turkey, when a breach seemed imminent between that country and Austria on account of the Hungarian refugees. Shortly afterwards he was "lent" to the Porte by the British Government for the purpose of reorganising the Turkish Navy, in which labours he was employed twenty years, including the Crimean War. He then laid the foundations of the present Turkish fleet. He rose to the rank of Admiral in the Turkish Navy, and received the title of Muchavir, or Consulting Pasha. He died a Vice-Admiral in the British Navy. He was honoured with a Knighthood of the Order of the Bath, and was decorated with the order of the Osmanli in brilliant, the order of the Medjidieh, the English and Turkish Crimean medals, and the medal for Navarino. Sir Adolphus Slade was never married. A portrait and memoir of this officer appeared in our number of Feb. 4, 1854. The portrait now engraved is from a more recent photograph.

THE "HISTORY OF CAVALRY."

A portrait of Lieutenant-Colonel George T. Denison, now commanding the Governor-General's body-guard in Canada, will be found on another page. This gallant officer, who sojourned last year at St. Petersburg, is author of a prize essay on "the history of Cavalry," written for the Imperial Government of Russia. It was the Grand Duke Nicholas, the present Commander-in-Chief of the Russian army in Bulgaria, who, as Inspector-General of the Russian cavalry, in 1874, with the Emperor's sanction, invited officers of every nation to compete for three prizes, offered for the three best books upon this subject. The prizes have not yet been awarded by the commission appointed to examine and compare the merits of the essays contributed by various writers. Colonel Denison, however, is allowed to publish the English edition of his work. It appears, under the auspices of Messrs. Macmillan and Co., in the form of a handsome volume, of five or six hundred pages, furnished with a dozen maps and plans of notable cavalry actions or campaigns. We can promise the reader of military history a large amount of instructive entertainment from perusing Colonel Denison's book.

The introductory chapter, as might be anticipated from our recollections of Homer's Iliad, and of the Egyptian and Assyrian modes of warfare, so often mentioned in the Old Testament Scriptures, treats rather of chariots than of armed riders on horseback. Scythian, Median, and Persian cavalry, and those of Thessaly and Thrace, are the first described in order of time. Both the Greeks and the Romans, in their heroic age, depended rather upon foot soldiers; but the classical scholar will appreciate Colonel Denison's citations of those instances which show the gradual introduction of cavalry as an auxiliary in the field. Xenophon's treatise upon this subject is quoted and analysed; and the Macedonian system of armament and tactics is described. The wars of Hannibal with Rome, the campaigns of Scipio Africanus and of Julius Caesar, and the regular organisation of cavalry under the Empire, with the degeneracy of the old Roman "legions" and the increase of barbarian troops, successively pass under our attention. The aptitude of the Gauls, the Parthians, the Huns, and other nations hostile to Rome, for this manner of fighting, is worthy of remark.

After the fall of the Western Empire, in the feudal stage of European reconstruction, we come to the institution of chivalry. This portion of Colonel Denison's historical inquiry is, perhaps, the most interesting to the mere general reader. He dwells particularly upon the Crusades, and their secondary effects in the changes that were made in the military habits and fashions of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. The mercenary companies of soldiers that overran Italy and other countries; the victories achieved by English archers under the Plantagenet Kings, and by Swiss infantry at a later date, lessening the relative value of mounted knights and men in armour; finally, the use of firearms, both artillery and musketry, in the organisation of regular armies, find their due place. It is with the sixteenth century, following the suggestions and predictions of Machiavelli, that the distinctive functions of modern cavalry and infantry began to be well understood.

From this point of the history, Colonel Denison's work becomes more especially valuable to the professional student of the military art. However singular may now appear the use of a great variety of firearms, the matchlock, petronel, arquebus, and long pistol, in the hands of mounted soldiery, and the establishment of dragoons, as first intended, to dismount upon their fighting ground and to act as foot-soldiers, some of these ideas, it will be seen, have lately been revived in successful practice. We may accompany Colonel Denison in his reviews of the Thirty Years' War in Germany; of the performances of Cromwell with his Ironsides on Marston Moor, and those of Prince Rupert; the wars of Louis XIV., of Marlborough and Prince Eugene, those of Charles XII. of Sweden, Peter the Great of Russia, and Frederick the Great of Prussia. Napoleon the Great's wars, it need scarcely be said, fill a yet larger space in this history; and the figure of Murat, le beau sabreur, dashes across the stage. The numbers, the mobility and efficiency, of the Russian light cavalry, particularly of the Don Cossacks, in the campaign of 1812, and in some other celebrated battles, proved highly important.

In his notices of military events belonging to our time, the Crimean War, the American Civil War, the Austro-Prussian War of 1866, and the Franco-German War of 1870, the author finds occasion to indicate very precisely the capabilities of mounted troops, and the most advantageous way of using them. The famous Balaklava Charge is said, we believe rightly, to be worth nothing as an example for military instruction, in this special point of view, though an astounding display of English bravery. In America, the Kentucky mounted riflemen of General Morgan, and those of General Forrest, on the Southern side, and the cavalry exploits of Generals Wilson and Sheridan, for the North, marked a new era for these means of warfare. The Prussian Uhlans, in the war of 1870, by covering the advance of their main army with a vast swarm of patrols and reconnoitring parties, greatly contributed to the French defeat. In conclusion, the practical observations made by Colonel Denison seem to claim the attention of military men. He holds that the revolver, or repeating pistol, not the sabre, is now the proper weapon for men fighting on horseback. They should be taught to charge revolver in hand, and to take aim and fire while riding at full speed. The sabre should be kept only for use in pursuit, and in combat with the enemy's horsemen. But the greater part of the cavalry should be mounted riflemen, who could get off, put their horses under cover, and fight in a defensive position on foot, accompanied perhaps by light artillery. We leave these propositions to the judgment of professional soldiers.

Brighton was busy on Wednesday evening. The third of the series of Gilchrist science lectures for the people was given under the Dome by Mr. P. Martin Duncan, M.D., F.R.S., on Mountains and the Interior Energies of the Earth; the monthly handicap competition of members of the Brighton Swimming Club went off satisfactorily at Hobden's Baths; and the annual prize distribution of the 1st Sussex Artillery Volunteers took place at the Corn Exchange, the Mayor distributing the prizes.

THE BRUCE STATUE AT STIRLING.

The battle of Bannockburn, fought on June 24, 1314, in the plain below Stirling Castle, secured Scottish independence. A monument of Sir William Wallace has long been standing on the Abbey Crag, overlooking the plains of the Forth, where some of his valiant deeds were performed. The monument of "King Robert the Bruce," as he is styled in old-fashioned language by Scottish writers, has just been erected on the rock of Stirling Castle. Its conception and furtherance, as well as that of the Wallace monument, are due in great measure, we believe, to the Rev. Dr. Charles Rogers, founder of the Grampian Club and Scottish Historical Society of London, and author or editor of many works of Scottish literary antiquities. The movement was commenced in London by Dr. Rogers in the spring of 1870, and was latterly carried on under the co-operation of a committee at Stirling, of which General Sir James Alexander, the well-known traveller, was chairman, and the secretary was Mr. William Christie, master of Cowan's Hospital.

Saturday last, when the Bruce monument was unveiled, was a public holiday in Stirling. Between one and two o'clock the various public bodies collected in front of the Corn Exchange, and a procession was formed. It started for the Castle Hill at two o'clock, preceded by the Grand Marshal, bearing the two-handed sword of King Robert the Bruce, which had been that morning sent by a special messenger from Broomhall, near Dunfermline, at the instance of its custodian, the Earl of Elgin and Kincardine. On reaching the Castle esplanade the procession opened up, when the Provost, magistrates, and the members of the Bruce Committee walked to a space reserved for them in front of the monument. Sir James Alexander presided, and was supported by the Provost and Town Council of Stirling. A deputation from the London Committee was also present, consisting of Dr. Charles Rogers, Dr. Charles Mackay, Lieutenant-General Alexander, and Thomas Wilson Reid. The statue was formally uncovered by Lady Alexander amid the acclamations of the large gathering, while a salute of twenty-one guns was fired from the castle. After a speech by Provost Christie, who accepted the statue in the name of the magistrates and Town Council of Stirling, the Rev. Dr. Rogers addressed the large assemblage, reciting the history of the battle of Bannockburn and of King Robert the Bruce.

The monument occupies a commanding position in front of Stirling Castle, 140 ft. east of the counterscarp, and 10 ft. from the north wall of the esplanade, being placed on a spot whence may be described a portion of the battle-fields of Stirling Bridge and Bannockburn. Resting on its massive

A daily paper says

"HUSH-A-BYE BABY."

"Such is the singular title of the Christmas Annual of 'Once a Week.' It is written by George Munroe Fenn, and that of itself is a sufficient guarantee that it is of high literary merit. The author styles it 'a reasonable dish of small stuff for a mental meal in sixteen spoonfuls,' each 'spoonful' forming a distinct story, although the whole are in a very novel way connected in the 'dinner-table' of 'spoonfuls.' The writer possesses some marvellous power from grave to gay, from lively to severe, while others are full of pathos. In the latter category, perhaps, the most remarkable are 'The Ladies at Mrs. Wiggin's,' and 'The Baby who was not Battered by Water.' On the other hand, 'The Baby who had a Powder,' and 'The Baby who came in a Basket,' present laughter in a most comical manner."

AUTHOR OF A "HISTORY OF CAVALRY."

pedestal, the outline of the statue can be discovered on the adjacent plain, and not indistinctly from the Wallace Monument on the Abbey Crag, a mile and a half to the north-eastward. The statue represents the Patriot King in the act of sheathing his sword. He is equipped in chain and plate armour, with a plumed helmet, clasped by a crown of gold. His countenance indicates magnanimity and dauntless courage; across his shoulders is a Royal robe, which the artist has ingeniously draped. Behind the statue is a Scottish shield, on which rests the crosier of St. Fillan, borne by the Abbot of Inchaffray, as he signalled the troops to an act of devotion, when the battle of Bannockburn commenced. Resting against the shield is the King's battle-axe, a blow from which felled the adventurous Bohun. Shield and battle-axe are surrounded by plants of the Scottish thistle—the national emblem. The statue, 9 ft. in height, is supported on a freestone pedestal, 6 ft. square and 10 ft. high, and which bears the lion rampant in its centre block. The work admirably sustains the reputation of Mr. Andrew Currie, the Border sculptor, whose monumental statues of Hogg and Mungo Park amply justified his being intrusted with the work.

PURE SOLUBLE COCOA.

VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA has been introduced for some years as the only guaranteed Pure Soluble Cocoa; and by all who are now acquainted with it is appreciated as far superior to any other cocoa in the market.

MOST of the other Cocos are mixtures of Cocoa, Starch, Sugar, &c., and a comparison of them with VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA will at once teach the most vitiated in taste.

THAT a pure COCOA is something very different from what they are supplied with as Cocoa.

NO reference is made here to the great praise bestowed on VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA by the "Lancet," and other competent authorities; but the public may judge for themselves by obtaining, free of charge, Sample Bottles, containing sufficient for six large cups, from their own grocer or chemist, or FROM THE CHIEF DEPOT OF VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA, at 6 and 7, COLEMAN-STREET, LONDON, E.C.

VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA will prove to them

THAT COCOA can be both pure and soluble.

THAT it can be made simply with boiling water instantaneously.

THAT it forms one of the most delicious beverages.

THAT such pure COCOA is the most nutritious article of food, and is easily assimilated by even so delicate a digestion.

THAT one pound is sufficient for 100 breakfast cups.

THAT, in short, it excels in quality and relative cheapness every other known COCOA.

SOLD (full weight) in 1 lb., ½ lb., and ¼ lb. Tins, 2s. 6d., 2s., and 1s., by GROCERS and CHEMISTS.

EACH TIN, as well as each Sample Bottle, bears as guarantee the signature of C. J. VAN HOUTEN and ZOON.

THE TAY BRIDGE, NEAR DUNDEE, FROM THE SOUTH.

THE TAY BRIDGE, FROM THE NORTH.

THE TAY BRIDGE.

We give two illustrations of this important structure, which has recently been completed. The project of building a bridge over the Tay, so as to shorten the way from Dundee and the North-East of Scotland to the South, was conceived very early in railway history. A meeting of the shareholders of the Edinburgh and Northern Railway (afterwards the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee, and now merged into the North British), held in September, 1845, empowered the Board to take all the necessary steps to construct a bridge at or near Newburgh, or to agree with any other company to assist in constructing the bridge. The intention at that time took the form of a high-level bridge, which the Dundee and Perth and Edinburgh and Northern Companies agreed to construct at an estimated cost of between £100,000 and £150,000. This agreement was never carried into effect. Previously, proposals had been made for a low-level bridge near the same spot, making use of Mugdrum island in the Tay, and, in consequence of opposition to this scheme, another project was to construct a swing bridge, so as to accommodate the river traffic. The question rested in abeyance till 1865, when the initiatory steps for the promotion of a bridge were taken by an independent company; but this also came to nothing. In 1866 the North British Company promoted a bill for a bridge and railway connection at Dundee, substantially coinciding with the bridge now built; but this also fell aside owing to the financial circumstances of the line. It was not till the Session of 1870 that an Act for the bridge was obtained, the project being promoted as a separate undertaking, but warmly supported by the North British Company. The capital authorised by the Act was £350,000 in shares of £116,000 in loans, of which sum £339,000 has been raised, the North British subscribing a portion of the amount. The work was begun in June, 1871, and the foundation-stone was laid on July 22. The stone abutment for the land end and the two brick piers before the water is reached were quickly erected, and the cylinder to form the foundation of the first water pier was floated into position in October of the year named. The entire length of the bridge contract was 10,142 ft., but some small spans on the north side and a series of brick arches, thirty-four in number, included in the land line contract, bring up the actual length of the bridge to a little over two miles. From the end of 1871 till now the bridge works have made progress, but various causes helped to retard the work in its earlier years. Among these causes were the death of the contractor, Mr. De Bergue, and the alterations in the form of the bridge, as well as in the methods employed in constructing it, owing to the bed of the river not having answered the original expectations. After fourteen piers, being those nearest the south end, on the original plan of engaged pillars of solid brickwork resting on a submerged base, had been completed, and a good deal of work at the other and shallower side had been done, the plan of using brick above high water was discarded in favour of iron, and in the case of the larger piers the method of laying the foundations was also changed.

Starting from Dundee on a wide radius, to change the direction from the shore line to the straight flight over the river, the bridge rises by a gradient of 1 in 73 to the summit level, at the north end of the large spans, where the roadway is 88 ft. above high water, and about 100 ft. above the mean tide level. The descent to the south side is 1 in 363, or to the eye nearly level. The thirteen spans of 245 ft. each, placed in the centre of the river, and filling up nearly one third of the length of the bridge, form of themselves a great work, the size and importance of which can hardly be judged either by the view from the river below or by the passenger who will only see the work from the train. Approaching from either side, there is a distance of about 3500 ft., where the line is laid on the top of the girder, and the train will travel in the open. When the wide spans are reached the rails run on the bottom of the 27 ft. high girder, and the long straight lines of the structure give the roadway the appearance of a tube or tunnel, as this part of the bridge is approached. Far beneath, the passenger will see the hurrying ebb or flow of the strong tide of the Tay, sometimes in rough weather lashed into fury by the tempests that sweep down from the hills. Excepting the unfurnished girders that fell, no part of the structure has shown a sign of failure, although the storms since the highest and most exposed parts of the structure were built have been of unsurpassed severity. A walk across the bridge gives a sense of enormous strength in the structure, and although the lines of the structure are wholly straight, or diagonal, its extent, its lightness, and its ever-shifting lines give it a picturesque effect. The view of country, of sea and river, fertile land and distant mountain, obtained from the higher piers is superb. The rails are laid double throughout—that is to say, a service rail with a guard rail within, keyed into a double chair, and laid upon a continuous sleeper of pitch pine. The roadway presents a sound, serviceable line, the excellent finish of every part being noticeable. The weight of the steel rails and chairs is given at 1 cwt. per foot, the rails themselves being 75 lb. to the yard.

THE EARL MARSHAL'S STAFF.

Upon the occasion of the Duke of Norfolk's marriage last week, Garter King-at-Arms and the members of the College of Arms made their noble chief a present of a gold enamelled bâton, with the arms of Mowbray, the red and white roses enamelled in their proper colours. It is tipped at the ends with black and surmounted by a ducal coronet, below which is a representation of an Earl's coronet; at the bottom of the bâton the arms and supporters of the Duke of Norfolk are enamelled. It bears the following inscription:—"Presented by the Corporation of the College of Arms to the Most Noble Henry, Duke of Norfolk, Earl Marshal, on the occasion of his marriage, November 21, 1877." We give an illustration of this ornamental staff, which was designed by Mr. John F. Bentley, of John-street, Adelphi.

The Earl Marshal is the eighth great officer of State. This office, until it was made hereditary, always passed by grant from the King, and never was held by tenure or serjeanty (by any subject) as the offices of Lord High Steward and Lord Constable were sometimes held. The title is personal, the office honorary and officious. He was formerly styled Lord Marshal only, until King Richard II., June 20, 1397, granted letters patent to Thomas Mowbray, Earl of Nottingham, and to his heirs male, by the name and style of Earl Marshal; and, further, gave him power to bear in his hand a gold truncheon, enamelled with black at each end, having at the upper end of it the King's arms engraved thereon, and at the lower end his own arms. The first Lord Marshal dates from 1135, but in 1476 Richard Plantagenet, Duke of York, second son to King Edward IV., was by his father created Duke of Norfolk and Earl Marshal in right of his wife, Anne, daughter and heir to John Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk. In 1483, John, Lord Howard, became Earl Marshal in right of his wife, Anne, widow of that Duke of York; in 1486, William, Lord Berkeley, Earl of Nottingham, in right of Isabel, his mother, daughter of Thomas Mowbray, first Duke of Norfolk, under Henry VII.; in 1497, Henry Tudor, Duke of York, afterwards Henry VIII., second son to Henry VII.; in 1509, Thomas Howard, Earl of Surrey (son to John, Lord Howard, Duke of Norfolk, attainted), created Earl Marshal, and then restored as Duke of Norfolk; Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, served the office till 1546, when Thomas Howard, Duke of Norfolk, succeeded; he was attainted in 1546. His successor, Edward Seymour, Duke of Somerset, was beheaded. John Dudley, Duke of Northumberland, also served the office till beheaded. In 1553, Thomas Howard, Duke of Norfolk, who was restored to his blood and honours by Queen Mary; in 1554, Thomas Howard, fourth Duke of Norfolk, who shared the fate of his father in 1571. In 1621, Thomas Howard, Earl of Arundel and Surrey (grandson of Thomas, Duke of Norfolk, by his son, Philip, Earl of Arundel), was created Earl Marshal. In 1646, Henry Howard, Earl of Arundel, succeeded, and died in 1652; Henry Howard, his second son, was by Charles II. created Lord Howard of Castle Rising in Norfolk, and afterwards hereditary Earl Marshal and Earl of Norwich. He succeeded his brother as Duke of Norfolk. In 1683, Henry Howard, Lord Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk, was Earl Marshal. In 1701, Thomas Howard succeeded his uncle, and became Duke of Norfolk and Earl Marshal; in 1732, Edward, Duke of Norfolk, brother of the above, succeeded; and, in 1777, Charles Howard, cousin to the above Duke of Norfolk, became Earl Marshal. He was succeeded by Charles, tenth Duke, on whose death, in 1815, his cousin, Bernard Edward, succeeded, and Henry Charles, thirteenth Duke of Norfolk, became Earl Marshal. On his death, in 1856, he was succeeded by Henry Granville, late Duke of Norfolk, and father of the present Duke.

Lord Howard of Glossop was Deputy Earl Marshal from February, 1861, to December, 1868, during the minority of his nephew, the present Duke.

The functions of the high office of Earl Marshal of England were empowered to be executed in person by the Dukes of Norfolk, notwithstanding their being of the Roman Catholic religion, by an Act of Parliament, which received the Royal assent June 24, 1824.

The first Cantor Lecture of the present session in connection with the Society of Arts was given on Monday night by Mr. Mr. William Arnott, F.C.S., who took as his subject "The Manufacture of Paper." Colonel Donnelly presided.

NEW BOOKS.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Aptness of epithets is less cultivated than it ought to be, so that we find the title of Illustrious Irishwomen given to two large volumes containing what are more correctly described as "memoirs of some noted Irishwomen from the earliest ages to the present century," by E. Owens Blackburne (Tinsley Brothers); the compiler, for the sake perhaps of alliteration, having apparently convinced himself that "illustrious" and "noted" are interchangeable epithets. This is by no means true; but it is very true that the "noted" as the contents of the two volumes under consideration truly testify, may be far more entertaining and amusing, if less impressive and instructive, than the "illustrious." Peradventure neither of the two confounded epithets can be properly applied to the Queen Macha, the Queen Méave, the Saint Brigit, the Dearbhlorguill, or, more commonly, Dervorgil, and the Eva, Princess of Leinster, whose scanty memoirs fill the first few chapters of the first volume; for, though the worthies mentioned may be household words among the true sons and daughters of Ireland, they are scarcely known by name, very likely, to the majority of those English readers for whom it may be presumed that the two volumes are principally intended. When we come to "the old Countess of Desmond," whose hundred and forty years of age and whose three sets of teeth, cut at intervals during her long life, must make the anti-centenarians gnash their own with vexation, we are on more familiar ground; and when, a few pages further on, we come to "la belle Hamilton," who married De Grammont, we take up the scent eagerly and follow the compiler, full cry, as he hunts down the actresses, and the literary women, and the beauties who may—most of them, at any rate—be fairly written down "noted," though few, if any of them, can be correctly dubbed "illustrious." All too meagre, indeed, is the account of them; but in some cases there was no more to be had for the searching, in others the half is, perhaps, better than the whole; and, whether or no, it is believed to be more wholesome to rise up from a feast without a sensation of surfeit. The compiler lays claim, no doubt with justice, to a certain originality; he mentions, in his preface, especially "some hitherto unpublished poems by William Wordsworth, and the true history of the romantic friendship of the Ladies of Llangollen." But when we arrive at his "postscript," we are informed that "the unpublished poem," the plural having been exchanged for the singular, "by William Wordsworth, which had been announced to appear in the memoir of the Ladies of Llangollen," he has been "unfortunately obliged to omit at the dictation of Mr. William Wordsworth, the son of the poet, who forbids the publication of any hitherto unpublished poem by his father." It is to be presumed, therefore, that the single sonnet which is given as having been written by Wordsworth is not "hitherto unpublished;" but a reference to the poet's works, if memory cannot be depended upon for the settlement of the matter, would determine that point. The story of the "ladies" has lately attracted renewed attention; and the time is, therefore, reasonable for a "true" version thereof. But though the "ladies" may fairly be ranked among eccentric Irishwomen, it is only by a stretch of language that they can be admitted among the "illustrious." And a similar remark applies to Peg Woffington, George Anne Bellamy, Kitty Clive, the Gunnings, and, in fact, the majority of the "Irishwomen" whom the volumes present to the reader. Miss Edgeworth is, perhaps, the most truly "illustrious" of them all. Nevertheless, the pages are, with few exceptions, such as ordinary readers devour with avidity: extraordinary beauty, extraordinary talents, extraordinary careers, extraordinary successes, extraordinary prosperity, extraordinary adversity—such subjects, with their accessory anecdotes, gossip, and scandal, never fail to exercise an almost universal fascination. The compiler seizes the opportunity which his work offers him of showing, to his own complete and loyal satisfaction, that "the legitimate Sovereign of Ireland, by right of birth, is her present Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria." It may be that some reminiscence of her ancestress Eva, Princess of Leinster, stirred the feelings of our Queen when, as the boatmen of Killarney delightedly relate, she bowed the hearts of all as the heart of one man by her gracious affability and condescension, waking the echoes of the lakes with her voice in the song of "Kathleen Mavourneen." This fact the boatmen do not forget to impress upon any visitor whom they would fain beguile into a vocal accompaniment to the labour of the oar. So prone is the Irishman to "blarney."

Inexhaustible is the amount of interest involved in all that appertains to the French Revolution, which has already served a thousand writers, and will hereafter serve a thousand more. We are never tired of reading how it fared with those, gentle or simple, who passed through it; and, although there must necessarily be a certain sameness in the records of domestic suffering as well as of political and military service, each group of sufferers or actors has some point of detail peculiar to itself, such as is to be found in A Man of Other Days (Hurst and Blackett), edited from the French, by Charlotte M. Yonge, the well-known author of "The Heir of Redclyffe," &c. The two volumes contain "recollections of the Marquis Henry Joseph Costa de Beauregard, selected from his papers, by his great-grandson, the Marquis Costa de Beauregard," translated into English not by the editress herself, but by somebody unnamed, whose work she has carefully revised, and for whose shortcomings, if any there be, she holds herself responsible. The "recollections," to put it briefly, are "the history of a Savoyard family during the troubles entailed on the little Duchy by the first French Revolution and the subsequent invasions;" and the story is told with a certain simple, quiet, diffuse, minute, and yet pathetic garrulosity which will have more charm for those many gentle souls who love to penetrate into the home and study the effects of great public events upon the private life of individuals than would be exercised by the most telling picture of the general scene presented, with all its lurid colouring and its thunder and lightning, during the "deluge" which Louis XV. foresaw would come after him. The first volume commences with the date of 1752, and the second ends with the date of 1824, the dates, respectively, of the birth and death of Marquis Henry Costa de Beauregard. At least, so it may be gathered from a comparison of the text with a supplementary note; for the Marquis Henry's great-grandson affects a somewhat vague and oblique style, unlike the plain, straightforward method of his ancestor. The interval of seventy-two years may be divided into four periods—the first, of fourteen years, during which the young Marquis made a trip to Paris; the second, of twenty-two years, during which he became a husband and the father of a family; the third, of twenty-six years, during which he saw a fair amount of military service, and, together with his poor wife and family, went through a very sea of troubles; the fourth, of ten years, during which he was to gradually descend, by the way of paralysis, to an honoured grave. He did not leave a name at which the world grows pale; but he left "boxes full of letters, notes, and writings," out of which his descendant has been enabled to make a book which will go right home to many sympathetic hearts. It may be said, moreover, in the language of the editress, that in the pages "we see the simple patriarchal home of the mountain noble;" that we have a decidedly "curious sketch of the Paris of Louis XV., in the aspect it bore to the lad of sixteen;" that we are carried "through the revolutionising of Savoy, followed by the conquest of Piedmont;" that we are presented with "a vivid picture of the sufferings of individual families in the general break-up;" that we are entertained with a noteworthy "interview with Bonaparte at Cherasco," and with "some curious accounts of the old Russian General Suwarrow." In a word, the interest is neither insignificant in quantity nor undiversified in quality.

Miraculous agency was supposed to account for the wonderful influence exercised over all living creatures by St. Francis of Assisi; but it appears from the volume entitled Thoreau: his Life and Aims, by H. A. Page (Chatto and Windus) that similar, if not quite equal, power may be possessed by the uncanonised, and in an age when miracles are by almost general consent repudiated. For it is less than a score of years since the grave opened to receive all that was mortal of Henry David Thoreau, a "poet-naturalist," of whom it is asserted that, as was said of Butler, the apologist, "either he had told the bees things, or the bees had told him;" that "snakes coiled round his leg;" that "fishes swam into his hand and he took them out of the water;" that he "pulled the wood-chuck out of its hole by the tail, and took the foxes under his protection from the hunters;" and that, in fact, he would probably have felt more at home in the world if it had pleased Providence to make him a dumb animal with tail, feathers, and other appurtenances, instead of an articulately-speaking man. Who Thoreau was, there may be some people who have never so much as heard. He was born at Concord, Massachusetts, in 1817, the youngest son of a French immigrant, whose success at lead-pencil-making in his adopted country was so great that the young Thoreau was able to go to Harvard University, where he graduated in 1837, though he gained "little or no distinction either at school or college." He developed a taste for rambling, for observing Nature, for studying the ways of "all things both great and small" in field and flood, for land-surveying, for living by the labour of his own hands, for rusticating, for the companionship of "brute friends," for writing both prose and poetry. He built himself a house in a wood; he objected "to pay taxes after Government followed him to the forest;" and he got locked up in prison for his refusal. He hated American slavery, and all slavery, with a generous, indignant hatred; he assisted slaves to escape; and he was "the champion of John Brown, of Harper's Ferry." He was a friend and admirer of Ralph Waldo Emerson; though it may well be that he "has been too absolutely claimed by the transcendentalists and treated as a mere disciple of Emerson." He may be thought to have lived a healthful life; yet, for all his training in the open air, he, in November, 1860, "took a severe cold, through exposing himself while counting the rings on trees," and died in the succeeding spring at the age of forty-four. He was one of those eccentric, self-sufficient spirits, with the courage of their opinions, whose character and career are always deeply interesting, and from whose example it is possible to learn some useful lesson, although it is obvious that the business of the world could not be carried on if everybody were to adopt their method of proceeding, reasonable and praiseworthy as it may be at bottom. He has been represented as the incarnation of "morbid sentiment, weak rebellion, and contempt for society," but the injustice of this estimate appeared so glaring, upon a close examination, to the gentleman whose book is here under consideration, that this gentleman determined to undertake a vindication of the traduced "hermit and stoic" in the form of a biographical essay, which is properly described as a "study" rather than a narrative.

MUSIC.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

Signor Marchetti's "Ruy Blas" was brought out here, for the first time in England, on Saturday last. The work was originally produced and favourably received in 1869, in Italy, the native country of the composer, who had previously been known by other productions, including his opera on the subject of "Romeo and Juliet."

The book of "Ruy Blas" (adapted by M. D'Ormeville), as may be inferred from the title, is based on Victor Hugo's well-known play, which has also furnished the subject of an Italian opera by Prince Poniatowski and Signor Besanzoni, and an English opera by the late Mr. Howard Glover, produced in 1861.

The drama has been rendered so familiar by performances of an English version that it is needless to dwell on the leading incidents, which are pretty closely adhered to in Signor Marchetti's work. The principal characters in the opera, and their representatives at Her Majesty's Theatre, are as follow:—Donna Maria de Neubourg (the Queen of Spain), Mdlle. Caroline Salla; Donna Giovanna de la Guevara, Madame Lablache; Casilda, Mdlle. Anna de Belocca; Ruy Blas, Signor Fancelli; Don Sallustio de Bazan, Signor Galassi; Don Guritano, Signor Ghiberti; Don Fernando de Cordova, Signor Franceschi; and Don Pedro de Guevarra, Signor Rinaldini; subordinate parts being filled by M. Gounet and Signor Grazi. The opera is in four acts, and is prefaced by a short orchestral prelude. The music throughout is smooth and flowing, with some agreeable, although not original, melody—and is written with evident knowledge of vocal effect. There is, however, a want of marked individuality of character and dramatic force, such as are requisite to sustain the interest of so long a work and to realise the suggestions of so romantic a subject. In the first act, the principal pieces are the aria, "Ai miei rivali," for Don Sallust; the duet, "Oh! com'è bella," for him and Ruy Blas; and a bright quartet in the presentation scene. In act ii., the solo for the Queen, "Madre mia;" the ballata, "C'era mia volta," for Casilda (encored); the scena, "L'ara dorata," for the Queen; an unaccompanied quintet; an effective duet, "Vuol dir che voi," for Ruy Blas and Don Guritano; an animated trio, "Signor, vi cercava," for the Queen, Casilda, and Guritano, which closes the act.

Act iii. opens with a concerted piece, which includes a prominent solo, "O, Carlo Quinto," for Ruy Blas, followed by a well-written duet, "Io, ehe tentai," for the Queen and Ruy Blas (encored); a duet, "Dunque voi," for Sallustio and Ruy Blas; and a concerted finale, containing some effective passages. In act iv. occurs a recitative and aria for Ruy Blas, the latter portion of which ("Mortale affanno") had to be repeated. A light "arietta," "Il Duca or qui verra," for Casilda, is followed by a duet, "Mecco vorreste" for that character and Sallustio. This piece has much well-sustained vivacity—somewhat out of place, perhaps, in the situation. It pleased so much that it had to be repeated. From this point the musical interest subsides—a trio, "E ricco è bello," for the Queen, Ruy Blas, and Sallustio; and a final duet, "Sol vi diro," for the two former characters, completing the work. The opera has been very effectively placed on the stage, with excellent scenery and splendid costumes; and its reception on Saturday was throughout favourable. The performance of the four leading artists, Mdlles. Salla and De Belocca, and Signors Fancelli and Galassi, was in every respect excellent. Madame Lablache sang well the music allotted to Giovanna de la Guevra, as did Signor Ghilberti that of Guritano; the other artists having contributed, in their degree, to the general efficiency. Signor Li Calsi conducted with his invariable care and skill.

Mdlle. Perdi, who was favourably received in her debut as Siebel on Monday week, met with a similar reception on the following Thursday as Maddalena in "Rigoletto," which opera was substituted for "Il Trovatore," owing to the indisposition of Madame Lablache.

"Ruy Blas" was announced for repetition on Tuesday and Friday. On Monday "Robert le Diable" was given; on Wednesday, "Faust" in the morning, and "Il Flauto Magico" in the evening; on Thursday, "Der Freischütz" was to be the opera; and to-night (Saturday) "La Sonnambula" is to be given, with the fourth appearance of Mdlle. Marimon.

Verdi's "Manzoni" "Requiem" was very finely given by the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society on Thursday week, it having been the opening of the seventh season of that institution. The work was first heard in England at the Royal Albert Hall, in May, 1875, when, as in reference to subsequent performances, its merits and characteristics were fully commented on. It need, therefore, now only be said that the interesting and important orchestral details, the elaborate choral writing, and the effective music for the solo voices were efficiently rendered. The solo vocalists were Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Mdlle. Redeker, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Mr. Thurlay Beale. Mr. Barnby conducted, and Dr. Stainer presided at the organ. The second concert of the series will take place on Dec. 11, when Professor G. A. Macfarren's new oratorio, "Joseph," will be performed for the first time in London.

The forty-sixth season of the Sacred Harmonic Society opened yesterday (Friday) week with Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," which this society has done much to rescue from the comparative neglect into which it fell after the production of its composer's later oratorio, "Elijah." The performance now referred to included all those grand effects, choral and instrumental, which result from the enormous number of executants engaged at these concerts. That the vocal solos were efficiently rendered, the names of the principal singers—Mesdames Edith Wynne and Patey, Mr. Vernon Rigby, and Mr. Santley—will sufficiently indicate. Sir Michael Costa conducted, and Mr. Willing presided at the organ, as usual.

Eight of the present series of Crystal Palace Saturday concerts have now taken place. At that of last week the symphony was Mendelssohn's in A major, known as the "Italian," which received an admirable interpretation. The concert opened with Mr. Gadsby's overture, entitled "Andromeda" (heretofore noticed), and concluded with a clever orchestral "Hungarian Suite" by Herr Heinrich Hofmann, of whose pianoforte music we have already spoken favourably. Schumann's elaborate and difficult pianoforte concerto was very finely played by Mr. Franklin Taylor, and vocal solos were contributed by Madame Patey and Mr. Cummings, the former of whom sang the air "Who ever perished," from Professor Macfarren's oratorio "Joseph," and Beethoven's song "Die chro Gottes"—to the gentleman having been assigned the cavatina "C'est en vain," from Gounod's new opera "Cinq Mars," and the song "So when the glittering Queen of Night," from Purcell's "Yorkshire Feast." This latter work (which, it is said, has not been heard for nearly two hundred years) is among the pieces named for production at the present series of Crystal Palace concerts.

At the Alexandra Palace a Handel concert was given last Saturday evening, when a choral force of nearly 1000 voices was assembled. The solo vocalists were Miss Annie Sinclair, Mr. Vernon Rigby, and Mr. Lackner. The "Coronation Anthem" ("Zadoc the Priest") and a selection from "Judas Maccabæus" were given with fine effect, special features having been the choruses, "O Father, whose almighty power," and "See the conquering hero;" the airs, "Pious orgies," "From mighty kings," "Wise men flattering," and "So shall the lute," rendered by Miss Sinclair; "Call forth thy powers" and "Sound an alarm" by Mr. Rigby; and "Arm, arm, ye brave," by Mr. Lackner. Mr. Archer gave a skilful performance of Handel's second organ concerto, and Mr. Smythson officiated as conductor.

This week's Monday Popular Concert introduced Brahms's newest set of "Liebelseder-Walzer," for four voices and pianoforte duet. Like the previous series (which has been several times performed at these concerts), the pieces are full of charm and variety, the voice parts in these being absolutely essential, whereas in the earlier series they are ad libitum. The waltzes were extremely well rendered, the pianists having been Miss Zimmermann and Mdlle. Ida Henry, and the vocalists Madame Sophie Lowe, Mdlle. Redeker, Mr. Shakespeare, and Mr. Pyatt. No. 13 (a duet for the lady vocalists) was encored. Mozart's string quintet in D was finely played by Madame Norman-Néruda, Mr. L. Ries, Mr. Zerbini, Mr. Hann, and Signor Piatti, the last-named artist having been associated with Miss Zimmermann in Mendelssohn's second sonata for piano and violoncello, the lady having played with much effect Beethoven's pianoforte solo sonata in A (from Op. 2).

The second of the new series of London Ballad Concerts took place at St. James's Hall on Wednesday evening, when another attractive programme was provided.

The promised series of performances of operas in English at the Royal Aquarium began on Monday with "Il Trovatore," the cast including Madame Arabella Smythe, Misses Palmer and Temple, Mr. V. Fabiani, Mr. F. Cook, Mr. J. Sydney, and Mr. G. Fox. For Wednesday "The Bohemian Girl" was announced, with Madame Rose Hersee as Arline; and to-day (Saturday) "Faust" is to be given.

St. Andrew's Day and the Eve thereof were celebrated musically: at the Crystal Palace on Thursday evening, and at the Royal Albert Hall and St. James's Hall on Friday (yesterday) evening.

The annual concert in aid of the funds of the Post Office Orphan Home will be given this (Saturday) evening, at St. James's Hall, under the patronage of Lord John Manners, M.P., Postmaster-General.

Signor Schira's opera, "La Selvaggia," having achieved a most remarkable success at Milan, is about to be produced at Barcelona and other important towns in Spain.

The annual meeting of the London Gregorian Choral Association was held last week at the Westminster Palace Hotel, Earl Beauchamp, the President, in the chair, and there was a large attendance of members. The chairman, in opening the business, compared the services in English cathedrals with those in cathedrals abroad, and supported the objects which the association had in view, urging union in singing. A lecture was then given by Mr. Spenser Nottingham on Certain Melodical Forms of Plain Chant. The lecture was well illustrated by a select choir, including the boys of the Chapel

Royal, St. James's, and of St. Barnabas, Pimlico. The choir was accompanied by a quartet of wind instruments, and was under the direction of Mr. Palmer, of St. Barnabas, Pimlico.

The arrangements for the fourth session of the Musical Association have been determined upon, and a programme of the papers which are to be read at the monthly meetings from November to June has been issued. Mr. William Chappell, F.S.A., one of the vice-presidents, read a paper at the first meeting on the Influence and Use of Numbers in Practical Music. At the second meeting, on Monday next, Mr. W. H. Cummings will read a paper on the Formation of a National Musical Library. Several important additions have been made to the council of the association by the election of Dr. Budge, Mr. W. A. Barrett, Mus. Bac., Mr. H. R. M. Bosanquet, M.A., F.R.S., Mr. C. A. Barry, M.A., Mr. Joseph Bennett, Mr. W. H. Cummings, and Mr. C. E. Stephens. Mr. James Higgins, Mus. Bac., succeeds Mr. C. K. Salaman as honorary secretary, Messrs. Collard and Mackeson have been elected auditors, and Mr. Stanley Lucas succeeds Mr. A. Chappell as treasurer. Mr. Salaman has been elected a vice-president of the association.

THEATRES.

Many are the expedients resorted to by managers for the purpose of keeping open the various houses until Christmas. The Lyceum has already closed until Dec. 26; but the Duke's has been reopened with an effort in favour of poetical drama, under the management of Miss Viola d'Acre. This is attempted not by the production of a new drama, but by the revival of Byron's tragedy of "Sardanapalus," after the example of Macready and Charles Kean, who had secured profit and honour by their spectacular adaptations of a noble poem. In the present case the adaptation by Mr. Charles Calvert has been used, justified by its repeated trials in the provinces with uniform success and profit. At length we have the trial made in the metropolis, and the Duke's Theatre has been selected for the arena in which the performance should take place. The theatre in question opened on Saturday, and was patronised by a large attendance, evidently prepared to patronise the experiment. Mr. Calvert has reduced the play to four acts, thus allowing time for spectacular and musical illustration. His abridgment, on the whole, has been skilfully made, and his accessories are of a costly description. The action opens with the palace of Nineveh, the walls and flooring bring decorated with the descriptive tablets and hieroglyphs authorised by Layard's researches and restorations. An Assyrian cymbal dance has likewise been introduced, which does credit to the talents both of Mr. Frederick Clay and Miss A. Wood. In the second act we have a terrace of the palace overlooking the Tigris, with a distant prospect of the city, the scene terminating with the galley on the Tigris conveying the voluptuous monarch and his suite to the place of revels. Then we have the hall of Nimrod, with a grand effect of thunder and lightning, following on the ascription of divinity to the flattered monarch. This certainly was of a most startling character. Battle tableaux succeeded, and secured appropriate plaudits. In the last act Sardanapalus's funeral pile is built, and the palace is consumed; the profusion of fire and smoke being calculated to alarm timid spectators. The heat of the flames reached the audience, and the glare was altogether terrific. No wonder that such an exhibition has commanded the suffrages of country playgoers; indeed, of itself it repays the price of admission. But in London we require something more. We require, in addition, excellent acting, and an impressive and intelligible delivery of the poetic dialogue. We soon discovered that, in regard to these so needful adjuncts, the company was deficient. Mr. W. J. Haining, as Arbaces, spoke the text in a stilted style, which effectually precluded the full understanding of it. Its meaning had to be gathered from other exponents and surrounding arrangements. The same almost may be said of Mr. Henry Moxon in the part of Salamenes. Mr. John S. Wood, as Beleses, was as obscure as a Chaldean and soothsayer could be expected to be. All these gentlemen need elocutionary training before they can deliver themselves respectfully of blank verse. The representative of Sardanapalus (Mr. Arthur Darley) aimed at a more artistic style, and conveyed some of the significance of the dialogue. In describing the dream of Hades, he showed ambition and tragic intention; but manifestly needed some instruction and much discipline. The ladies who represented Queen Zarina and the Ionian slave, Myrrha (Miss Emma Maason and Miss Gainsborough), both need considerable training before they can be fitted to the onerous tasks imposed upon them. Nevertheless, though the company failed to support the allotted parts, yet the parts supported the company, and invested them with pretensions which the charitable audience willingly allowed. Besides, whatever their respective merits, each performer showed a sufficient acquaintance with his character to escape censure, even where he could not command praise. Each was frequently applauded, and deservedly, inasmuch as he did his best, irrespectively of his rank as an artist. It is something, also, to get such a poem so carefully put upon the London boards; and, humble as the effort may be, we trust that it may conduce to better endeavours under better auspices in the future.

The theatre in Long-acre has again changed its appellation, by reverting to the former one of "The Queen's," instead of "The National," as recently proposed by a new but fugitive management. It substitutes the melodrama of "Russia" by an Irish piece, entitled "The Omdhaun." This turned out to be an adaptation of an old Surrey drama, in which Mr. Creswick erewhile acquired some laurels, under the title of "The Idiot of the Mountain." The scene has been transferred from France to Ireland, and a Hibernian patois substituted for good English. Miss Henrietta Hodson now sustains the part of Le Cretin, and performs it with a fitness which is likely to increase her popularity. The villain, who commits a murder with such cunning that the guilt is attributed to another, has been confided to Mr. Hermann Vezin, under the name of Kenneth O'Fergus, a wealthy landowner, and, as might be expected, the actor makes the most of his opportunities. Mr. Billington acts a Sergeant Murphy, an Irish constable; but the part has been so attenuated that it is scarcely worthy of his abilities. Mr. Voltaire represents the murdered man, here called Miles O'Callaghan, an usurer; the victim of the crime is named Patrick Carroll, a rôle well played by Mr. Arthur Stirling; and Michael Malony, the pedlar, evinces much humour, as treated by Mr. Shiel Barry. Miss Carlisle and Miss Maggie Brennan shine as Norah Carroll and Kathleen Sheenan. Some handsome scenery has been provided for the incidents; and the piece, though far from original, is nevertheless a novelty which is likely to succeed.

A new musical extravaganza has been produced at the Folly, entitled "Shooting Stars," the music by M. Hervé, which, as usual, is light and brilliant. The story is a mere piece of absurdity, and the libretto consists principally of whimsical allusions to contemporary events. It is set off with some new scenery by Mr. Julian Hicks. As the final piece of the evening, it closes the performance in a lively manner and leaves the auditor in a cheerful state of mind.

Morning performances are now proving to be exceedingly popular, and will, perhaps, be preferred to evening ones during the cold weather. On Saturday, at the Criterion, there was a special matinée, when a comedy, entitled "Progress," by the late T. W. Robertson, was performed, and commanded a respectable attendance. This proved to be one of a series.

Mr. Edward Tyrrell Smith, so long identified with the management of various London theatres, died on Monday morning, after a brief illness, aged seventy-three.

Worcester Theatre was destroyed by fire on Sunday.

THE DUKE OF NORFOLK'S MARRIAGE.

An account of the nuptial ceremony performed on Wednesday week, in the Roman Catholic Church attached to the Brompton Oratory, was given in our last chronicle of Court and fashionable news. We also gave the portraits of the Duke of Norfolk and his bride, Lady Flora Hastings, with some particulars of their respective family pedigrees and connections. Views of Arundel Castle, Sussex, and of Donington Park, Leicestershire, appeared in our last. We now present an illustration of the scene in church at the wedding. The congregation included Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne, the Duke and Duchess of Bedford, the Marquis and Marchioness of Bute, Lord Beaconsfield, Lady Herbert of Lea, and many others of the nobility. The Duke of Norfolk was accompanied by his cousin, the Hon. Francis Howard, eldest son of Lord Howard of Glossop. Lady Flora Hastings was accompanied by her father, Mr. C. F. Abney-Hastings, and attended by twelve bridesmaids. The church was carpeted with crimson cloth, and was decorated with beautiful groups of plants, ferns, palms, orchids, and large camellias in blossom. For the performance of the marriage ceremony, the bridegroom and bride entered the sanctuary, the bridesmaids, who had occupied a position in the rear of the contracting couple, advancing to the steps without the rails of the holy place. The marriage was performed with the ritual of the Roman Catholic Church by the Right Rev. the Bishop of Southwark, assisted by the Very Rev. Father Keogh, superior of the Oratory, and Father Gordon. The father of the bride was alone present in the sanctuary to give his daughter away. To those unacquainted with the Rituale Romanum it may be interesting to learn that, after a short preliminary prayer by the priest, he turns to the bride and bridegroom and interrogates them each as to their consent. He then joins their hands in marriage in the name of the Most Blessed Trinity, and afterwards sprinkles them with holy water. The bridegroom then places in a silver ring and some pieces of gold and silver coin, to be given into the hands of the bride. The priest then blesses the ring, sprinkles it with holy water, and gives it to the bridegroom, instructing him to say the words in which he declares that he weds the bride with that ring, and makes over to her the gold and silver as a pledge of his fidelity, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, concluding with the "Amen." As the bridegroom names the "Father," he touches the thumb of the bride's left hand with the ring, her forefinger as he names the "Son," the next finger as he names the "Holy Ghost," and places it on her fourth finger as he says the word "Amen;" after which the priest, turning to the altar, repeats certain versicles with the Kyrie and Pater Noster, which concludes the ceremony. The bride and bridegroom, followed by their friends, then passed to a corridor on the west side of the church, where the civil registration of the marriage took place. The register was attested by Mr. Abney-Hastings, the Dowager Duchess of Norfolk, Lord Londondown, the Marquis of Bute, Lord Howard of Glossop, Monsieur Weld, the Hon. Francis E. Howard, the Earl of Beaconsfield, and the Marquis of Lorne. During the performance of the ceremony the Bishop of Nottingham, the Bishop of Port Louis Amica, the Right Rev. Monsignors Weld, Capel, and Talbot, Canon Butt, and other priests occupied the sedilia in the sanctuary. The nuptial mass was afterwards celebrated; Father Gordon was the celebrant, assisted by Deacon Charles Bowden and Sub-Deacon Kenelm Digby Beste. Father Antrobus officiated as master of the ceremonies. During mass the newly-wedded couple left their chairs in front of the sanctuary twice, and, kneeling on the lowest step of the altar, received the priest's benediction. There was no address of exhortation by the priest on the occasion. The Duke and his bride then retired, the organist playing "The Wedding March" as they passed along the church to their carriage. After a breakfast party at the house of Mr. Abney-Hastings, in Upper Grosvenor-street, the Duke and Duchess left for Arundel Castle.

THE GALE AND WRECKS.

The violent gales of wind on Saturday night and Sunday morning did much damage to shipping along the south-east coasts of England. Many vessels lying in the Downs were carried away from their anchorage by the huge seas that rolled in over the Goodwin Sands, when the gale shifted, about an hour after midnight, from a southerly quarter to the north-east, the tide flowing in at the same time. The French brigantine Gustave, and the Queen, of Dartmouth, were dashed ashore near Deal, the latter striking the pier at the entrance to that harbour, and both vessels were wrecked: the captain and two men of the Queen were drowned. Among the other vessels wrecked were the barque Morley and the French schooner République; two passengers in the latter were drowned, and two of the Morley's passengers, a lady and a boy. Twenty-two persons were saved by the exertions of the Deal boatmen and Coastguard. As many as thirty vessels went on shore between Kingsdown and Ramsgate. The brigantine Charles Davenport, which had been ashore near Margate for a fortnight, broke up, and portions floated towards the town. The hull was carried with terrific force against the jetty, a considerable portion of which, with the waiting-rooms, is destroyed. A French vessel, with six hands, went ashore at Fort Point; fortunately, it drove near to the Aquarium sea wall, and the crew were rescued there with ropes. There were fifteen vessels ashore close to the town of Margate. We give two illustrations of the scene opposite the Parade, and as viewed from the jetty. The Margate, Ramsgate, and Broadstairs life-boats, the harbour steamer, and a London steam-tug were respectively instrumental in saving the crew of fifteen men from the barque Hero, which afterwards went ashore. They also took safely into harbour the schooners Jane Cameron and Glaner, the brigantine Mermaid, of Guernsey, the schooner Louisa, of Guernsey, and three other vessels. The Margate life-boat was much injured by being dashed against the barque by the heavy sea.

The residence of Sir Joseph W. Bazalgette, at St. Mary's, Arthur-road, Wimbledon Park, was entered last Saturday morning by a gang of burglars, who succeeded in carrying off a silver trowel with ivory handle, presented to Sir Joseph in commemoration of the laying of the first stone of the Thames Embankment; also a silver and a silver inkstand.

FINE ARTS.

THE DUDLEY GALLERY WINTER EXHIBITION.

If there is one exhibition more than another in which a careful observer is sure to find the promise of coming genius it is that of the Dudley Gallery. All our best young men of the present time have certainly given the first hints of their quality on its walls; and if the exhibitions are still conducted on the same broad principles as those which first gained the generous notice of the public the "Dudley" will doubtless continue to secure patrons and encourage artists. With a committee, however, of over fifty artists, all of whom contribute, and with hanging space for only four hundred pictures or thereby, the temptation to be arbitrary and exclusive is very great. With such friendly hints of the danger the committee runs in this direction, we proceed to notice one of the best Winter Exhibitions ever held within the walls of the Dudley Gallery.

The first subject-picture attracting attention, as one follows the catalogue, is the "Cadmus and Harmonia" (10) of Evelyn Pickering. This artist is a distinguished disciple of the Spencer Stanhope and Burne-Jones school, and whatever of beauty in subject, drawing, or colour belongs to it she most assuredly possesses. The figure of Harmonia here may never, either in flesh tint or in form and stature, have belonged to any one woman, yet it is exceedingly grateful to the eye, and the twining of the great lithe beast round her, as she stands her stately height, fascinates the spectator in the same way that Frederick Leighton's "Athlete Wrestling with the Python" did last season. In contrast to this idealistic figure we would place the simple and realistic form of the sweet young girl who stands before us with gathered-up skirts and whip in hand "Ready for a Ride" (44). The artist is J. Farquharson.

Passing over in the meantime such able landscapes as Ernest A. Waterlow's "August Moon" (42), Hamilton Macallum's "Caught by the Tide" (51)—a young girl wading knee-deep across a tiny creek towards the sands, over which various groups of fisher folk wend their way homewards; the industrious little seamstress seated on the low steps of "The Cottage Door" (53), with its flowers and all its other rustic details, so prettily realised by Mrs. Luke Fildes; and the bright sunny glimpse H. Pilleau gives us of "San Giorgio, Venice" (52), we come to Frank Holl's "Hush" (68), which he puts into the mouth of an anxious mother who sits brooding in the twilight gloom of her humble cottage by the side of the cradle of her dying child. The light catches the cheek of her little girl who stands by her, and runs up the arm and hand of the mother. The pendant, or perhaps rather the sequel, to this is a little farther on, and is called "Flushed" (100). The mother leans her head on her hand, lost in sorrow, and her little girl looks woefully towards her and wonders why her mother does not repeat again her soft, low "Hush." Here, again, the light but touches the two figures, leaving all the rest of the apartment in appropriate gloom. Mr. Frank Holl has never told a story more touching in its pathos.

The immediate place of honour on this, the left wall of the gallery, is occupied by E. D. Leslie's three young ladies amusing themselves in a punt, which they have managed to get alongside some bushes in order to pluck the "Water Lilies" (81). Above it hangs what H. Stacy Marks modestly calls a "Decorative Panel" (80), in which we see three storks standing in melancholy guise round a fountain within a walled garden. On one side of the pleasant "Water Lilies" hangs Otto Scholderer's young lady in grey-green dress, wearing a white hat, and, regardless of the book on her knee, leaning on her elbow and indulging in her own "Reflections" (76). The modelling of this figure is certainly very fine, yet we cannot help thinking that the artist has forced it a little by making the bushes behind the lady so very black. The corresponding place on the other side is occupied by Luke Fildes, with his "Marianina" (94)—a remarkably handsome Spanish girl wearing a green spotted wrapper, a blue spotted buff apron, a brown and white striped petticoat, and carrying a brass pail on her arm. The background is of a subtly varied grey, and, although the figure itself is low in tone, the modelling is superb, colouring brilliant, and worthy the sympathetic pencil of the Spanish Philippi. In the same neighbourhood will be found James Macbeth's "Summer's Tale" (77)—a lady carrying a Japanese parasol, with a dog and a child before her and a statue of a Roman senator between her and the trees—a picture of undoubted strength and beauty; and, a little farther on, Léon Lhermitte's "A la Fontaine" (101)—a girl giving a boy drink at a rustic well, and a lovely "Summer Haze at Dunkeld" (110), which reminds us of the sad loss the art-world has sustained in the death of T. S. Raven.

Recommending to the attention of the visitor as we go along "The Priest's Hiding-Place" (125), by W. F. Yeames; "The Morning after" (139), by Cecil C. Lawson; "The Sleep of Brynkild" (138), by Margaret Hooper, and other able contributions by Eyre Crowe, John Charlton, J. C. Dollman, and Georgina Koborwein, we come to the remarkable picture occupying the place of honour in the far end of the gallery. It is called "Disbanded" (168), and represents a Highlander crossing the shoulder of a snow-covered hill laden with booty. Over his shoulder we see a good firelock, and in his right hand a couple of horse pistols, while the whole belongings of some unlucky English officer are stuffed into the ample breadth of the plaid behind him. The furtive yet resolute look of the Highlander, his swift, cat-like stride, and the tremendous intensity with which the whole figure is projected on the canvas, make everything else in the exhibition look painty and tame. Clever, therefore, though the following pictures be, and indeed are, our readers will understand that a considerable interval, in our opinion, is to be placed between Mr. Pettie and those who surround him, as regards absolute force and delineation. Mark Fisher's "Shepherd's Wife" (171), Keeley Halswell's "Italian Fair" (176), Hugh Carter's "Dutch Home Life" (187), Colin Hunter's "Kinsale Harbour" (188), Hilda Montalba's "Grey Day, Venice" (207), a picture at once delicate and strong, and especially Claude Calthrop's large picture immediately above Mr. Pettie's work, representing a gentleman in a grey suite leaning eagerly across a table as if making "An Appeal" (169) to a young man in a dull sage-green dress, who leans on his elbow and holds listlessly his empty glass bottom downwards, are all works of taste and character.

As our space is already exhausted, we can only mention a few more of those works which give importance to the present exhibition:—"The Season when the Bracken Changes" (209), by Tristram Ellis; "The Love-Letter" (216), by W. Small; "Stone Lantern on Lake Biwa, Japan" (224), by Frank Dillon; "Court of the Fish-Pond, Alhambra" (182)—a capital picture by Kate Thompson, suggestive of the finish and style of the late Mr. Lewis; "Drying the Nets" (239), by Frank E. Cox; "Prayer" (243), by Alfred Elmore; "The Foundation-Stone" (258), by P. R. Morris; "October" (273), by G. H. Boughton; "Corpus Christi" (292), by C. Napier Iremy; "The Golden Gate, Entrance to San Francisco Harbour" (310), by J. MacWhirter; "Audrey" (323), by Thomas Graham; "The Amateur" (338), by Seymour Lucas; the little boy who has been promoted to the honours of a chorister (346), by Frank W. W. Topham. On the screen will be found ingenious and pleasing bits by such men as Heywood Hardy, Edwin Hayes, J. R. Ashton, Alma Tadema, H. Helmick, and E. J. Gregory. We are glad to observe among the smaller pictures a very clever marine sketch by Mrs. Val. Bromley; and, among the sculpture, three miniature studies, by Alice M. Chaplin, of a cat in various attitudes, which show a thoroughly intelligent sympathy with animal life, and the possession of a fine modelling faculty. Nor must we close our article without paying homage to the rare plastic genius of J. Dalou. His "Liseuse"—a terra-cotta statuette of a seated lady in loose robe, who smiles as she reads—is, in its art-charm, unapproachable by any British sculptor.

THE FINE-ART SOCIETY'S EXHIBITION, BOND-STREET.

This, the second Autumn Exhibition of the Fine-Art Society, is confined, as it was last year, to those artists who are not members of the Society or Institute of Painters in Water-Colours, and, considering such restriction, it is astonishing how many charming drawings adorn the walls. Harry Hine, jun., Lennox Browne, W. Pilbury, Cecil Lawson, Sutton Palmer, H. A. Harper, David Law, and Mark Fisher are all men worthy of the honours of either of the societies named. Besides these there are contributions from several foreigners of distinction. The most illustrious of these is Herr A. Liezen Mayer, whose fifty cartoons illustrative of Goethe's "Faust" fill the gallery up stairs. The invention throughout is of the most striking, and some of the creations of the most beautiful and touching kind. Thirteen of these cartoons have been engraved, and will link for ever the name of Liezen Mayer with that of Goethe.

The Lord Mayor presided on Tuesday evening over the annual distribution of prizes to the students of the City and Spitalfields School of Art, which was stated to have made satisfactory progress during the past year.

The Committee of the School of Art in Manchester are to hold next spring an exhibition of pictures, sculpture, and all forms of art-workmanship in aid of the building fund for a new School of Art. A large selection will be contributed from South Kensington, and the committee have already received promises of loans from private collections.

The subject of the first prize, valued at £100, to be drawn for in February, by the Art-Union of Kent, is "Washing Day"—a charming domestic picture, painted by Miss Jane M. Bowkett. A young mother is at the washing-tub, and her little daughter is enjoying the fun of blowing bubbles.

A deputation of provincial Mayors, representing sixty municipal bodies, waited last Monday upon the Trustees of the National Gallery to ask for the loan of pictures and drawings to provincial art-galleries. It was urged that it was simply impossible for the majority of country art-students to come to London to study the masterpieces in the galleries here. The Trustees will communicate their reply in writing.

Mr. Goldwin Smith, in presenting the prizes to the successful students of the Oxford School of Science and Art, took occasion to refer to the present depression of trade in this country, and said that if England wished to revive her markets she must do so by multiplying such skilled designers and high-class workmen as it was the business of the schools of science and art to train.

At the Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge, more than 500 engravings of the early German, Dutch, and Flemish schools have been mounted and incorporated in the special collection of those schools. Since their last annual report, the Syndicate have caused all the etchings of Rembrandt and his scholars, to the number of 1328, to be carefully stamped, arranged, and catalogued, under the superintendence of the director, assisted by Mr. G. W. Reid, keeper of the prints in the British Museum, and the Rev. C. H. Middleton, B.A., of Christ's College.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The Lord Mayor presided at the presentation of the prizes won by the members of the London Rifle Brigade during the past year, on Saturday last, at the Crystal Palace. Lieutenant-Colonel Hayter, M.P., the Colonel Commandant, announced that there was a large increase in the enrolled strength of the brigade since a similar occasion last year; the Lady Mayoress presented the prizes; and the Lord Mayor made a few remarks relative to the present war. The best shot in the brigade in class firing for the second year in succession was Private McDougall. Amongst the principal winners were Sergeant Beeton, Private Hayes, Corporal Haines, Captain Wadd, Private Saw, Colour-Sergeant Fletcher, Private Cross, Sergeant Bing, Corporal Mardell, Private W. Young, Private W. S. Smith, Private Hood, Private Runtz, Private H. Smith, Private Rothen, and Private Fraser, all of whom received prizes of £10 10s. and upwards in the brigade contest. Sergeant Fraser was also the winner of the gold medal of the brigade. The total value of the prizes exceeds £1000, without reckoning the numerous silver medals and other objects of value, and among the most liberal donors are the Aldermen and other officers of the wards of Broad-street and Cripplegate and not less than ten of the City companies.

The annual distribution of prizes to the City of London Engineers took place last week at Myddelton Hall. The commanding officer, Lieutenant-Colonel Drew, presided, being supported by Colonel and Mrs. Mulliner and a large number of ladies and gentlemen. Lieutenant-Colonel Drew gave a short history of the work of the corps during the past year, from which it appeared that the enrolled strength at present was 460, of whom 414 were efficient. The prizes having been handed to the winners by Mrs. Mulliner, Sergeant-Major Hill was called to the platform by Colonel Mulliner and presented with a framed address, and a purse that had been subscribed by the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the corps upon his leaving them to go to the 38th Kent (Hawkhurst) Rifles. A ball followed the presentation.

At a meeting of the Dublin Corporation on Monday a letter was read from Major Leech stating that the Elcho Shield would be delivered to the Corporation on the 10th inst.

Surgeon-Major Staples gave yesterday week, at the Society of Arts, the first of a series of lectures on the system of instruction pursued by the Volunteer Sick-Bearers Association. The chair was taken by Colonel Loyd-Lindsay, who took occasion to say that, having the teachers, all they now wanted was the pupils; and to advise the association to stand aloof from all other associations. Among those who took part in the discussion were Colonel Fletcher, Surgeon-General Munro, Colonel Gordon Ives, Mr. Norman, Dr. McCormack, Colonel Furley, Dr. Hamilton, Dr. Platt, and Colonel Stacey.

The Standard publishes a statement showing the strength of nearly the whole of the volunteer regiments in London and Middlesex, together with the Tower Hamlets Rifle Brigade and the 3rd Essex Artillery. Out of the twenty-eight corps named in the list, only four of them—the 2nd and 3rd London and the 4th and 28th Middlesex (London Irish)—show a decrease, and even in those cases the falling off is merely nominal, being only a total loss of thirty-three men, or about 1 per cent upon their efficient strength of over three thousand of all ranks.

The twenty-four corps who have advanced their efficiency have added 10 per cent to their numbers. The officers and sergeants who have earned certificates for proficiency, together with the extra capitulation grant, have also increased, and in the majority of cases reached the full establishment. The corps showing the greatest accession to their numbers is again the 39th Middlesex, who return 800 efficient. The 29th (North) Middlesex are second, with 183 more efficient than a year since, the next in order being the Inns of Court, who have advanced from 239 to 361. The Queen's (Westminster) have added 119, the 36th Middlesex, 116; the 37th Middlesex, 103; the 9th Middlesex, 92; the 49th Middlesex (Post Office), 92; the 15th Middlesex (London Scottish), 87; the London Rifle Brigade, 79; the 1st London Engineers, 68; the Tower Hamlets Rifle Brigade, 67; the 21st Middlesex (Civil Service), 59; and the 19th Middlesex, 57. For the first time, the 36th Middlesex (Paddington) Rifles, who have during the last seven years gradually advanced from an establishment of four to ten companies, stands at the top of the list for numbers, they having 923 efficient out of an enrolled strength of 978. The 3rd Middlesex Artillery return 905, the other regiments numbering 800 and over being the 3rd London Rifles, 896; the 37th Middlesex, 885; the London Irish, 856; the Queen's (Westminster), 816; the 19th Middlesex, 804; and the 39th Middlesex, 800, the latter corps leading the way for percentage of efficiency with a clean sheet. The Post Office Corps are next in order, they being followed by the 29th Middlesex, the St. George's, and the 2nd Middlesex Artillery (Custom House).

CATTLE AND POULTRY SHOWS.

All the exhibits for the twenty-ninth annual Cattle and Poultry Show at Birmingham are ready in Bingley Hall for the inspection of the judges to-day (Saturday). Entries in all classes are satisfactory, while the applications from implement manufacturers have been larger than ever. Among the exhibitors are the Queen, the Prince of Wales, the Dukes of Buckingham, Marlborough, Portland, Northumberland, and Sutherland; the Countess of Chesterfield, Countess of Dartmouth, Earl of Lonsdale, Earl of Crawford and Balcarres, Earl of Ellesmere, Lord Falmouth, Lord Chesham, Earl of Galloway, Earl of Harrington, Lord Leigh, Lord Lovat, Earl of Powis, Lord Tredegar, Lord Walsingham, Sir Watkin Wynn, Mr. M'Combie, and the Corporation of Birmingham. The poultry number 2700 pens, and the council found it necessary to hire 500 additional pens for their reception.

The first show of the newly-formed Norfolk and Norwich Fat Cattle Association was held last week at Norwich, and may be regarded as a success. There were sixty-four entries in the fat cattle classes, twenty-six in the sheep, and twenty in those for pigs. Among the exhibitors were the Prince of Wales, Lord Walsingham, Mr. J. J. Colman, M.P., Mr. C. S. Read, M.P., Sir W. C. Trevelyan, and other breeders from Aberdeen, Lincolnshire, Lancashire, and Northumberland, besides those in the Eastern Counties. The principal prize for cattle was the champion prize, £100, and with this was included the Prince of Wales's plate, value 20 guineas, which was offered for the best beast in the yard. The winner of this prize was Mr. Robert Wright, of Nocton-heath, near Lincoln, who exhibited a magnificent pure bred roan shorthorn. The Mayor of Norwich's prize of £20, and the High Sheriff of Norfolk's prize of £15 for best heifers in the yard, were won by Mr. J. J. Colman, M.P., with a pure bred white shorthorn. Mr. Colman also won the Duke of Norfolk's plate for the best pen of lambs, and the Great Eastern Railway Company's plate for the best pen of sheep in the yard, with a pen of splendid Southdown wethers. The Prince of Wales was also a winner of a first prize in the sheep classes.

Lord Tredegar's cattle and poultry show began at Newport, Monmouthshire, on Tuesday. The number of entries were:—Cattle, 127; pens of sheep, 58; pigs, 34; horses, 113; poultry, 381 pens; pigeons, 98 cages. The amount awarded in prizes in the stock department is nearly £500, besides cups, and more than £100 in the poultry department. The highest prize for the best beast in the yard was awarded to the Marquis of Exeter's shorthorn bull Telemachus, but he found a formidable rival in Mrs. Maria Langdon's Devon bull Jonquil.

The Dorking Poultry Society held its eighteenth annual show on Thursday, five silver cups being given as prizes.

The Earl of Beaconsfield, in reply to a deputation from the Council of the Royal Agricultural Society on the subject of the recommendations of the Select Committee on Cattle Plague and the importation of live stock, said it was the intention of the Government to bring in next Session, at an early stage, a bill dealing with the matter. He declined, however, to enter into any details at present, but expressed a hope that the farmers would cheerfully co-operate in the endeavours of the Government to effect an improvement.

The great demand for foreign meat in England is inducing the American and Canadian breeders to obtain the best cattle for feeding purposes, and best adapted for their climate. Inquiries are being made in this country respecting the merits of the longhorns with a view to exportation. The breed are in high repute as a very hardy race, coming to heavy weights, sometimes weighing from a ton to 25 cwt.—they also give rich milk, and are quiet and docile in temper and habits. The longhorns are also very picturesque looking animals, their immense horns and curly coats being a great adornment to the parks of our nobility. They are kept in great purity by the Duke of Buckingham at Stowe Park, and also by Sir J. H. Crewe, Bart., of Calke Abbey. A herd book has recently been formed to record the pedigrees, the same as other breeds of cattle are. A pair of cows, descended from the herd of Mr. Chapman, which has been established 121 years, were recently sold by auction at the sale of the late Mr. Cox, of Spendon Hall, near Derby, and they realised 70 guineas each. The next sale of Mr. Chapman's herd will be on Monday next, Dec. 3.

The twenty-eighth annual Royal Berkshire Root Show was held last Saturday in the store-sheds of Messrs. Sutton and Sons, seedsmen, Reading. The display of agricultural roots is considered to be the finest ever seen. The show was divided into forty classes, all which were well represented, there being 1400 entries. There was a wonderful display of swedes and turnips. Upwards of £260 in prizes were offered for competition by Messrs. Sutton and Sons; and 3000 roots were sent to compete for the prizes offered for the description of swede known as Sutton's Champion. Mr. J. F. Burrell was the winner of the first prize. The turnip classes showed a wonderful combination of quality and weight, and some of the grey stone turnips were 4½ in. in girth. Though the season has been very untoward for the development of mangels and wurzels, there was no falling off in the specimens exhibited. The first prize was won by Mr. R. B. Blyth. Of the cabbages exhibited some gigantic specimens weighed nearly 60 lb. each, and measured 5 ft. 6 in. round. There was also an extraordinary display of potatoes and other vegetables. Viscount Eversley took the first prize for vegetables, while Mr. Walter, M.P., was a successful exhibitor in the class for potatoes.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

SIR HUNGERFORD HOSKYN, BART.

Sir Hungerford Hoskyn, eighth Baronet, of Harewood, in the county of Hereford, died at Sandwell Park, near Cheltenham, on the 21st ult. He was born Sept. 19, 1804, the eldest son of Sir Hungerford Hoskyn, seventh Baronet, by Sarah, his wife, youngest daughter of John Phillips, Esq., of Bank Hall, Lancashire, and received his education at Eton, and at Oriel College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1827 and M.A. in 1830. Sir Hungerford succeeded his father Feb. 27, 1862, and was a J.P. and D.L. for Herefordshire. He was never married, and the baronetcy (which dates from the reign of Charles II.) devolves, consequently, on his only surviving brother, now the Rev. Sir John Leigh Hoskyn, Bart., M.A., Rector of Aston Tirrold, Berks. Sir Hungerford has survived only a few months his brother, the late accomplished Mr. Wren-Hoskyn, of Wroxall Abbey.

COLONEL THE HON. A. ANSON.

Colonel the Hon. Augustus Henry Archibald Anson, V.O., died on the 17th ult. at Cannes, aged forty-two. He was born March 5, 1835, the third son of Thomas William, second Viscount Anson and first Earl of Lichfield, by Louisa Catherine, his wife, daughter of the late Nathaniel Phillips, Esq., of Slebech Hall, Pembrokeshire, and was brother to the present Earl of Lichfield, to Lady Elcho, and to Lady Vernon. Colonel Anson served with the Rifle Brigade before Sebastopol, for which he received the medal and clasp, the order of the Medjidie, and the Turkish medal. As Aide-de-Camp to General Grant he was at the siege of Delhi and relief of Lucknow, besides several other important affairs, and had the Indian medal and two clasps. For his great intrepidity and distinguished personal gallantry in the field he was given the Victoria Cross. Colonel Anson sat in Parliament for Lichfield from 1859 to 1868, and for Bewdley from 1869 to 1874, taking an active part in all Army questions. He married, Dec. 1, 1863, Amelia Maria, eldest daughter of the Right Rev. Dr. Cloughton, formerly Bishop of Rochester, now Bishop of the newly-created see of St. Albans, but leaves no issue.

The deaths have also been announced of—

John Morgan, Esq., of Brampton Park, Huntingdonshire, on the 17th ult., aged six, one.

John Greenwood, Esq., M.A., Head Master of the Grammar School, Kirkby Lonsdale, on the 20th ult., aged forty-four.

Lieutenant-Colonel John Morrisson, on the 12th ult., at Medwyn Villa, Tunbridge Wells, aged sixty-four.

H. H. R. Hewitt, Assistant Commissary-General, Ordnance Department, son of the late H. H. Hewitt, of Lichfield, on the 12th ult., at Northampton, aged forty-four.

The Rev. Thomas Astley Maberly, M.A., Rural Dean, for thirty-six years Vicar of Cuckfield, Sussex, on the 19th ult., at 14, Queen's Gate-gardens, aged 66.

Anne, daughter of the late Henry Gale, Esq., of Scruton Hall, and Mary, daughter of the late Francis Dalton, Esq., of Hawxwell Hall, in her eighty-ninth year, at Hawxwell Hall, Yorkshire.

General Alexander Anderson, C.B., Royal Marine Light Infantry, on the 21st ult., at St. Albans-place, London, aged seventy. He served with the Army of Occupation in Portugal, at Navarino in 1827, and subsequently at several important affairs in Syria.

Mr. George Darby, of Markly, Warbleton, Sussex, died on the 23rd ult. at the age of eighty-one. He was regarded as the leader of the Conservative party in East Sussex, and many years ago represented that division of the county in Parliament.

The Right Rev. Bishop Morrell died on the 22nd ult. at Clifton, in his sixty-second year. He was ordained in 1839, was Rector of Henley-on-Thames and Rural Dean from 1852 to 1863, and Coadjutor Bishop of Edinburgh from 1863 to 1869.

Hon. Theobald Fitzwalter Butler, J.P., Captain Clare Militia, on the 19th ult., at Lower Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin. He was the second son of Theobald Fitzwalter, present Lord Dunboyne, by Julia Celestina Maria, his wife, second daughter of the late William Brander, Esq., of Morden Hall, Surrey. He was never married.

William Wickham Drake, Esq., of Breakspears, Middlesex, J.P., at his seat, near Uxbridge, on the 18th ult., aged sixty-eight. He was the eldest son of the Rev. William Wickham Drake, of Malpas, by Eliza, his wife, daughter of Thomas Tarleton, Esq., of Bolesworth Castle, Cheshire, and was formerly a Captain in the 29th Regiment.

Mr. William Turner, the late Judge of the Sussex County Court, died on the 25th ult. at Hove, at the age of eighty-seven. He was a deputy-lieutenant and magistrate for the county of Sussex, and also a magistrate for the borough of Brighton. Before his recent retirement he was a member of the Committee of Judges appointed by the Treasury to frame the County Court rules.

Colonel Claud Thomas Bouchier, V.C., late of the Rifle Brigade, and Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, on the 19th ult., at Brunswick-road, Brighton, aged forty-six. He served with the Rifle Brigade in the Kaffir War 1852-3, in the Crimean War (including Alma, Balaklava, Inkerman, and Sebastopol), and in the Indian Mutiny. Colonel Bouchier received the Victoria Cross, the medal with four clasps, the Turkish medal and order of the Medjidie, and was a Knight of the Legion of Honour.

The Postmaster-General has issued a notice stating that stamped halfpenny newspaper wrappers of a better quality than those hitherto in use, which will be discontinued, will be shortly issued for sale to the public at an increased charge, single wrappers being sold at 3d.

The Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has selected Lieutenant-General Sir E. S. Smyth, K.C.M.G., commanding the Canadian Dominion Militia, and Major-General C. L. Nugent, to receive distinguished service rewards vacant by the appointment of Lieutenant-General Sir R. Waddy, K.C.B., to the Colonelcy of a regiment and the death of Major-General J. Gwilt, C.B.

The new sluice at the Middle Level Works, near Lynn, was opened on Monday. The sluice was opened by Mr. E. Fellowes, in the presence of about 200 gentlemen. The engineer is Sir John Hawkshaw, and the contractor Mr. Webster. The cost is between £40,000 and £50,000, and by it 200,000 acres are to be drained, and rivers to the extent of 200 miles. The sluice is in substitution of siphons, which will be discontinued. It is said that the Fen country of the Isle of Ely will now be safe from inundation. Mr. E. Fellowes presided at a dinner held in honour of the occasion, at which Sir John Hawkshaw and others spoke.

CHESS.

F.O.C.—Your communication, as you will perceive, has been anticipated. G.J.S.—Please examine 1. Q to K 2nd (ch), followed, if K to K 5th, by Kt to Kt 4th, and, if K to Q 5th, by B to Kt 5th. It is unfortunate, because previous to the discovery of that flaw—an irremediable one, we fear—the position had been marked for immediate insertion.

MURRAY.—The solution you ask for is as follows:—1. P to K 5th, P to B 3rd (best); 2. Kt to B sq, K move; and 3. Kt to B mate.

WATKINS, G.E., and J.S.—Problems under examination, but together with so many others that our report upon them can scarcely be made for some time.

E.H.V.—You overlook the discovered check.

N.R. (Freckenham), O.A. Pryce, W. Atkins, G.E., and Others.—No. 1760 cannot be solved in the way suggested. The defence to 1. B takes P is B to B 2nd; if, then, 2. B takes B, the reply is B to Q 4th.

A.B.S.—Received, and much obliged. Would you kindly inform us whether the game still in hand has been published anywhere. We assume not, but wish to be assured.

M.R.—Solutions correct, but omitted among the large number we have to go through.

CORRECTOR SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1760 (as rectified) received from P.S. Shenale, Cant. H.M. Pridaux, J. De Honsteyn, J. Sowden, F.V.P. Paul's Roster, T.R.Y. J. Wontone, R.H. Brooks, R.J.N. H.A.N. WHITE. BLACK. WHITE. BLACK.
1. R takes P at K 2nd B to Q 4th* 2. R to B 5th Any move
3d 3. Mates accordingly.
• If 1. B to Kt sq, White continues with 2. R to K 5th and mates on the next move; while if 1. B takes B, the reply is 2. R to B 4th and 3. Kt mates.

PROBLEM No. 1768.

By FRANK C. COLLINS.

BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in two moves.

THE LATE MR. DE VERE.

Brief as is the period that has elapsed since the premature death of Mr. De Vere, it has been hitherto supposed that no recorded games of his remained to be gathered in. He was not one to take any pains to preserve even the finest efforts of his genius, as he was in every respect careless in the matter of reputation. However, it has happened that Mr. S. J. Stevens took down two games played by him against the deceased in November, 1873, in the City of London Chess Club Handicap of that year. We beg to acknowledge Mr. Stevens's courtesy in forwarding to us these games, and lose no time in making them public.

(Pawn and two Moves. Remove Black's K B P.)

It is obvious that Black, though not losing his Queen, would get a very bad game by taking the Rook.

Between the same Players, at the same odds.—(Remove Black's K B P.)

13. P takes B	P to Q R 3rd
14. B to R 4th	P to Q Kt 4th
15. B to Kt 3rd	Kt to K 2nd

Very far from good; nor was his previous move, though safe enough, equal to bringing out the K B to Q 3rd. It must be observed, however, that in 1873 Mr. Stevens lacked experience; whereas he is now one of the strongest players of the third class in the City of London Club.

This timely advance destroys Black's chance of winning. At the same time, we do not find any defect in Mr. De Vere's play. He had won back the Pawn, and was accumulating a promising attack; but the position of his King nullifies such advantage as he has on the left wing.

24. Q to Kt 5th	K to K sq
25. Q to R 7th (ch)	K to B 2nd
26. Q to Kt 8th (ch)	K to B 2nd and the game was eventually drawn.

CHESS INTELLIGENCE.

At a preliminary meeting of the newly-formed British Chess Problem Association, held on the 23rd ult., it was resolved that a problem tourney among the members should take place in 1878 upon the following conditions:—Each competitor to send in one set (under a motto) of three problems consisting of from two to four moves, at his option; sets by composers living in this country to be sent in on or before April 30, and by those residing abroad on or before June 1; the prizes to be according to the receipts—namely, 50 per cent for the first, 30 per cent for the second, and the remainder to be equally divided amongst the best two, three, and four move problems not included in either of the prize sets. The following appointments (pro tem) were made:—viz. of Mr. V. T. Pierce, 42, Park Crescent, Brighton, as hon. treasurer, and of Mr. J. Paul Taylor, 63, Malvern-road, Dalston, as hon. secretary. Subscriptions are to be sent to the treasurer, and competition sets to the secretary.

PARIS TO-DAY.

The struggle now going on in France is watched with so much interest in England that even the roughest notes of eye-witnesses on the character of the people whose destinies hang on it are welcome; so many of the doings of its principal actors, and the way in which these doings are so often received by the nation, are so strange to English minds that one asks what manner of men the French are—whether they are in art, science, and religion what they seem to be in politics, or whether politics are only an amusement for the frothiest part of the nation?

One cannot answer such questions in a line or two—perhaps not in a volume or two; and an Englishman is not bound—as a Frenchman seems to consider himself—to have a neat, compact, logical (and absurd) theory always ready for production on every conceivable subject. Compared to such a theory, little isolated facts—which are all I can pretend to offer—are like a few dozen bricks compared to Cleopatra's Needle; they are not nearly so showy, so picturesque, so complete; but they are not absolutely useless, and they may one day form part of a good, sound, water-tight house.

A dweller in Paris in 1877, watching the daily life of the people, very soon comes to understand how it is that the rulers of France dare such things as they do; what very different subjects theirs are to our own really more or less "free and independent" voters. Clothe a Frenchman in ever so little brief authority—make him only a sergent de ville or an official in a public picture-gallery—and he there and then becomes a tyrant, and people there and then submit quietly to everything he chooses to do or say. I was at the great review in July, and stood next a young French gentleman, of high spirit and (one would have said) naturally great independence; but the way he and the rest of the crowd let the sentinels order them about and keep them in their places made an Englishman very quickly lose his temper. As for daring to "chaff" the said sentinels, I should have liked to see one languid young swell, one impudent gamin, attempt the rallery a British policeman has always to endure, and nearly always endures so good-temperedly.

This is the sort of sight to be seen in Paris at the present time, any day of the week, under the Republic—and under, I really believe, any Republic, whether headed by MacMahon, or Thiers, or Grévy, or Gambetta. Scene, a street; or, to give the details of an actual case, the eastern end of the Boulevard St. Germain. A small crowd is collected, and people are looking round as they pass—which means very little, for your Parisian is much more inquisitive, and has (apparently) much more time on his hands than your Londoner. The centre of attraction is two sergents de ville dragging along a man in a blouse—probably a drunkard or a pickpocket—by his hair, thumping him the while with their fists to make him go faster! None of the respectable bystanders interfere: no one remonstrates except one woman, who is forthwith pursued by a sergent, who runs after her in a heavy-booted, ungainly way, and draws his sword, scowling and swearing as if he were quite in the mood to use it seriously.

I described this little scene to the landlord of a students' hotel hard by; he listened with polite attention, and then said he did not find it "ridiculous"—he could not see where the joke lay! Of course, he said, no respectable man would think of interfering in behalf of a ruffian in a blouse; the fellow was probably a drunkard, and if he was not—tant pis pour lui! This representative of the middle class spoke of the mob, the canaille, as I have never heard an Englishman, thoroughly and vulgarly aristocratic as we are.

Yet a Frenchman speaks to a costermonger politely, as he should, and is answered politely, without either surliness or grovelling respect; each calls the other monsieur—neither would, I believe, call Marshal MacMahon more. There is not that constant fear of "lowering oneself" that we have; nor is there, by-the-by, that correspondent fear of making oneself ridiculous. A Frenchman, as he capers about at a place of public amusement, heartily enjoying himself and making other people enjoy themselves, may look very foolish to an Englishman—especially if his figure be not adapted for graceful capering; but the Englishman, in his supercilious boredom, may be quite sure that he himself looks ten times as foolish to the French, and not nearly one tenth so agreeable.

The French like amusing themselves, and the French like to talk; and these two things, I believe, influence their politics. That they should like to talk is natural; they do it so admirably. One occasionally hears an Englishman talk well—but very seldom; and I think one great reason of this is his fear of long words. He often resorts to slang, simply to avoid a "bookish" word; and he thus leaves unused one half of his language. In French, one can be clear without being in the least pedantic; one can talk "like a book"—or, shall I say, like a well-written comedy?—without seeming at all unnatural or affected.

Indeed, this fear of affectation, this compound of modesty and mock-modesty, is purely and only English. If a Frenchman knows a thing, he says it, whatever it is; he does not think that people will suppose he wants to parade his knowledge—and, besides, he does want to parade his knowledge, very much. If he has an opinion, the idea that it is valueless, or that he ought to pretend to think it so, never occurs to him. Credo, ergo est, he would say. He talks before a roomful of strangers without the slightest shyness; he is utterly at a loss to understand that amour propre britannique which makes an Englishman unwilling to air his blunders in a foreign language—and he is to a great extent right. Finally, he talks about everything—art (with some feeling, at least, if not always with knowledge), religion (he is generally an entire, if a shallow, sceptic), the most difficult questions of morals, the broadest political difficulties; except, indeed, when, as is too often the case, he suspects that there may be an agent of the secret police within earshot.

These three things—their submission to any sort of government (which proceeds partly from their faith in it: they expect their Government to do a hundred things which we should do for ourselves), their fondness for being amused, and their love of talk—account for many things in their recent history. What they have endured from their present rulers I need not say. Fancy not being allowed to ask twenty people to dinner without official permission! And their love of amusement and talk accounts, at least in part, for the frothy, flashy, theatrical style of even their great debates. It all tickles and excites them—Victor Hugo's absurd parodies of algebraic formulas; Cassagnac's atrocious Old Bailey vulgarities, Gambetta's smart retorts. There is a great deal of cleverness in a French debate; but it will never make history, it will never make poetry; it wants dignity, genuineness, common sense. A future Shakespeare could make nothing of it, great though the importance of the issues involved in it may be. The best portion of the Republican party are acting with a quiet strength, a reserve, they have never shown before; but they cannot shake off in a few months the old inherited vice of style. In the "leaders" of their best journals, in the speeches of their best men, you feel that their one chief object is ever to make points, to be clever, to amuse.

MARAVILLA COCOA.—The "Globe" says,

"MARAVILLA COCOA has achieved a thorough success, and surpasses every other cocoa in the market. Entire solubility, a delicate aroma, and a rare concentration of the purest elements of nutrition, distinguish the Maravilla Cocoa above all others. For invalids, dyspeptics, and consumers of Cocoa in general, we could not recommend a more agreeable or valuable beverage."

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1877.

The first Message of Mr. Hayes, President of the United States, to Congress, read on Monday last, appeared in a summarised form in the British daily papers of Tuesday. Curiosity, as well on the other side of the Atlantic as on this, had been on the alert to ascertain what would be the drift of this document. Presidential Messages are usually sui generis, and assume no very attractive aspect to those who dwell on the hither side of the ocean. The present generation of readers, perhaps, can recall but one or two that have made any abiding impression upon their minds. The Message of Mr. Hayes, if we have a faithful epitome of it, which there is no reason to doubt, will not add to the number. It is sensible, calm in tone, elaborate in diction, and deals with most of the topics on which it treats in a straightforward spirit. It will very possibly, we think we may even say probably, satisfy the expectations of a vast majority of the United States public outside the circle of professional politicians. It will certainly begot no ill-will in any foreign country. It is chiefly domestic in the subjects it comprises, and these, so far as they are discussed and so far as can be judged of by a summarised reproduction, have been commented upon with a view rather to meet the demands of reason than to obviate the objections of Party. So far, of course, the Message has its interest on this side of the water. In other respects, and chiefly in regard to the main purpose at which it aims, it is rather adapted to touch the political susceptibilities of Americans than of Englishmen.

There are one or two passages which have special reference to ourselves, and it is gratifying to note the friendly spirit which pervades them. In regard to the different interpretations put upon the late Extradition Treaty by the Governments of the United States and Great Britain, it is remarked that the question is not one which ought to be allowed to disturb the friendship of the two countries, or to frustrate justice in either of them. The Canadian Fisheries Award, it is announced, will soon be communicated to Congress; but whether with a recommendation that it be accepted is not stated. A Treaty with Great Britain protecting Trade Marks has already been submitted to the Senate. These are minor points; as are also others relating to France, Germany, Spain, and Mexico. But all of them are referred to in a tone of conciliation, and in an entire freedom from that tone of bitterness, even menace, which in times within our remembrance usually disfigured Presidential Messages when discussing foreign affairs. There is not the least reason to doubt that in this respect Mr. Hayes reflects the true feeling of the great majority of his fellow-citizens.

The two principal subjects of the Presidential Message relate to the policy which he has pursued since his installation for the pacification of the Southern States and the steps that he recommends in relation to the currency. The first matter is one of prime importance. It will be remembered that Mr. Hayes was the Republican candidate at the last election, and that he was seated in the Presidential Chair by certain proceedings of the Senate which, perhaps, severe discussion would hardly fail to condemn. Personally, he had little control over these proceedings. But he seems to have made up his mind to pursue a course of policy towards the South which his Republican supporters would certainly not have suggested, and which was almost diametrically opposed to that favoured by Mr. Grant's Administration. Giving an account of his own Measures, he says that they were "in harmony with the circumstances and with the Constitution and genius of the people. The beneficent results," he continues, "already apparent demonstrate their justice and effectiveness. Outrages have ceased, political turmoil has disappeared, industries have been resumed, and Southern credit has been strengthened. Time," he confidently anticipates, "will furnish ample vindication of the policy of the Government." Nor do we think he is too sanguine. Some relaxation of that severity with which the rebel States were treated under the rule of the Republicans was strongly recommended by generosity if not by justice; and generosity, when not exercised at the expense of justice, must always be considered at one with sound policy. President Hayes does not intend that the two sentiments shall be allowed to run into collision. He tells the Legislature that "the rights and persons of the emancipated race must be firmly protected," and that to this end all the executive powers of the Government will be exerted.

The other great point dealt with in the Presidential Message is that of the Currency. Here also his intentions seem to be based upon enlightened principles. "The policy of Specie resumption should be pursued by all suitable means. No legislation should disparage or retard it, as any wavering in purpose or unsteadiness of methods would only increase the disturbance in values, which, unless relieved, must end in disorder, dishonour, and financial disaster to the Government and people, particularly to the industrious classes, who need money of fixed value, which only the resumption of specie payment can give." Mr. Hayes, while favouring the remonetization of silver under certain conditions, which he thinks would facilitate the resumption of specie payments, distinctly abides by his previous declarations in favour of paying bonds in gold. To pay in coin of less value would involve a violation of public faith, which would work irreparable injury to the public credit, and, therefore, he recommends that any legislation providing for silver coinage should exempt the public debt from the payment of either principal or interest in coinage of less value than the present gold coinage of the country. In regard to this matter, the President will probably be able to control without serious difficulty the legislation of the Union. The Democratic majorities which are likely to pronounce against his policy in the House of Representatives—and before long perhaps in the Senate also—are not sufficient to override his veto, which, on this question, public opinion may be expected to sustain. The question, undoubtedly, is one of immense importance to the population of the United States, and, indirectly, to the industries of Europe. There is hence matter for congratulation that on the currency question at least the policy of the existing Administration, besides being sound, will be carried into effect.

As to Civil Service Reform, Mr. Hayes, it would seem, says but little. He adheres to his former views, which, he declares, have been confirmed by experience. He recommends the revival of a Civil Service Commission; and he tells the Houses of Legislature that it had been his purpose to proceed with the hearty co-operation of both. There is evidently, however, "a lion in the way," and he has heard its roar. Civil Service Reform is not a favourite topic with party politicians. If thoroughly carried into effect, the result would be that their occupation would be gone. They are already beginning to reason against it—as the slaveholders, towards the end of their career, argued against Negro emancipation. The country, they say, could not stand the immense changes which would thereby be effected. Both Republicans and Democrats have agreed to the theory of a non-political Civil Administration. But, on approaching the question with a view to practice, it presents itself to them in a far different aspect.

Lord Skelmersdale was on Tuesday night nominated for the office of Grand Master of the Mark Degree in Freemasonry.

The Duke of Abercorn, Grand Master of the Irish Freemasons, reopened the Dublin Masonic Hall on Wednesday afternoon. More than four hundred distinguished Masons were present, and there was a full procession of grand officers.

Mr. J. J. Grieve, M.P. for Greenock, has placed his resignation in the hands of his constituents. In an address he has issued he says he seeks repose on account of weak health. Several members have addressed their constituents this week.—Sir David Wedderburn was on Monday night adopted as the Liberal candidate for Devonport, at a crowded meeting of Liberal electors. Both Sir David and Mr. J. D. Lewis, the other candidate, gave addresses and were well received.

THE COURT.

The Queen gave a dance to the servants and gillies on the Royal estate yesterday week at Balmoral Castle. Her Majesty and Princess Beatrice were present for a short time, with the ladies and gentlemen of the household. Dr. Robertson, who had been on a visit, left the castle on Saturday. The Queen and Princess Beatrice attended Divine service on Sunday at Crathie church. The Rev. Archibald Campbell officiated. Lord John Manners and the Rev. A. Campbell dined with her Majesty. Lord John Manners left the castle on Monday.

The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice and Prince Leopold, left Balmoral on Wednesday for the south. Prince Leopold, who was accompanied by his medical attendants, is somewhat better. The Royal travellers drove to Ballater, where a guard of honour of the Royal Scots Fusilier Guards, under command of Major Bainbridge, was in attendance. The Queen proceeded by special train, via Aberdeen and the Bridge of Dun, to Perth, where dinner was served in the station refreshment-rooms. The journey was resumed shortly after seven, and her Majesty arrived at Windsor Castle on Thursday morning.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The thirty-third anniversary of the birthday of the Princess of Wales was celebrated by a county ball given by the Prince and Princess at Sandringham on the previous evening. On the birthday their Royal Highnesses, with their numerous guests, drove to Anmer, the seat of Mr. H. W. Coldham, and attended the meet of the West Norfolk hounds. At Norwich and King's Lynn the church bells rang during the day in honour of the occasion. The annual tea to the children of the various schools was postponed owing to illness being prevalent in the surrounding villages. The birthday party of guests broke up on Monday, and the Prince left Sandringham on a visit to the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh and the Maharanee at Elvedon Hall, Thetford.

His Royal Highness has sent presents of game to the metropolitan hospitals for the patients.

The Duke of Connaught was last week the guest of Lord and Lady Fermoy, at Caherguillamore, County Limerick.

The ex-King and Queen of Naples have arrived at Park View, Towcester, from the Continent, for the hunting season.

The Crown Prince of Hanover arrived at Ragley Hall on Tuesday, on a visit to the Marquis and Marchioness of Hertford.

The Duke and Duchess of St. Albans have arrived at Mr. Bernal Osborne's seat, Newtown Anner, County Tipperary.

The Duke of Northumberland has arrived in Grosvenor-place from Alnwick Castle.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Headfort and Lady Adelaide Tylour have left Grafton-street for Headford House, Kells, Ireland.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Bristol have arrived at Luton Hoo, Beds, on a visit to Mrs. Gerard Leigh, from Ickworth Park.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Bute have returned to Scotland.

The Marquis of Kildare has arrived on Carlton House-terrace from Carlton House, Maynooth.

The Earl and Countess of Breadalbane have left Paris en route for Egypt.

Sir Curtis and Lady Lampson have celebrated their golden wedding at Rowfant, Sussex. Among the presents received was a handsome silver-gilt salver, bearing the following inscription:—"Presented to Sir Curtis and Lady Lampson, by the household, outdoor servants, and others on the estate, on the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding-day, Nov. 20, 1877." Another present was a silver-gilt goblet, subscribed for by the employees of Sir Curtis at his London house of business.

ROYAL NATIONAL LIFE-BOAT INSTITUTION.

A meeting of this institution was held on Thursday, at its house, John-street, Adelphi. The silver medal was voted to Mr. Robert Wilds, coxswain of the North Deal life-boat, in acknowledgment of his general gallant services in the boat, and particularly for his intrepid conduct in the life-boat on the 11th ult. The second service clasp of the institution was awarded to Mr. William Grant, coxswain of the Margate life-boat, and double the ordinary reward to himself and boat's crew, in acknowledgment of their gallant services in saving the crew of fifteen men from the barque Hero, of North Shields, and assisting into harbour the distressed schooner Louisa, of Weymouth, during the storm of the 25th ult. Rewards amounting to £718 were granted to the crews of other life-boats, for numerous services performed by them during the severe gales experienced on our coasts in the past month. Payments to the extent of £5900 were likewise made on various life-boat establishments. Mrs. Hargreaves, of Cleygate, has given £900 to defray the cost of a life-boat establishment. The late Miss M. Anderson, of Leamington, has bequeathed the institution £500; the late Madame Polak, of Brussels, £100; and the late Miss M. A. Christmas, of Yarmouth, £50. A new life-boat has been forwarded to Port Patrick, N.B.

Mr. W. A. Downing, M.A., of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge, has been appointed Head Master of the Grammar School at Taunton.

Mount Stuart, the Scotch residence of the Marquis of Bute, near Rothesay, was on Monday almost wholly destroyed by fire. A large amount of property was saved, including most of the valuable paintings in the picture-gallery.

The Leeds Mercury says that the Vicar of Doncaster, the Hon. and Rev. E. Carr Glyn, on Monday morning, at half-past five o'clock—dark, damp, and dismal as the weather was—was noticed standing at the coffee-stall near one of the chief entrances to the Great Northern Railway Plant Works, vending cups of hot coffee to such of the passing workmen as desired that refreshment. Mr. Glyn is an ardent promoter of the temperance movement, and the stall in question is in connection with the Church of England Temperance Society.

The Hyderabad, 1350 tons, Captain Holmwood, chartered by Sir Arthur Blyth, K.C.M.G., the Agent-General for South Australia, left Plymouth on the 25th ult. for Port Adelaide, with 407 emigrants, among whom were seventy-six single female domestic servants.—The following vessels dispatched by Sir Julius Vogel, the Agent-General for New Zealand, in the months of July and August, with emigrants for that colony, are reported to have arrived safely at their destinations:—The Wairoa, the Otaki, the Rataura, the Rangitiki, and the Marlborough. A letter, dated Oct. 1, lat. 19.30 S., long. 27.0 W., has been received from the surgeon-superintendent of the ship Waitara, which vessel left Plymouth with emigrants on Aug. 24, stating that the voyage had been a safe one, and that all on board were well.—The Agent-General for Queensland has been advised by telegram of the safe arrival at Brisbane of the Roxburghshire, which sailed from Glasgow on July 5; and of the Newcastle, which sailed from London on July 20.

At Diss church, Norfolk, choral services have been held on the occasion of the reopening of the chancel and a new organ.

The Bishop of Ely reopened on Wednesday Granchester church, well known to Cambridge men throughout the country.

A clock, with three dials and a bell, has been presented to Croxley-green church, Herts, by Mrs. Brooke, in memory of her late husband, Major-General James Croft Brooke, C.B.

The parish church at Christleton, Chester, which has recently been restored, under the direction of Mr. Butterfield, has had a beautiful west window presented in memory of Mrs. Lace, of Christleton Old Hall, a lady well known and much beloved. The subject is "Christ Blessing Little Children," and Mr. Gibbs is the artist.

At the last meeting of the board of management of the Bishop of London's Fund it was reported that during the present year there had been a falling off of more than £5000 in the ordinary income. The committee, however, think it hardly desirable to make any special effort on behalf of the fund at the present moment.

The new nave of St. Mary's, Boston Spa, of which the Rev. W. R. Villiers is Vicar, was opened for Divine worship on Sunday, the 25th ult. The reconstruction of the church was begun in 1872, and the portion left incomplete includes the western tower and the north aisle, which remain as they were built in 1850. The cost has been £5000, and about £3000 is still required. Mr. Parkinson, of Leeds, is the architect.

Last week the Archbishop of York held his triennial visitation at York, Doncaster, and Sheffield; but he delivered his charge to the clergy in private. The Yorkshire Daily Post understands that "two of the subjects to which the most rev. prelate made special reference were disestablishment and the Earl of Harrowby's Burials Bill. He strongly supported the latter measure, and counselled the clergy to do the same, believing that disestablishment should be resisted through the Church itself, and not through the churchyard. After his address, which was a very powerful one, his Grace invited discussion, in which various members of the clergy took part.

MR. H. M. STANLEY IN AFRICA.

The enterprising American traveller, jointly commissioned by the New York Herald and the Daily Telegraph to explore the interior of Africa, has been no stranger to the British public since his former interesting achievement, in overtaking and helping Dr. Livingstone on the shores of Lake Tanganyika. Mr. Stanley's more recent performances, in the vast course of adventurous and perilous wanderings, from November, 1874, to August of this year, between the east coast, opposite Zanzibar, and Loanda, on the west coast of Africa, including the great inland waters of Lakes Victoria Nyanza and Albert Nyanza, with Lake Alexandra, the River Lualaba, and the mighty Congo, which he has completely explored, are known to us in outline from his letters already published. He arrived at Cape Town, on Oct. 22, in H.M.S. Industry, from St. Paul de Loanda, accompanied by his native African followers, with whom he returns by sea to their home at or near Zanzibar, before he will come to England—a sacrifice of personal comfort, and perhaps of pecuniary advantage, to sentiments of generosity and fidelity, for which he deserves no slight credit. We shall look forward to bidding him an admiring welcome in London early next year, and the fullest particulars of his wonderful journeyings, with valuable additions to geographical and ethnological science, will then be laid before our learned societies, and no doubt will finally be printed in two or three handsome volumes. In the mean time, we are furnished with a set of photographs by Mr. S. R. Barnard, of Cape Town, from which is drawn our illustration of a group consisting of Mr. Stanley and several of his principal native followers. It will be observed that Mr. Stanley's hair has become quite grey, from the fatigues, anxieties, and attacks of fever and dysentery which he has lately suffered, though he is not yet forty years of age.

Handel's "Judas Maccabæus" will be given on Friday next, at Exeter Hall, by the Sacred Harmonic Society, Madame Sherrington, Miss Julia Elton, Miss Julia Wigan, Mr. Vernon Rigby, and Mr. Lewis Thomas being the vocalists.—The forty-fifth annual Christmas performance of "The Messiah" will take place on the following Friday, the 21st inst., when Mr. Santley will sing the principal bass music; Mrs. Osgood, Miss Julia Elton, and Mr. Vernon Rigby being the other principal vocalists. Sir Michael Costa will conduct both performances.

Mr. Goschen, M.P., in distributing the prizes at the Liverpool Institute, warned the students against the dangers of a too utilitarian education, and insisted on other tests as to the value of the studies they followed besides their direct and immediate bearing on their prospects for life. Education must do more than enable them to earn their bread. He wanted it to ennoble, to brighten, and to beautify their lives; and he held that the cultivation of the imaginative faculties amongst all classes whom such education could reach was not only important to the young themselves as increasing their happiness, but important to the nation, as qualifying them to become better citizens, and to fit them to take a useful as well as a noble part in their national duties.

THE WAR: RUSSIAN WINTER QUARTERS FOR HORSES ON AN ISLAND OF THE DANUBE BETWEEN SISTOVA AND SIMNITZA.

ISLANDS OF THE DANUBE AND WINTER QUARTERS, WITH CONTINUATION OF THE RUSSIAN BRIDGES FROM SIMNITZA TO SISTOVA.
FROM SKETCHES BY ONE OF OUR SPECIAL ARTISTS.

THE NEW TURKISH IRONCLAD PAYK-I-SHERREF

THE PAYKI SHEREEF.

This ship, an ironclad corvette with twin screw-propellers, bears a Turkish name, having been built for the Sultan's Government by Messrs. Samuda Brothers, before the obligations of neutrality in the present war forbade English ship-builders to supply additions to the Ottoman naval forces. The dimensions of this vessel are—Length, 245 ft.; beam, 52 ft.; depth, 22 ft.; displacement, 4700 tons. She has a central battery, in which she carries four 25-ton Armstrong guns, so arranged as to command an all-round fire, and when firing broadside to concentrate their fire within sixty yards of the vessel's side. The thickness of armour is 12 in. amidships, diminished, as usual, towards the ends, and extending from 5 ft. below the water-line to the main deck, which is entirely covered with armour 3 in. thick over engines and boilers, and 2 in. thick beyond. The side armour also reaches to the top of the central battery, which it entirely encircles. One important feature in the ship is her extreme handiness and quickness in answering the helm. In testing this quality the vessel was found to make the entire circle in a diameter of 420 yards, with engines going full speed, in 3 min. 30 sec.

THE WAR.

The Map of Western Bulgaria, which fills one page of our Supplement, helps to show the strategic importance of the military events during the past week. It is to the west of Plevna, or rather to the south-west, where the Etropol Balkans, at the Baba Konak Pass, afford strong positions commanding the road between Orkhanieh and Sofia, that Mahomet Ali Pasha withstands the progress of the Russian arms. The town of Plevna, with Osman Pasha's fortified positions there, does not appear in our Map, but will be understood to lie beyond its eastern limit, more to the right hand of the reader inspecting the Map, the river Vid, flowing towards Plevna, being there distinctly shown. We announced last week the capture of Etropol by the Russians, and their attack upon the position of Mahomet Ali Pasha near Orkhanieh, at a place called Wratchesh or Wretschisk in recent telegrams, but which will be found in our Map by the name of Vrachesi. There has been a good deal more fighting at that place, as well as in the Konak Pass, and at Kamirli or Kamarli, to the south of Konak; but the result is yet undecided at the time of our present writing, on Thursday afternoon. At Slatitz, which is likewise marked in our Map, in its lower right-hand corner, the Russians occupied a mountain pass on Monday last. Their operations hitherto reported, under the direction of General Gourko, are but preliminary to their intended attack on the Turkish position of Baba Konak, which may prove to be quite as difficult a task as that of securing the Shipka Pass.

In another quarter, to the south-east of Tirnova, near the Balkans, a detachment of Suleiman Pasha's army has gained a signal success, which may have an embarrassing effect on the Russian movements. This is the capture of Elena, achieved last Tuesday, with a conflict in which three thousand Russians were killed or wounded, eleven guns and twenty ammunition waggons taken, with a quantity of arms and stores, and three hundred Russian prisoners. If this should be followed by the capture of Tirnova, the ancient Bulgarian capital, on the road to Gabrova and the Shipka Pass, the Turks will have done much to oppose a firm barrier to the Russian invasion.

The latest news on Thursday, from the Turkish side, was that Fuad Pasha is close upon Tirnova, and Chakir Pasha threatening the Russian position at Etropol; and the Russians are stated to have been repulsed at Kamarli, with a loss of 800 men, on Monday last. On the river Lom, it is said, Suleiman Pasha has taken Popkoi, and is advancing towards Biela. There is no further news of Osman Pasha's condition at Plevna; it is doubted whether his provisions will hold out. The Prince of Serbia has publicly declared himself about to take the field once more against Turkey.

The Russian siege of Erzerum has not yet begun in earnest, and it is believed that the winter forbids a continuance of active operations in Asia.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Sanguine hopes were entertained on Monday that the political troubles would speedily come to an end. Marshal MacMahon having had interviews with the Duc d'Audiffret-Pasquier, M. Grévy, and M. Dufaure, it was naturally assumed that such conferences would lead to a satisfactory result. But all hope of a conciliatory Cabinet being formed fell to the ground on Tuesday. A semi-official note was published on that day announcing that hitherto the efforts of the President of the Republic to form a conciliatory Ministry from Parliament had been impeded by the preliminary conditions proposed to him of assembling a Congress to discuss the article of the Constitution authorising the Executive Power to dissolve the Chamber with the sanction of the Senate. These conditions the President considered unacceptable. On arriving at the Chamber the Deputies found this note placarded on the walls of the lobbies. It was at once considered by the Left as a declaration of war, and the Budget Committee resolved to accept it without delay. M. Jules Ferry got into the tribune, and read a declaration that the Budget Committee considered that to detach the direct taxes from the rest of the Budget would involve a question of principle, and even of Parliamentary government. He added that the majority would only grant a Budget to a Parliamentary majority, and that until further notice the Budget Committee would not make any report upon the direct taxes. In the discussion which followed, M. Rouher moved that the Committee should be requested to submit its reports as promptly as possible, and that the discussion should take place on Thursday. He asked for urgency for his motion, but this was refused him by 328 votes to 197, and the proposal was then referred to the Bureaux.

The political sky brightened a little again on Thursday, when negotiations between Marshal MacMahon and M. Dufaure were stated to have been resumed in consequence of steps taken by M. Batbie. The Orleanist Organ, Le Soleil, of Thursday states that M. Dufaure consents to form a Cabinet, but is not himself willing to accept office. A special telegram to the Full Mail Gazette on Thursday says:—"A change for the better has taken place in the situation of affairs. Hopes are now entertained that the Marshal will take a Parliamentary Cabinet, to be composed of such men as MM. Dufaure, Batbie, Waddington, and Léon Say. The Liberal Committee of Eighteen is in favour of such a combination as this."

The Budget Committee held a meeting on Wednesday evening, at which it was resolved to propose to the Chamber to apply the surplus for 1878 in reducing several items of taxation. The Committee has finished its report upon all the Ministerial Budgets.

In the Senate a motion has been carried for the appointment of a Committee of Inquiry into the cause of the present stagnation of commerce and the consequent distress entailed upon a large portion of the industrious classes. Two vacant seats were on Monday filled, with the result of leaving the strength of parties exactly as before. On Tuesday two vacant life senatorships were filled up with Conservatives, M. de Larcy receiving 146 and M. Ferdinand Barrot 142 votes, against 133 given for M. Lefranc and 130 for M. Andrea.

On Wednesday M. Welche, Minister of the Interior, received the staff of his department, all the chief administrative bodies, and the Mayor of Paris. He assured his visitors that the Government desired to promote the interests of trade and to respect the rights of all. Addressing the Stockbrokers' Association, he said that the Government of Marshal MacMahon was not a coup d'état Government, but was one resolved to respect the Law, the Constitution, and the Republic.

A second deputation of merchants waited upon Marshal MacMahon on Monday, but, as he was presiding at a Cabinet Council, they were received by an aide-de-camp. The latter, in the name of the Marshal, told them that, as their representations referred to the present state of trade, they should address their communications to the Minister of Commerce.

General Grant left Paris for Lyons on Saturday last, having paid a farewell visit to Marshal MacMahon on the previous day.

M. Drouyn de Lhuys has resigned his position as President of the Agricultural Society, as the state of his health incapacitates him from fulfilling the duties.

Sir William Thomson has been appointed a foreign member and associate of the Academy of Sciences by 27 to 25 votes obtained by M. Van Beneden, President of the Academy of Brussels.

The Institute has awarded a gold medal, "The Volney Prize," to the Rev. C. F. Schön, of Chatham, for his valuable works in the Hansa language.

The city of Paris has accepted a gift of 10,000f. from Madame Hesse, a widow, to establish a prize of filial virtue, to be given annually in the second arrondissement, to a girl of from twelve to fifteen years of age, who shall have distinguished herself by duty to her parents.

A new Japanese mission has arrived at Paris, its chief being Maeda, who is almost a European. Part of his student's career was passed in France, closing with three years of law at the Poitiers University. The mission is composed of eleven high dignitaries of Japan.

The death at Passy is announced of the Marquis de Las Cases, formerly a naval officer, a Deputy, and Chamberlain of Napoleon III., aged sixty-six; and of Dr. Barthe, one of the most eminent members of the Paris faculty, and principal physician to M. Thiers in latter years, aged sixty-five.

A duel was fought on Sunday morning at Châtillon, near Paris, between Baron de la Rochette and M. Laisant. They fought with pistols. Both were seriously wounded. On Monday a duel with swords took place near Marseilles between two journalists, M. Clovis Hugues, of the Jeune République, and M. Daymès, of the Aigle. The latter was wounded in the chest, and died in the carriage which was conveying him back to the city.

ITALY.

Baron Ricasoli has been received by the King, who has conferred with him on the Parliamentary situation and the state of foreign politics.

The Senate on Tuesday passed a bill abolishing imprisonment for debt, and also approved a bill granting to women the right of giving evidence in legal proceedings or documents which are of a public or private character.

The Chamber of Deputies voted the Home Budget last Saturday by 159 to 87. Signor Nicotera, Minister of the Interior, in the course of the discussion said that brigandage was destroyed in Sicily. A great blow had been dealt to the Mafia and Camorra secret societies, and public safety was almost completely restored.

The Pope was able on Wednesday, notwithstanding his severe illness, to receive several Cardinals. It is stated that, though his symptoms are of an alarming character, his mental powers are unaffected.

GERMANY.

In the Prussian Diet on Wednesday Herr Richter demanded an account of the administration of the property of King George of Hanover. He charged the Government with employing these funds for corrupt purposes. Herr Camphausen replied that they consisted of interest-bearing securities, and that the substance of the fortune was untouched; but the Government would not modify its position until King George ceased to instigate hostile proceedings against Prussia.

The German Government has informed the Swiss Federal Council that, subject to the ratification of the German Parliament, it will contribute a further sum of ten millions of francs towards the cost of constructing the St Gothard Railway.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

In Sunday's sitting of the Chamber of Deputies at Vienna Herr Dürnbürger moved that article 1 of the convention between the Austrian and Hungarian Ministers of Finance and the Bank be referred back to the Committee for the purpose of finally solving the question as to the proposition of the debt of 80,000,000 fl. due to the Bank which should be borne by each half of the Monarchy. The Minister of Finance assented to the motion, which was passed by the House.

In Monday's sitting of the Lower House of the Hungarian Diet the Government introduced a bill for prolonging the application of the military law till the end of 1879.

On Wednesday the Delegations met at Vienna, the Austrian at one p.m. and the Hungarian at five p.m. These preliminary meetings were engaged with the election of presidents, vice-presidents, and secretaries, as well as with the appointment of the different committees. Count Andrassy, in the name of the Common Ministry, presented the Estimates for 1878 for the Army, Navy, and Foreign Affairs.

Henri de Tourville, who was sentenced to death for the murder of his wife in the Tyrol, has obtained a commutation of his sentence, and he is now condemned to eighteen years' imprisonment in the fortress of Gradiska.

AMERICA.

President Hayes on Monday sent to Congress his annual Message, an abstract of which has been telegraphed. The President, at the outset of his address, declares that the complete and permanent pacification of the country remains the most important of all the national interests, and calls on all good citizens to co-operate in the work. The Message then refers to the resumption of specie payments as a measure which should be carried out by all suitable means. While favouring a bi-metallic currency, it strongly advocates the payment of bonds in gold. Among other subjects referred to in the Message are Civil Service Reform, the foreign relations of the United States, and the question of extradition with this country, upon which question, it is announced, the two Governments are agreed.

Last Saturday morning the Senate, after fourteen hours' session, compromised the political dispute by admitting both Kellogg and Butler. This adds one vote to each party in the Senate, leaving them relatively the same as before. The Senate has passed, with some slight amendments, the bill for enabling the United States to take part in the Paris Exhibition.

A Democratic Legislature has been elected in Georgia. There was no opposition candidate.

The appointment of Mr. Harlan to the judgeship of the Supreme Court has been confirmed.

Mr. John Welsh, the American Minister to England, sailed from New York for Liverpool in the White Star Line steamer Adriatic last Saturday, amid great demonstrations of esteem.

The public debt of the United States was decreased in November by 1,324,000 dols.

CANADA.

A telegram from Ottawa states that the Earl of Dufferin is not expected to leave Canada until next autumn, and that the Duke of Manchester is mentioned there as his probable successor in the Governor-Generalship.

A despatch received at New York from Victoria (Vancouver Island) reports the discovery of a rich and extensive gold quartz ledge in the Cariboo district of British Columbia.

INDIA.

The Viceroy and Lady Lytton and suite arrived in Calcutta on Friday evening, Nov. 30.

In a telegram to the India Office, the Viceroy gives particulars as to the state of affairs in the famine districts from Nov. 18 to 30. The noble Lord adds that he had visited several of the north-west districts, and learned that, if the December rains are favourable, all will be well; but that if they fail there must be scarcity and expenditure on relief works.

A telegram from Calcutta announces that Jummo, the principal stronghold of the Jowakhs, was captured last Saturday by the British expeditionary force under General Keyes, with the loss of only four men wounded. The enemy lost forty-one men in killed, wounded, and prisoners.

A telegram from Cairo announces that the interest payable to the British Government upon its Suez Canal shares has been paid into the Treasury.

The Gazette contains the appointments of Sir William Cleaver Francis Robinson to be Governor of the Straits Settlements, and of Major-General Sir Harry St. George Ord to be Governor of Western Australia.

The Board of Trade has awarded a gold watch and chain to Miss Grace Bussell, resident in the colony of Western Australia, in recognition of her great bravery on the occasion of the stranding of the steam-ship Georgette, south of Cape Naturaliste, on Dec. 1, 1876.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Mr. J. B. Aspinall, Q.C., Recorder of Liverpool, has been elected Treasurer of the Middle Temple.

Mr. A. M. Sullivan, M.P., already a member of the Irish Bar, has been admitted by special call to the English Bar by the Hon. Society of the Inner Temple.

Miss Edith Curno, of the General Infirmary, Leeds, has been appointed lady superintendent and matron of the North-Eastern Hospital for Children, Hackney-road.

A boat-race for £100 took place on Monday between Thomas Smith, of Surbiton, a waterman, and Walter Messenger, an apprentice, of Teddington, from the Aqueduct to the Ship at Mortlake, ending in the success of the latter.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Mr. Charles S. Bagot, of the Chancery Bar, a Commissioner in Lunacy, in the room of the Hon. Greville Howard, who has resigned; and Mr. M. Spofforth, Taxing Master in Chancery, in the place of Mr. Robert Bayley Follett, resigned.

At a recent meeting of the Marylebone Vestry, permission was given to plant trees on each side of St. Edmund's-terrace, North-gate, Regent's Park, extending from Primrose-hill to the Avenue-road. A hundred and seventy-six trees have been planted on each side of Hamilton-terrace.

The new church which has been built at Islington for the Rev. Dr. Allon's congregation was opened on Wednesday morning. Behind the church are schools for 700 children, a lecture-hall, and a multitude of class-rooms and vestries. The architect is Mr. James Cubitt.

Last Saturday evening the Master and Wardens of the Stationers' Company gave in their hall a Caxton celebration banquet. Mr. W. Rivington, the Master, presided, and amongst the speakers were Bishop Piers Claughton, the Bishop of London, Sir S. H. Waterlow, M.P., and Sir C. Reed.

A meeting of the executive committee of the Indian Famine Relief Fund was held at the Mansion House on Monday. The fund amounted to £486,000, including a promise of £6000 from Sydney. The committee voted a further sum of £15,000 to Madras, making £470,000 in all.

The propriety of establishing free schools was discussed at the weekly meeting of the London School Board on a proposition by the Rev. J. Coxhead to open a few such schools as an experiment. It appearing that by the rules of the Board the object Mr. Coxhead has in view can be carried out to some extent, the proposition was negatived.

The City Lands Committee, at a meeting held at Guildhall on Tuesday, gave instruction to the City architect to forthwith cause Temple Bar to be pulled down and removed to vacant land in Farringdon-road, the external stones being numbered, with a view to the bar being reconstructed on some site to be decided on by a future vote of the Court of Common Council.

The final meeting of the board of delegates of the Hospital Saturday Fund was held last Saturday, in the board-room of the London Hospital. Mr. John Hughes, chairman of the council, presided, and congratulated the meeting on three important facts—viz., that the fund had collected £275 more than last year; that it had spent £350 less; and that it had made its awards three months earlier than after the last collection.

At the opening meeting of the session of the Law Amendment Society, on Monday, the question discussed was the desirability of forming a Court of Criminal Appeal. Mr. Serjeant Cox, who opened the discussion, and Mr. W. Forsyth, Q.C., M.P., who presided, were both in favour of a limited court of appeal, the right being restricted by requiring either the permission of a Judge or the endorsement of the application by one or two counsel.

At the anniversary meeting of the Fellows of the Royal Society, held yesterday week at Burlington House, the medals for the present year were awarded as follows:—The Copley medal to Professor James Dwight Dana, for his biological, geological, and mineralogical observations carried on through half a century, and for the valuable works in which his conclusions and discoveries have been published. A Royal medal to Mr. Frederick A. Abel, F.R.S., for his physico-chemical researches on gun-cotton and explosive agents. A Royal medal to Professor Oswald Heer, of Zurich, for his numerous researches and writings on the tertiary plants of Europe, and for his able generalisation respecting their affinities and their geological and climatic relations; and the Davy medal to Robert W. Bunsen, of Heidelberg, and Gustav Robert Kirchhoff, of Berlin, for their researches and discoveries in spectrum analysis. This is the first award of the Davy medal, which was founded by the proceeds of the service of silver plate bequeathed for the purpose by Sir Humphry Davy.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the number of paupers at the end of the fourth week of November was 81,136, of whom 39,403 were in workhouses, and 41,733 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, these figures show a decrease of 1107, 3316, and 12,579 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 772, of whom 536 were men, 191 women, and 45 children.

Two hundred and fifty years ago one William Smith bequeathed lands and a sum of money for the relief and ransom of persons taken captive by Turkish pirates, and for the use of poor kindred of the testator. Within one hundred years the first object became obsolete, and the trust was dealt with by Act of Parliament for the benefit of the Smith family. Under this arrangement £2500 was invested in land at Kensington, which now yields £12,000 a year. Last Saturday the Master of the Rolls directed that this money should be distributed first among poor kinsmen of the testator, and the residue among such poor persons as the Court should select.

Professor Huxley gave a lecture last Saturday afternoon on technical education to the members of the Working-Men's Club and Institute Union. He defined technical education as not being instruction in the details of a handicraft, but as the cultivation of the minds of those who were to practise it so that they should be able to practise it with intelligence. He reviewed the existing means for bringing this about—namely, elementary schools and science and art classes, and, speaking with approval of the scheme of the Clothworkers' Company, and of the effort about to be made by the livery companies of London, said that altogether there was reason to be content with the prospect for the future.

The Victoria (Philosophical) Institute held the opening meeting of its thirteenth session on Monday evening—Mr. C. Brooke, M.D., F.R.S., in the chair. Many new members were elected, including the president of Wisconsin University and Professor Heer, of Zurich, the recipient of the Royal Society's gold medal for 1877. The list of authors of papers for the session included the names of ten professors of English and foreign Universities. It was also stated that the number of the society's members approaches 800. The paper of the evening was read by Mr. J. E. Howard, F.R.S., and referred to the advances that modern science had made in regard to nature, and the value of "a slow, but sure path of induction."

There were registered in London last week 2633 births and 1579 deaths. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 270, while the deaths were 172 below, the average. There were 81 deaths from measles, 52 from scarlet fever, 5 from diphtheria, 27 from whooping-cough, 36 from different forms of fever, and 16 from diarrhoea. The deaths from smallpox, which had been 14 and 27 in the two preceding weeks, further rose to 31 last week—a higher number than in any week since the middle of July last. Of these fatal cases, 10 were certified as unvaccinated and 9 as vaccinated, while in 12 cases the medical certificates gave no information as to vaccination. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs, which had been 313 and 409 in the two previous weeks, rose to 417 last week, but were 64 below the corrected average of 261 resulted from bronchitis and 116 from pneumonia.

The "Two Hundred" of the Southwark Liberal Association met the other day and chose Mr. Andrew Dunn and their president, Mr. William Rabbitts, as their candidates at the next election for the borough. Mr. Locke, the present Liberal member, whose name was also submitted to the meeting, but rejected by a considerable majority, has addressed a circular to the "Two Hundred" informing them that he refuses to be bound by their decision, and intends to stand again for the borough at the next general election. He adds: "I am, I believe, correctly informed that the Southwark Liberal Association numbers about 800 members. And, as at the last two general elections 6027 and 5901 electors did me the honour of recording their votes in my favour, I feel that I cannot, in justice either to them or to myself, permit myself to be bound by so small a portion of my constituents as were represented at the meeting."

Mr. Archibald Forbes gave a lecture yesterday week at the Royal United Service Institution on the subject of "The Russian Military Operations in Bulgaria." Lieutenant-General Wardlaw presided, and there was a large audience, which included the Duke of Sutherland and many officers of high military rank. Mr. Forbes was very cordially received, and at the close of the address a vote of thanks was accorded him, on the motion of the chairman, seconded by General Lord Mark Kerr.—A complimentary dinner was given to Mr. Forbes at Willis's Rooms last Saturday evening. Among the company, about 160 in number, were the Duke of Sutherland, Lord Houghton, General Lord Mark Kerr, Sir Charles M. Grigor, Colonel Napier Sturt, Colonel C. B. Brackenbury, Captain Hozier, Lieutenant-Colonel Knollys, Colonel Evelyn Wood, Alderman Cotton, M.P., and Colonel Mure, M.P., together with representatives of most of the principal London newspapers and many personal friends of Mr. Forbes. Mr. G. A. Sala presided, and proposed the toast of the evening in an appropriate speech.

A TEA-SHIP FROM CHINA.

The East India Docks, with the ships, crews, and cargoes from different parts of the world, present a variety of entertaining studies. Lascars, negroes, and Chinamen, among the sailors who are to be seen working or lounging aboard, and on the wharves for loading or unloading vessels, form a motley exhibition of non-European mankind. The famous clippers employed in the tea trade from China are generally worth looking for at the Docks about the usual time of their arrival. A prize is yearly given by importing merchants and ship-owners for the quickest sailing passage to the port of London. It has this year been won by the Loudoun Castle, from Hankow, which made, we believe, the swiftest run yet performed. This is the ship from on board which our sketch is taken of the animated scene at "breaking bulk," the commencement of unloading. We are informed that the Loudoun Castle discharged from her vast hold, altogether, 40,000 packages of tea, amounting to two million pounds weight. A hundred of these packages go to "a break." Two packages out of each "break," taken indiscriminately, are opened for the purpose of getting samples. These samples are handed to the numerous brokers' clerks in attendance, who hasten with them to the City warehouses and counting-houses of merchants. Their eager bustle on board the ship is a striking contrast to the placid demeanour of the Chinese samens, whose quaint figures, with their coiled-up pigtails, loose blue trousers, and bare feet, amongst the litter of cocoanut matting on deck, have a picturesque diversity of effect.

THE MAGAZINES.

The Cornhill commences a new story of considerable promise entitled "Da Capo," and "For Percival" continues to improve in the polish of style and nicety of observation which have distinguished it from the first. The strength of the magazine, nevertheless, mainly consists in the miscellaneous papers, among which an essay on Otway especially deserves notice as a just and discriminating tribute to the too-neglected author of two among the few post-Shakespearean masterpieces of the English stage. The writer discusses the controverted question of the authorship of "Heroic Friendship," and inclines to the belief that some part of it may be Otway's. A paper on Charlotte Brontë also contains some good criticism, although the view taken of Charlotte's life and writings appears to us altogether too gloomy. Most amusing is "F. P. C.'s" essay on the Celtic character and its contrasted types in Welsh and Irish. The authoress affords a characteristic note of her own Irish nationality by undervaluing it in comparison with the Cambrian, and it strikes us that some of the less agreeable characteristics of the latter are kept too much in the background. In the main, however, the estimate is that of a shrewd and genial observer.

Macmillan is remarkable for the highly effective conclusion of "Young Musgrave," and for a very valuable paper on the causes of insanity specially operative in modern society, by Dr. Hack Tuke. Intemperance is chief; next come among the lower classes domestic trouble and poverty; among the higher, worry in its various forms, especially in connection with over study and the cares of business. The effect of "spiritualism" in peopling asylums has been greatly overrated. A review of the German University system, by Dr. Walter Perry, will be found full of information and interest. Dr. Perry has enjoyed special opportunities, which he has employed to excellent purpose. Dean Stanley's Bristol discourse on "The Education of After Life" is both sensible and elegant; and Mr. Sutherland Edwards's sketch of the reform period of Russian politics between the Crimean war and the Polish insurrection is a useful résumé of a movement which, though prematurely checked by an unforeseen reaction, has been by no means barren of results.

Fraser opens with a highly-interesting account of the recent excavations at Mycenæ from the pen of the distinguished artist and archaeologist, Mr. W. Simpson. Mr. Simpson's acumen, on his visit to Mycenæ in March last, enabled him to detect the real character of the slabs discovered by Dr. Schliemann as the stone seats of an agora; and he is now no less successful in proving that the sepulchres discovered within this stone circle answered the purpose of tombs solely, and not of treasuries. A good deal is also said on the minor, and, as Mr. Simpson rightly considers, at present insoluble question—whether these tombs can be connected with Agamemnon. It appears that Dr. Schliemann spent 30,000 drachmas in the excavation of these antiquities, none of which he was permitted to retain—the Greeks, who kept them, expending less than one seventh of the amount. A reply by Mr. Wallace to Dr. Carpenter's assault on spiritualistic mediums is almost entirely occupied with personal recriminations, of little interest except to the parties concerned. Nor is there much else of interest in the magazine, except the concluding paper of a series on the conversion of India, which the writer holds will never be accomplished until Government takes the matter in hand as a question of national policy.

"Irene Macgillcuddy" promises to be a source of unqualified amusement to the readers of Blackwood, as may readily be inferred when it is stated that the principal object of its satire is the New York marriage market. The commencement, at all events, is full of spirit; and "Mine is Thine" displays no falling off. There is nothing else worthy of notice except thoroughly sound, but by no means original, essays on Dr. Schliemann's discoveries at Mycenæ and the Opium-Eater.

The most remarkable contribution to the Fortnightly Review is Mr. F. Harrison's nervous and impressive denunciation of the forces behind Marshal MacMahon's apparently wanton onslaught on the Constitution which alone gives him any title to govern France. The exposure is withering in its scorn, and Mr. Harrison's conclusions are irresistible from his own point of view; but the necessities of the situation will probably enforce some solution considerably less thorough and dramatic. Mr. Lowe's reply to Mr. Gladstone's argument for a further extension of the suffrage expresses doubts and apprehensions entertained by most reflecting persons, but loses something of its weight from the writer's evident disinclination to enfranchise even qualified individuals. Mr. Wallace treats ably and instructively of the humming-bird group, as illustrative of the principles of natural selection in miniature; and Mr. Cotton, secretary to the Bengal Government, presents a more encouraging view than usual of the ability of India to feed her enormous population.

The Nineteenth Century is full of valuable but dry articles. Few subjects, for example, are better entitled to attention than the practical and philosophical aspects of legal science respectively presented by two of the most eminent of living jurists; but neither Sir J. F. Stephen's suggestions on the reform of the criminal law nor Sir H. S. Maine's discussion of the affinities between the institutions of the South Slavonians and the Rajpoots possess much attraction for general readers. Both will be highly esteemed by experts; as will Sir T. Watson's disquisition on hydrophobia and rabies, which maladies, he thinks, might be extirpated by imposing a strict quarantine of several months upon all the dogs in the kingdom. The ways and means to this end he judiciously leaves to the consideration of the police. Mr. Dicey returns to his proposition for a British occupation of Egypt, or, at least, protectorate over it, resting his case mainly on the economical disorder of the Khedive's affairs. Mr. Matthew Arnold's review of Mr. Stopford Brooke's primer of English literature is, as usual with Mr. Arnold, somewhat too patronising, both in its approbation and its censure. By an extremely narrow conception of poetic art Mr. Arnold brings himself to the point of denying Shakespeare's eminence as an artist.

The leading paper in the Contemporary is Kossuth's powerful appeal to the Austro-Hungarian Government in favour of an actively pro-Turkish policy, in consideration of which he would seem almost willing to recognise the House of Hapsburg. The considerations put forth certainly ought to have great weight with the Cabinet of Vienna; but others will probably have even greater weight. Mr. Goldwin Smith's view of the situation in France is full of covert allusions to English politics, and may be advantageously compared with the more practical review by M. Gabriel Monod, who evidently would not be sorry to see his way to a compromise. Especial praise is due to two essays marked by great refinement of feeling—Miss Wedgwood's graceful study of Law the mystic, and Mr. Percy Gardner's interpretation, by the light of bas-reliefs and inscriptions, of the attitude of the Greek mind towards death.

The contents of this month's American periodicals are of great and varied interest. The North American Review offers a discussion on the practicability of a resumption of specie payments in the States, among five eminent financial authorities, with a summing up by no less a personage than the American Chancellor of the Exchequer. Secretary Sherman is firm in his conviction "that resumption can be, ought to be, and will be, secured" if Congress will but abstain from meddling. The same view is maintained by Mr. Horace White in the International Review. Other important contributions are, to the North American, Mr. C. Lindsey's powerful description of the conflict between the Civil Power and the Catholic priesthood in Lower Canada, and General MacClellan's penetrating but dry criticism of the Eastern campaign; in the International, Mr. Schütz Wilson's essay on the non-dramatic element in Shakespeare; and Mr. Thwink's analysis of the philosophy of Schopenhauer. The Atlantic Monthly advocates two remarkable schemes—one for the excavation of Herculaneum, the other for improving the climate of North America by making a canal one hundred miles wide between the Pacific and the Arctic Oceans. The former project has the advantage of being practicable, and would well repay the estimated expenditure of four millions if the buried antiquities should be found to exist in the anticipated state of preservation. Mr. Benjamin's pleasant account of Portugal is concluded. Mr. Longfellow's otherwise graceful sonnet to Mr. Tennyson is disfigured by a sneer at some obscurely indicated school of poetry. Scribner's Monthly is extremely entertaining. The most valuable paper is an excellent criticism on Keats, by Mr. R. H. Stoddard, the most amusing an excessively droll collection of the rulings of English and American Courts in questions of libel. Exempli gratia: "You can say of a lawyer, 'He has as much law as a monkey,' because he has as much, and more also. But if you say, 'He hath no more law than a goose, then are those words actionable.'"

In the Gentleman's Magazine we have to note Mr. Knight's thoughtful criticism on Rabelais; Mr. Collett-Sandars's varied and entertaining collection of notes and anecdotes relating to truffles; and the highly dramatic and satisfactory dénouement of "Miss Misanthrope," the best novel that has ever appeared in this periodical. Another favourite, "Proud Maisie," terminates its career in London Society, and the conclusion is no less satisfactory. The Dublin University has a clever poetical squib, entitled "Bluebeard Rehabilitated," by the late W. H. Harrison, and memoirs of two men affording a most thorough contrast to each other in all respects except that both have written verse, Theodore Martin and Clarence Mangan. "The Demons of Derrygonnelly" is a story of a haunted house, attested by an inquirer. Among other readable matter, Belgravia has the conclusion of "By Proxy," a sketch of Theodore Hook, and "The Mysterious Speculator," a striking contribution between a tale and a sketch. The Month is graced by two able and thoughtful papers, a view of primitive Aryan society, and a discussion of Professor Tyndall's recent Birmingham lecture. Mirth continues to deserve its title in virtue of amusing parodies and extravaganzas by Mr. Sala, Mr. G. Turner, Mr. Hollingshead, and others. Mr. Sala's "Happy Gaul" is especially felicitous.

We have also to acknowledge Good Words, Good Things, the New Monthly, Tinsley, All the Year Round, Cassell's Magazine, the Sunday Magazine, Golden Hours, St. Nicholas, Industrial Art, Part I. of Cassell's Science for All, Street Life in London, The Garden, Gardener's Magazine, Scientific Gossip, and the Charing-cross Magazine.

CHRISTMAS ANNUALS.

The issue of special Christmas Numbers and Annuals is becoming greater every year.

A new claimant, entitled "Father Christmas: Our Little Ones' Budget," is announced to appear shortly. It comes with weighty claims on the favour of the rising generation, being crowded with amusing tales, songs, riddles, and acrostics, by its fair editor, Miss N. D'Anvers, Austin Dobson, Thomas Hardy, W. H. G. Kingston, Reginald Gatty, and other writers of note in this special field of literature. Among its numerous illustrations there are three printed in colours, the principal of which, a chromolithograph, entitled "A Merry Christmas," represents a blooming young lady, just entered into her teens, tracing the appropriate greeting in snow. It is safe to prognosticate that many a youth will take possession of this picture, and keep it safe locked in his desk to snatch furtive glances at the damsel, or hang it in his bedroom where he may contemplate her charms the first thing on rising and the last on going to bed. This interesting collection of stories and pictures for the young will be published at the office of the Illustrated London News, 198, Strand; and, judging from the bill of fare, and the names of the skilled artists engaged in setting forth the entertainment, there can be no doubt that it will be keenly relished by boys and girls.

The space at our disposal will allow us to take only a hasty glance at the other candidates. Giving place to the ladies, we take first Routledge's Annual, a complete story by Mrs. Riddell, called "The Haunted River." It abounds, as one might guess from its title, in ghostly incident; and its author's name will with most persons be of its sufficient passport. In Mr. Francillon's number, "In the Dark," added to the interest of the story, are some vivid descriptions of Cornish coast scenery. "Solomon Isaacs," a tale of Jewish domestic life, of much pathos, by B. L. Farjeon, forms the number of Tinsley's Magazine. Three stories—Mr. Francillon's "Old Father Time," Mr. F. W. Robinson's "Poor Zeph," and Mr. Julian Hawthorne's "Pearl-Shell Necklace"—make up the annual of the Gentleman's Magazine. The London Society annual contains a dozen tales and poems; while stories by Mr. Sala, Mr. Payne, Mr. Fitzgerald, and others, make up that of the Belgravia; the London Society one being called "A Couchful of Ghosts." "Good Cheer," with contributions by Anthony Trollope, Mrs. Oliphant, and Annie Keary, is the name of the one associated with Good Words. Among the distinctive features in "The Archer," the number of the Quiver, is a Christmas sermon by the Bishop of Rochester, and a Christmas carol set to music by Sir J. Goss. A series of sketches, named "Hash-a-bye, Baby," written by Mr. G. Manville Fenn, constitutes the number for Once a Week; and that of All the Year Round has for title the good old-fashioned introductory greeting, "Shepherds All and Maids Fair." Berton's Annual is named "Sixes and Sevens;" the principal tale of Sylvia's Annual, or the Englishwoman's Almanack, is "Only a Heathen;" of Longley's Annual, "Golden Christmas;" and of Christmas Leaves for 1877, "Our Villas," well furnished by good writers. Stories illustrative of the Hamlet will in various conditions form the Christians Number of the Monthly Packet. Figaro and the Hornet have also their special numbers, that of the former being a tale by Miss Bradton, entitled "The Clown's Quest." There is yet another to mention. It is announced that the Whitehall Review Annual will contain a story by Quida, and sketches, stories, and verses by other writers. Most of these annuals are illustrated.

BREAKING BULK ON BOARD A TEA SHIP IN THE LONDON DOCKS.

"THE LAST PURCHASE." FROM THE PICTURE BY SEYMOUR LUCAS.

There should be, there must be, a mutual regard between the artist and the patron or connoisseur of art, so that they can sympathise with and enter into each other's feelings; as the creator and the purchaser or bespoker, respectively, of a "thing of beauty" designed to be its possessor's "joy for ever." This accounts, perhaps, for the truthful and characteristic expression which Mr. Seymour Lucas has imparted to his figure of a gentleman amateur of the last century, indulging the mood of complacent approval in scanning the picture that he has recently obtained for a perpetual ornament of his elegant mansion. That is a terrible sarcasm, indeed. "Some demon whispered, 'Visto, have a taste!'" but all rich picture-buyers, whether in Pope's days or in our own, have not incurred the reproach of prodigally spending too large a share of an ample income upon the finest works of artistic genius. The greatest prices have been readily paid, within our recollection, by shrewd men of business who knew perfectly well the marketable value of such unique and inimitable creations, bearing the stamp of unquestioned fame, especially soon after the death of the renowned artist. Anything of this kind is worth in money, to such an accustomed purchaser, just so much as somebody else might be willing to pay for it, though it may be worth not a shilling to one who neither wishes to keep it nor to sell it again. This gentleman, however, whom we see here contemplating his "last purchase" does not at all look like a man who intends to part with it at an enhanced price, and to make a pecuniary gain by the transaction. He is a genuine amateur, with a disinterested passion for the grand and beautiful; and we trust its gratification will have made him tolerably happy, at no inordinate cost.

SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.

Numerous and fine are the landscape works to which we would draw attention, embracing those varieties of subjects and manner, the inevitable result of the idiosyncracies of their respective authors, since it is only in accordance with these varieties of mental constitution the changeful aspects of natural imagery appeal to the susceptibilities of the artist. Distinguished as Mr. T. M. Richardson has long been in the first ranks of English water-colour art, that position must be enhanced by his present contributions, from which may be selected "Ben Doran from the Road near Corrie Baw, Blackmount" (241) as the finest subject of his pencil with which we are familiar. We remember no work by this artist so deeply imbued with the sentiment of nature's solemnity, or wherein the aspect of the hour touches the sympathies such moments awaken within us. Lacking somewhat of the scenic power generally marking Mr. Richardson's compositions, though exhibiting an arrangement of material admirably adapted for the purposes of his intention, he has produced a work of lasting loveliness and beauty. A few mountain forms of varying distance, raising their heads into the twilight sky, a lake reflecting rock and rush, and the inventory of material is exhausted; but over all he has spread the glamour of genius. The gathering dusk of coming night is stealing over the upper sky, and the hills blend in solemn gloom with the lake at their base. Evening's

The cattle-pictures of Mr. Brittain Willis, Mr. Bradley, and Mr. Weber are worthy of the interest attaching to their repute; but the brilliant treatment of Mr. F. Taylor's horses and dogs, especially in "Gold Dust—a Favourite Hunter" (16), places the works of the latter artist above those of all his contemporaries.

Following the order of the catalogue, the works being arranged for general effect rather than in their chronological sequence, attention is directed to some small works by Constable (3-13), who as a water-colour painter is not frequently met with, and wherein is shadowed forth the breadth and tone of his larger manner in oil. Robson in "Ely" (14) and "Durham" (31) takes us back to a time when blackness and opacity were accepted for grandeur and gloom. Wheatley, Glover, Owen, and Clennell lead us up to Cozens, in whose "Florence" (38) we see one of those effects of calm and repose marking his best works, but between the laboured softness of which and the dashing, incisive touch of Cattermole, here placed side by side, is a contrast striking and instructive, furnished by the loans of Mr. Burton. To David Cox (who, like Constable, was essentially an English painter, and imparted to his subject a sympathy and simplicity of feeling entirely his own), the one end of the West Gallery has been allotted, and evidently will become one of the most attractive parts of the exhibition. On this wall space are ranged a greater number of Cox's most important works than have ever formerly been placed in company. Among these are the celebrated "Changing Pasture" (61), "The Skylark" (91), "The Old Mill and Moor" (94), "A Deluge" (75), "Hop-Fields" (87), and "Peat Gatherers" (69), all of which, with others, are from the collection of Mr. F. Nettlefold. Equally valuable are the contributions of Mr. Quilter, whose "Green Lanes" (80) and "Peace and War" (65) are two of the artist's most famous productions. Gorgeous in its panoply of gold and azure is Mr. Broadhurst's large "Bolton Abbey" (77), a sketch only, but dashed in with the soul of a poet by a giant hand. Other much-prized drawings lent by Mr. Leake, Mr. Gaskell, Mr. Gillott, and Mr. Graham are here hung, which, with Mr. Orrock's seven exquisite little gems, complete a section of this memorable gathering. Cutman arrests our attention by his simple truth, and Barrett in the fine examples lent by Mr. Nettlefold and Mr. Orrock. Cristall, Varley, and

The theatre of the South Kensington Schools was crowded last Saturday afternoon by a large assemblage to hear Professor Alexander Graham Bell's explanation of the telephone at the meeting of the Physical Society of London.

NEW BOOKS.

The numerous illustrations, whatever may be their imperfections, will, no doubt, be generally considered the best part of The Art of Beauty: by Mrs. H. R. Haweis (Chatto and Windus); although it is to be sincerely hoped that we are not to accept the "young person" depicted upon the frontispiece as our ideal of the beautiful. The "young person" is lackadaisical in expression and attitude; is disproportioned in limb, if an ordinary eye may be depended upon; has legs which recall the sobriquet of "long-shanks;" and wears upon her yellow hair, of unfeminine shortness and arrangement, something red, not unlike in shape an inverted bowl. Her costume, too, is of the slightest. As regards the letter-press, it has for its basis some articles which were printed some years ago in St. Paul's Magazine; but it is plain, from internal evidence, that alterations and additions have been freely introduced, in order that the remarks and the advice proffered may be applicable to the dress which it has pleased the milliners and their victims to invent and adopt at the present day. Let it be at once granted that the writer's purpose is excellent, and that she is probably quite mistress of her subject. But it is not everybody who, with the best intentions and the most complete knowledge, can act up to those intentions or communicate that knowledge. Our writer would evidently like to impress upon her sisters the desirability of holding her own high and serious views about the cultivation of beauty, whether in dress or in other more or less important matters; but her tone is, for the most part, so flippant, and sometimes so slangy, and her treatment is, for the most part, so slight and superficial, that we seem to be reading the composition of one who is herself to be numbered among the "girls of the period," though her place may be among the superior and more thoughtful members of that fashionable sisterhood. Dogmatic, moreover, she is, to an extent which is sufficient to convince the reader that she herself never belonged to the class of girls whom she stigmatises as "invisibles," a class in which she includes the "discouraged" and the "naturally shy." She at least, if nobody else, must always, one would suppose, have had the courage of her opinions. Those opinions, or some of them, she has now promulgated in four "books," comprised in one volume. The first book deals, principally, with beauty as connected with the coverings of the body and of the feet; the second, with beauty as connected with head-dresses; the third, with beauty as connected with surroundings; the fourth with questions touching the attractiveness and unattractiveness of different kinds of girls, together with hints whereby the unattractive may modify their unattractiveness, and with a few somewhat flimsy sketches of imaginary young ladies and their probable behaviour under certain circumstances. Our writer seems to hold one creed, which she would do good service if she could induce the whole world to embrace; she seems to honestly believe that it is not only the prerogative but the bounden duty of every human being to exhibit at their best, by all legitimate means, the face and form received from the Maker, in whose image man was made. If this theory were generally accepted there would be fewer elucubrations, ungainly men, and fewer slatternly, ungraceful women: there would be less nonsense about compering the body according to the condition of life; there would be a general feeling that "a man's a man for a' that;" and that there is no reason why any honest man should hesitate to bear himself, if he can, as gallantly as a king, or any honest woman hesitate to bear herself, if she can, as gracefully as a queen. Yet, nowadays, it is no uncommon thing for both men and women to sneer at a man who, being poor, makes the most of his personal appearance and personal carriage, and for women to sneer at a girl or woman who, under the same circumstances, does the same thing. Of course, in these days of proteasmas, ancestral apes, and the like, the argument founded upon the old-fashioned idea of a human race created in the likeness of a Divine Creator is much weakened; but there are still a considerable number of persons unconverted to the newer and more scientific doctrine, and for them undoubtedly the book under consideration was written, so that they may rather strive to make themselves as little unworthy as possible of the image after which they consider themselves to have been created than content themselves with the reflection that they are, at their very worst, a great improvement upon the family of the late Mr. Pongo. Our writer and instructress in the art of being as beautiful as possible is not, it should be observed, severe in her restrictions: the only fear is lest the inch she allows should be stretched beyond an ell. You may use cosmetics, if they can be warranted harmless; you may dress in the fashion, if it be decent and you do not carry it to extremes; a little, a very little, paint will be no sin; grey hair-powder is really becoming; a patch, a small patch, in the proper place, is really a fresh charm; and, if your nose be red at the tip, you may "just evaporate with one tiny touch of white the red spot." "Out! out! damned spot!" as Lady Macbeth said on a memorable occasion. And, of course, you may pad, and you may replace a lost tooth, if the loss would be conspicuous, with a false one—only do not overdo these things. What more the instructress would allow may be learnt from her own pages, for the filling and enlivenment whereof she must have been at great pains, especially in the matter of the pictorial illustrations, for which she must have carried her researches even into strange places.

Too many books of collected pieces of verse pass through the press with no better reason for their appearance than juvenile vanity. But such is not the case with Mr. W. J. Rock's Winter Gatherings, published by Messrs. W. Kent and Co., which consist mainly of a reprint, by the septuagenarian author, of what his friends have known and valued these ten years past. These artless effusions of pure and wholesome feeling, and expressions of ripe moral wisdom drawn from a long and full experience of life, have no high degree of literary polish; yet their metrical form is tolerably well sustained, and sound thoughts are not injured by the crumpling of rhyme. Mr. Rock seems to be an old man with a young heart, and with so much freshness of genuine human affections, such faith in the soul of goodness, which is said by poets, and felt by children and saints, to dwell beneath the outward shapes and movements of the natural world, that Wordsworth's lyrical ballads are not more emphatic in their testimony of that happy persuasion. The keynote of his graceful strain is sounded by the grey-headed blind man, in the first of these poems; who assures us that he was once blind, when he had his eye-sight and did not see the loveliness of Nature and of Nature's God; but that since, by Divine Grace, his mind's eye was opened to the blessed truth, he can see, adore, and enjoy the revelation of heavenly Love. In this spirit of cheerful, uncalculating, piety the ordinary conditions of life are beheld as fraught with a sacred meaning that enhances their idyllic beauty: the family endearments of wife and child, as in "The Cottager's Address to the Evening Star," and "The Spirit of the Young Man's Home;" the healthy and thrifty task of honest industry, as in "The Young Workman;" the charm of conscious womanhood, touched with a particular tenderness, in the maiden's behaviour to a welcome lover; the still more tender and hallowed affections that haunt the deathbed, and graves of the dead, with hopes of a future restoration. But it is upon the sweet moods and pretty ways of little children, and upon the symbolic beauty of flowers, and their association with the gentlest teachings of meditative virtue, that the author is chiefly inclined to dwell. His picture of a party of little ones playing at keeping shop, and that of the little girl washing her doll's face, should be appreciated by mothers and nurses. Local and personal reminiscences, in some other poems, which treat of visits to the banks of the Taw and Torridge in North Devon, will perhaps appeal to similar memories in the minds of readers from the west country. Indeed, Mr. Rock is the author of a well-known piece, "Jim and Nell," in the North Devon dialect. He has also an appropriate word to say of more famous places which his Muse has visited, of Stratford-on-Avon, Runnymede, and Holyrood, the tomb of Romeo and Juliet, and that of Abelard and Heloise. The series of short poems on different flowers, to which we have referred, is followed by a number of songs and other lyrics, which are often very musical in tune, as well as in emotional spirit. These "Winter Gatherings," in short, form a not ungraceful garland for a head which seventy-five winters have capped with snow.

The series of little books called Art at Home, published by Messrs. Macmillan and Co., in which sound practical advice is given upon the most appropriate and consistent manner of furnishing and adorning the middle-class private household for the gratification of a refined taste, has more than once been commended by us. A new volume of the series, by Mrs. Orrin Smith, treats especially of "The Drawing-Room, its Decorations and Furniture." This is, we need scarcely remark, of all the apartments in the ordinary domestic interior, that for which one would desiderate the judicious counsels of an accomplished lady, who has made the subject her peculiar study. It is but too true that the drawing-room is often the most uncomfortable place in the house, and the least agreeable to the eye, with a shabby and snobbish compromise between vulgar pretentiousness and tawdry cheapness that makes it a penance to sit there during a morning call. To avoid the gross errors commonly perpetrated in this important matter, we would have "persons about to marry," and all others who are about furnishing, to consult Mrs. Orrin Smith's very sensible handbook, in which they will find the best instruction, preparatory to visiting the upholsterers' ware-rooms. The wall-papers, cornices, and painting of walls, the fireplaces, chimney-pieces, grates, fireirons, and coal-scuttles, the floors, carpets, rugs, and mats, the window-blinds and curtains, doors and screens, the tables, chairs, sofas, stools, cabinets, and pianos, the chandeliers and lamps, the mirrors and picture-frames, book-cases, porcelain and floral decorations, are here discussed with a perfect knowledge of what they ought to be, and how and at what price they can be supplied. The book is dedicated to Mr. G. L. Craik, at whose suggestion it was written.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

The Christmas Number of "Chappell's Musical Magazine" (Chappell and Co., New Bond-street) fully maintains the reputation which it has held for several years by the interest and variety of its contents, which in this instance consist of ten effective pieces of dance music, in the forms of the quadrille, the waltz, the galop, and the polka, contributed by D'Albert, Strauss, Waldteufel, Hoffman, and Hecker. All this for a shilling is a marvel of cheapness, and the publication (which forms No. 114 of the series) can scarcely fail to be largely in demand during the season of Christmas and New-Year's festivities.

"Stephen Heller: His Life and Works, from the French of H. Barbedette," by Robert Brown-Borthwick (Messrs. Ashdown and Parry). We have on several occasions spoken of the charming pianoforte music of Heller, whose compositions include works of various styles, from the elaborate grand sonata to the characteristic "Scherzo" and "Tarentella," the plaintive "Notturmo" and the brilliant "Waltz," not to mention other forms. Nearly all these are impressed with the individuality of the composer, many of the pieces of the more serious kind being musical poems full of high thought and graceful imagination. Notwithstanding traces of Heller's devoted admiration of the works of Beethoven, Chopin, and Schumann, his music possesses the stamp of originality; and his productions will probably increase in estimation with the progress of time. The author of the memoir before us truly says that Heller "might have been (had he chosen) a great orchestral symphonist. He has preferred, like Chopin, to remain simply a composer of pianoforte music. Posterity may possibly assign to him a lower niche in the Temple of Fame than had he chosen to deal with larger methods and attempt a grander style. But to have been a pianist like Mendelssohn, Schumann, and Chopin—is this, indeed, little? How many a composer of more ambitious works, and of more popular name, shines with infinitely less brightness in the firmament of Art!" The translation has been well executed by the Rev. Mr. Brown; and the volume contains a good photographic likeness of Heller and a complete catalogue of his numerous works, now extending to opus 138, besides many pieces not so classed. These are now in possession of the well-known music-publishers, Messrs. Ashdown and Parry.

"The Musical Museum for the Harmonium"—selected and arranged by M. Watson and published by J. Bath—is a cheap serial, containing a varied selection of pieces, mostly by classical composers, adapted for the instrument referred to, with indications as to the use thereof. The collection will be serviceable to students of the harmonium.

"L'Eclair Gaiop" (Messrs. R. Cocks and Co.) is a very spirited dance piece, by Cotsford Dick.

"The Sea-King" (Simpson and Co.) is a song in the true, robust, nautical style—by Louis Diehl—admitting good opportunity for effective declamation.

"Sunbeams—a Series of Popular Melodies easily arranged for the Piano," consists of twelve pieces, adapted for two performers on the pianoforte, by F. Percival, who has executed his task in a manner well suited to juvenile capacities. These are published by Wood and Co.; as are "Au Revoir!" a graceful reverie for the pianoforte, by Immanuel Liebhich, and "Forest Fairy," a sprightly polka, by W. Crawford.

"Merry Maids," polka élégante, by Adam Wright (C. Jefferys), has a well-marked rhythm in the style of the dance named.

A meeting was held at the Townhall, Brighton, on the 29th ult., to take steps with a view to presenting the ex-Mayor (Alderman Charles Lamb) with a testimonial. Mr. Frederick Merrifield presided. An influential committee was appointed, and Mr. Albert Crook undertook the duties of honorary secretary. Nearly £100 was subscribed in the room.—The annual fancy-dress ball held under the joint auspices of the International Gun and Polo Club and the members of the United Counties' Hunt took place the same evening in the Pavilion.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The Lord Mayor distributed the prizes last Saturday evening to the 2nd City of London, of whose efficiency a favourable report was given; the prize distribution of the 10th Surrey was held last week in their new drill-hall, Bermondsey, the proceedings being wound up by a ball; and the annual dinner and distribution of prizes to No. 4 company of the St. George's took place at the Holborn Restaurant.

The following competitions were held last week:—

The battalion "order" of the St. George's, carrying with it an entrance for the Queen's Prize, 1878, was fired for at Wornwood-scrubbs by the holders of the various company badges. The result was an easy victory for Private Graves, Private Rosenthal being second.

The prize meeting of No. 3 company of the 1st Surrey was concluded, when Private Foster became the final winner of the Company Challenge Cup. The Silver Champion Badge was for the second time won by Private Cranch. Other prizes were taken by Messrs. Hancock, Yonge, H. G. Selby, T. J. Hancock, J. Selby, W. F. Hooper, and Garland.

The A company of the London Rifle Brigade held a competition of a peculiar character for a series of prizes at the Rainham range. The targets were single slabs, 6 ft. by 2 ft., with a 2 ft. bull's-eye painted across, as used in skirmishing practice, but instead of being erect, were placed on their sides, so as only to give an elevation of 2 ft. The conditions were that each man should fire five shots at 400, 300, and 200 yards, advancing in skirmishing order. Corporal Junkinson was the winner with 44 points, made up of eleven bull's-eyes.

The annual prize competition of the 26th Surrey (Shaftesbury Park) took place at the Epsom range. The principal prizes were won by Colour-Sergeant Corsbie, Corporal Johnson, Lieutenant Wheaton, Sergeant Coombes, Private Pengeley, Sergeant Clissold, and Private Marshall. The challenge cup for teams of five men was won by D company; Mr. Johnson taking a tankard for the highest score in the winning team.

Sir Trevor Lawrence, Bart., M.P., in opening a new volunteer drill-hall at Richmond last Saturday evening, said the last return gave the total of efficient volunteers at 174,184 out of an enrolled strength of 185,501. There were present at the last inspection 151,753, including 27,765 artillery and 6086 engineers. In addition, there was an enormous number of men who had passed through the service, who had qualified themselves to be of great use did occasion require it.

The Lord Mayor and Corporation of Dublin have fixed upon Monday next, the 10th inst., for the reception of the Elcho Shield at the City Hall.

The new station of the North-Eastern Railway at Middlesbrough, which cost £100,000 in construction, is now open.

A banquet to Sir Stafford Northcote took place on Thursday afternoon at the Victoria Hall, Exeter. It was a grand affair, and both political parties were influentially represented.

The Board of Trade inquiry into the loss of the barque Charles Davenport, of South Shields, has resulted in the certificate of Captain Thomas Jones being suspended for twelve months.

At a meeting of the Birmingham Town Council on Tuesday £10,000 was voted for the laying out of a new park at Smallheath, one of the eastern suburbs, on land forty acres in extent, and valued at £30,000, which had been presented to the town by Miss Ryland. Mr. W. Middlemore has presented to the town a recreation-ground, valued at nearly £12,000, for the use of the residents of Burbury-street and neighbourhood.—A park, twelve and a half acres in extent, has been presented to the burgesses of Jedburgh by Mr. John Tinline, a native of that town, now in New Zealand, and other members of his family. The park is situated close to the town, overlooking the beautiful valley of the Jed and the old abbey at Jedburgh.

At a meeting of the Bristol School Board yesterday week a discussion arose upon the question of accepting a donation of £500 from Mrs. Proctor (widow of a deceased Alderman of that city), the amount to be expended in bibles and testaments, to be given as prizes for scriptural knowledge. Mrs. Proctor made the gift through the Religious Tract Society, and exception was taken by some members of the board to the Religious Tract Society's edition of the Bible on the ground that it contained an unauthorised preface, and historical, analytical, critical, and implied doctrinal notes. The debate was adjourned.—In distributing the prizes to some board-school children at Leicester, Mr. Chamberlain, M.P., advocated the establishment of free schools, and, pending Parliamentary sanction, the greatest possible reduction in fees.

The Birmingham Cattle Show was opened at Bingley Hall on Saturday, the operations for the day being mostly confined to the work of the judges. The total amount of prizes for the present, the twenty-ninth annual exhibition, reaches £3236, against £2955 in 1876. In the classes for cattle, sheep, and pigs, there are about 250 entries, and in point of quality the stock exhibited is of a high order.—The National Dog Show opened on the same day. The entries numbered 1000, and included some celebrated dogs. We intend to give Engravings of some of the finest-looking animals in our next issue.—The annual fat stock and poultry show at Hull was opened on Tuesday last, when there were increased exhibits in every department, chiefly of horned cattle and poultry. £700 were given in prizes, and the champion prize of £100 for beasts was taken by Mr. Wright, Nocton Heath, Lincolnshire.

An Illustration was given in our last of the statue, representing an ideal figure of King Robert Bruce, which has been erected at Stirling Castle, overlooking the battlefield of Bannockburn. Mr. George Cruikshank, the veteran artist and philanthropist, has written a letter in Thursday's Times reminding the public that it was he, assisted by Mr. Adams-Acton, the sculptor, who made the original design, at the request of the London Committee; and that his design was approved, though funds could not then be provided for its execution in bronze. We can vouch for the correctness of this statement, having inspected and described Mr. Cruikshank's design, or rather the model produced by Mr. Adams-Acton, about seven years ago. It is to be regretted that the committees in London and Stirling, when they thought fit to supersede that design by giving the commission to Mr. Andrew Currie for the statue in stone, did not fairly acknowledge the services of those two gentlemen who had already performed their task so well. Mr. Currie's design, as a work of art, merits all the praise it has received; but its main idea—that of the hero "sheathing his sword and looking down in pity on the slain"—is borrowed from Mr. Cruikshank. The design of Mr. Cruikshank was also more in accordance with historical or antiquarian truth, at least in some important particulars of costume; for Robert Bruce is stated to have worn a Royal coronet at the battle, and his beard was probably close shaven, in the fashion of Norman Knights, to admit of the chain-armor hood covering his cheeks and chin. We are sorry that an apparent personal slight has been inflicted upon Mr. Cruikshank, who has so many claims to public esteem.

THE WAR: FIELD AMBULANCE BEFORE PLEVNA—WAITING FOR THE WOUNDED.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

We seem to be getting on in the way of civilisation very nicely indeed. I have before me a pamphlet of thirty-two pages, appropriately bound in flame-colour, issued by a highly respectable City firm who are desirous of manufacturing a large supply of "Greek Fire Torpedo-Boats" for Governments anxious to provide themselves with any pretty tiny kickshaws of that kind. The manufacturers are of opinion that the Greek Fire cited by Gibbon, and which the Byzantine Emperors so often and so successfully used in their naval wars, was only Crude Petroleum, or naphtha, imported for the purpose from the island of Zante, from the shores of the Caspian, and from Dacia, the modern principality of Roumania. It may not be generally known that during the Crimean War an English gentleman applied for a patent for the use of coal-tar naphtha in warfare, but that the patent was not granted until after the war was over. On the other hand, it is generally known that in the American Rebellion in 1863 the Federal Commanders launched large quantities of nasty burning stuff which they called Greek Fire, and which was probably a preparation of some form of hydro-carbon, into the streets of Charleston. Nor will it easily be forgotten how cau-de-vie bottles full of petroleum, and fitted with neat little detonating capsules, were among the toys used by ladies of a Communistic way of thinking in Paris, in May, 1867.

It is refreshing to learn that a single gallon of crude petroleum, judiciously discharged over a surface of one hundred square feet and then ignited, will for the next ten or fifteen minutes render the area uninhabitable for human beings; and that if, say, sixty gallons of crude petroleum are spread over an area of several thousand square feet and then ignited, the conflagration cannot be subdued so long as the material lasts. It is truly beautiful to find, in conclusion, that the manufacturers of the Greek Torpedo-Boats claim that they are advancing the principles of humanity, inasmuch as by the influence of the "choke-damp" generated by ignited petroleum the crews of ships are only, in the first instance, driven into the interior of their vessels, and are thus given an opportunity to surrender; whereas, by the immediate application of rams and torpedoes no such opportunity is vouchsafed. There it is. Mr. Gamfield, the chimney-sweep in "Oliver Twist," claimed to be a humane man for the reason that when he kindled a fire of straw in the grate to assist the progress of the little boy who was clambering up the flue, he always damped the straw before lighting it. Thus, the boy, being half choked by the fumes of the burning straw, made haste to reach the top of the chimney. A mere dry blaze would only have roasted the soles of his feet, and he might have slid down again in his agony. It is thus that Science alleviates the woes of humanity, and, when she seems most cruel, is, in reality, most beneficently kind. I shall have the flame-coloured pamphlet bound up with my "Thomas à Kempis" and my "Life of St. Francis."

The complimentary dinner given at Willis's on Saturday evening last to Mr. Archibald Forbes by his brother journalists and personal friends was a brilliant success. It was certainly a very representative gathering of the English press. American journalism, too, was "illustrated" by the presence of Mr. J. Russell Young of the New York Herald, Mr. Smalley of the New York Tribune, and Mr. D. Moncreux Conway. It is worthy of note, too, that among the English journalists who were met to do honour to their comparatively young colleague (Mr. Forbes is barely forty years of age) there happened to be the very oldest Special War Correspondent in Europe, my dear old friend Charles Lewis Gruneisen, who more than forty years ago was the representative of the Morning Post in the Carlist-Christino wars in Spain. Yes; Mr. Gruneisen dates from the days of the first Don Carlos and Zumalacarrregui and the Cura Morales. The very first "Specials" were, I believe, those sent by the Times and Morning Herald to "do" the Siege of Antwerp in 1831-2. There was, fortunately, not much oratory at the Forbes banquet; and, considering all things, it was over very early indeed. Mr. Archibald Forbes himself was too deeply moved by the enthusiasm with which the toast of his health was proposed to say much; but a graceful and telling speech was subsequently made by Lord Houghton—an always ready and eloquent orator—who in a very happy manner qualified the style of a correspondent penning his despatches on a field of battle as being punctuated by the roar of artillery and the clash of sabres, with file-firing for commas, volleys of musketry for semi-colons, charges of cavalry for dashes, and now and then a bombshell by way of a full stop.

Mem.: The first civil mention in print of a Special Correspondent that I can remember is in George Borrow—either in the "Bible" or the "Gipsies in Spain." The author of "Lavengro" met at Madrid some members of that band of "Specials" of whom Mr. Gruneisen was one; and spoke of them as "wonderful men." Per contra, when William Howard Russell wrote home his first brilliant letters from the Crimea he was sneered at in the Saturday Review as a "Luca fa Presto"—a dashing dauber, so to speak.

All those who are interested in popular legends, antique traditions, superstitions, nursery rhymes, old-faunted proverbs, and familiar locutions, quaint manners and customs, and, indeed, in all that goes by the generic name of "folk lore," will rejoice to hear that the originator of the term, the veteran Mr. J. W. Thomas, whilom Editor of Notes and Queries and librarian of the House of Lords, is busy organising a "Folk-Lore Society," the head-quarters of which are to be in London, and the subscription to which is to be a pound a year. I would rather that the subscription were a guinea. The extra shilling is not missed; "little fishes eat sweet;" and what says the old song?—"I'd rather have a guinea than a one-pound note." The object of the Folk-Lore Society (of which I am glad to see that ladies as well as gentlemen are to be eligible as members) will be to collect, store-up, and publish accounts of all manner of curious, out-of-the-way old-wives' erudition. Mr. G. Laurence Gomme is to be Honorary Secretary of the Society, which I shall hasten to join—if they will receive me. I have that within me which passeth show in the matter of folk lore; and I burn to unburden myself. I want to prove my favourite theories that Old Daddy Longlegs was a Lollard or a Wykliffite parson who declined to read the liturgy in Latin; that Jack Sprat and his wife were Empson and Dudley; and I have some surprising developments to make public concerning Dickens's dishes and Meg's Diversion. Who knows but that before the Folk-Lore Society is a year old we may arrive at a knowledge of the real meaning of the proverb with which Queen Elizabeth posed the pedant who boasted that he had made a collection, in one volume, of all the proverbs in the world. "Nay, but," quoth her Highness, when she had read the book, "'Bate me an ace,' quoth Bolton." Who was Bolton; and why did he want an ace abated?

The newspapers some days since briefly noticed the death and burial of Mr. Edward Tyrrell Smith, some time lessee and manager of Cremorne Gardens, of the Theatre Royal Drury Lane of Her Majesty's Theatre in the Haymarket, and of how many other theatres and other places of popular entertainment I really cannot remember. E. T. Smith was seventy-three when he passed away, and had certainly led a most miscellaneous life. He had been, in addition to his managerial positions, a Bow-street runner (one of the original "Robin Redbreasts," prior to 1829), an inspector of police, an auctioneer, a newspaper proprietor, a licensed victualler, and a wine merchant; and I have heard that at one period he used to drive the stage-coach which plied between Brussels and Waterloo, and in that capacity picked up the curious smattering of French which was wont so much to divert the foreign artistes when he was impresario of her Majesty's. He once offered himself as a candidate for the representation of Bedford in Parliament. There were, in fact, few things that E. T. would not undertake to do. He had not the art of making money for himself, but he gave employment during his long and active career to many thousands of professional and working people; and he was a most zealous caterer for the amusement of the public. I knew him for many years intimately, and always found him to be an honest, straightforward, and kind-hearted man. That is why I speak of him here. People, as a rule, do not care much about theatrical managers when they can take no more theatres and pay no more salaries.

Mem.: One very bitter winter some twenty years since E. T. Smith organised a daily distribution of hot soup at the stage-door of the T.R.D.L. Meeting Robert Brough, the dramatist, under the colonnade of the theatre, he asked him, somewhat self-complacently, whether he did not think that he (E. T.) "had done the right thing this time." "The right thing!" cried Robert. "My dear Sir, you deserve the laurels of Godfrey de Bouillon and Marston of Turenne!"

That was an appalling question propounded recently by Dr. Loring to the New York County Medical Society. "Is the human eye gradually changing its form under the influence of modern civilisation?" It is Dr. Loring's opinion that constant study, incidental to the lives of so many in modern times, has a tendency to engender the derangement of the eye, and that this derangement is often perpetuated in heredity. I should agree in this with the Doctor, if I could persuade myself (which I cannot) that we study as hard as our forefathers did. Nowadays, everybody knows a little, but nobody seems to know much; and in literature and theology one looks in vain for such monsters of erudition as the Bezaz and Scaligers, the Cruquises and Bayles, the Moreris and Leibnitzes, or such "gulfs of learning" as Hooker and Bishop Andrews. One cannot, at the same time, dissent from Dr. Loring when he points out that among the most prominent causes of the ailment known as shortsightedness are poor food, bad ventilation, and a general disregard of hygienic requirements—all conducing to a laxity of tissue of which nearsightedness is an indication. For reading and writing purposes, I have myself only one eye; and when I find, late at night, that "laxity of tissue" is beginning to set in, I take a pinch of very strong snuff. The "tissue" seems to get all right again after that; but what the effect of the snuff may be on my mucous membrane I dare not conjecture.

Mem.: A lady correspondent obligingly sent me, a few days since, a cutting from a newspaper concerning a fireman and a fox. In the hurry of moving to town from Brighton I lost the newspaper cutting. Will my correspondent be good enough to tell me what the gist of the paragraph was?

ILLUSTRATED BOOKS FOR CHRISTMAS.

The approaching close of the year and the customary celebration of Christmas and New-Year's Day are reputed to occasion a great demand for acceptable gift-books, though we doubt whether such presents be not more usually reserved for the birthdays of our friends and relations, which happen at all times of the year. Publishers, however, are, of all classes and trades, the most conservative in adhering to established fashions, modes, and periods of doing their business; and we have already received a large number of volumes, big and small, cheap and costly, plain and ornamental, of literature original and selected, with or without pictorial illustrations, in a variety of bindings, altogether more or less novel and attractive, which seem to demand timely notice. It is obviously impossible, within so brief a space and with scanty leisure just now, to read through any of these books with critical attention, and to give a sufficient estimate of their contents for the satisfaction of prudent readers. A few minutes, or perhaps an hour, must serve for the inspection of each work; and we can spare but a few lines, or a single paragraph, for the summary account of its design, matter, and style, from which some people may judge whether it is likely to be worth their looking at upon the bookseller's counter. One would rather not take the responsibility of advising their purchases; there is such great difference of tastes.

It is just that we should first mention those volumes which appear to have been produced at large cost, and the success of which is of considerable pecuniary importance to their publishers. The Fine Arts, constituting an elegant theme of study and discourse, which can be made to accompany the series of photographs or engravings representing choice works of art, must answer for some of these publications. Messrs. Chatto and Windus have brought out a collection of etchings, by English and foreign artists, which they announce by the general title, Examples of Contemporary Art. The plates are fourteen, executed by Messrs. Lalauze, Abot, Martial, Hédouin, Waltner, Milius, Chauvel, Greux, Champollion, A. Monzies, R. W. Macbeth, and Damman. The English pictures which they represent are "The Beguiling of Merlin," by Mr. Burne Jones, and the portrait of Lady Lindsay, of Balcarres, by Mr. G. F. Watts, R.A., from the Grosvenor Gallery; "The Queen of the Swords," by Mr. Orchardson, A.R.A., and Mr. R. W. Macbeth's "Potato Harvest in the Fens;" besides which there is an etching, by E. Abot, of the group of sculpture, "Athlete Strangling a Python," by Mr. F. Leighton, R.A. The French and other foreign artists whose pictures are included in this volume are Messrs. Jules Breton, in "La Glaneuse," Fortuny, "Moors playing with a vulture in Morocco," Gonzalez, Chaplin, Paczka, Duez, Van Marcke, Bernier, and Cormon, with specimens from the Paris Salon of 1877. Mr. J. Comyns Carr, the editor of this publication, has written a critical essay upon the exhibition at the Grosvenor Gallery, and one upon the last Royal Academy Exhibition, which will no doubt prove worthy of a careful and thoughtful perusal. A corresponding article upon the last Paris Exhibition is supplied by M. Charles Tardieu. We need say no more to those who know what is the power of etchings, and how far they can render the effects of painting in oil.

The educated lover of high art in the department of sculpture cannot, we suppose, choose any book of art-illustrations more likely to satisfy his taste than the one which next presents itself to our regard. It is published by Messrs. Griffith and Farran, and consists of twenty-five permanent photographs, by Mr. Stephen Thompson, from the noblest Greek works in the Vatican, the Louvre, and the British Museum. Every complete scholar who is well acquainted with the spirit and manner of the ancient classics will be prepared to allow that the study of Greek sculpture is an essential part of mental culture and refinement, so far as concerns the æsthetic and imaginative faculties, and the ethical perception of beauty. This has lately been much insisted upon, as an argument for providing national collections of casts from the antique, similar to those already existing in many German capital cities and university towns. We are not sanguine that our own Government, or any considerable portion of the British public, will soon be persuaded to incur even the comparatively small cost and trouble of such an establishment as Mr. W. C. Perry and Mr. C. T. Newton have recently proposed. The actual possession, however, of the Elgin Marbles, that unapproached standard of truth, grace, and power in the plastic art, will continue to be a great advantage for English students; and few persons of the middle class who are enthusiastic upon this subject need despair of some day visiting the museums in Paris, and even in Rome. In the mean time, an acceptable token and memorial of the highest achievements in sculpture will be found in this superb volume, entitled Masterpieces of Antique Art. It must rank with the best works of its class ever yet produced. That the selection is most judicious will appear from an enumeration of its contents—namely, the "Discobolus," by Myron; the Theseus, the Ilissus, and the Fates, by Phidias; three portions of the bas-reliefs from the frieze of the Parthenon; the bronze head of Aphrodite, and the head of Æsculapius, also in the British Museum; the Apollo Belvedere, the Laocoon, the Belvedere Mercury, the Meleager, the Adonis, the Nile group, and the Sleeping Ariadne, of the Vatican; with the seated statues of Alexander and Poseidippus, the Athlete of Lysippus, an Amazon, and the realistic portrait-statue of Lucius Verus, also in the Vatican; the admirable Venus of Melos (commonly called of Milo) in the Louvre at Paris; and two or three minor works in our own national collection. They are arranged not precisely as mentioned above, but in such an order as to show the progress, or rather the gradual change, in some respects a decline, which the art of Greece underwent from the fifth century before Christ to its servitude under the patronage of Imperial Rome. Mr. Thompson's brief commentary upon each specimen of the grand series is guided by sound knowledge and correct taste.

One of the most considerable new works, serving to illustrate the history of art, is that of Mr. John Forbes-Robertson, The Great Painters of Christendom, from Cimabue to Watteau. It forms, with the accompaniment of nearly 250 fine wood-engravings, the substance of a very handsome quarto volume, containing four or five hundred pages of beautiful print and paper, in an elegant binding, which Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin have just issued. Mr. Forbes-Robertson is too well known as a learned and judicious art-critic for the reader to need our testimony on his behalf in regard to the competent authorship of this extensive historical treatise. Thirty years' constant study and experience of paintings, and of opinions which have been current respecting the art, must be supposed to have amply qualified him for the task here undertaken, which he has discharged in no perfunctory or superficial manner. We cannot, in the small space allotted to this notice, analyse the contents of his work, or indicate its critical tendencies and original or characteristic views. They will certainly be found worthy of attentive examination by those who can employ their leisure in gaining a correct appreciation of the authentic standards and canons of excellence in different schools of pictorial art. The Italian school, from the thirteenth century down to Salvator Rosa, Carlo Dolci, and even Canaletto, including probably the greatest masters of expression, and of grace and beauty in form, occupy the first division of the book. Michelangelo's Libyan Sibyl, from the Sistine Chapel, appears in a line-engraving for its frontispiece. The works of sculpture, as well as the pictures, in which that renowned artist, and others of his countrymen, show their peculiar qualities of conception, are sometimes represented, for the better exemplification of Mr. Forbes-Robertson's remarks upon them. Each painter's biographical memoir, not the least interesting part of the work, is adorned with a small but lifelike portrait, in medallion shape, keeping up a sort of present personal companionship. The Flemish, Dutch, and German schools, from the two Van Eycks, above four hundred years ago, and of course including all the great painters of the seventeenth century, take up more than one hundred pages, but the Germans are comparatively few and insignificant. The Spanish school is represented only by Zurbaran, Velasquez, and Murillo. French art, in which the Poussins and Claude, with others of less renown, achieved a high reputation, and which, in a different style, was supported by the fashionable Court painters of a later age, is reviewed down to the most eminent masters of our own day, Horace Vernet, Paul Delaroche, Ary Scheffer, Decamps, and others. But none of the French or English artists still living are discussed in Mr. Forbes-Robertson's critical history. The painters of our own nation whom he brings under review are Hogarth, Reynolds, Gainsborough, Romney, Richard Wilson, Benjamin West, Fuseli (an Englishman by adoption), Northcote, Smirke, Stothard, Blake, Morland, Lawrence, Turner, Constable, and Wilkie. Some omissions could, perhaps, be pointed out in this list, from those who ought to be mentioned, particularly among Scottish artists. But the substantial completeness of this book, as a general account of European art-history, will not be disputed. Its value to the student and connoisseur has been shown by the mere enumeration of its contents.

The large and comprehensive work of M. Paul Lacroix ("Le Bibliophile Jacob" of Paris) upon Le Moyen Age, has repeatedly commanded our attention. Its English version, copiously illustrated and adorned with beautiful coloured prints in chromo-lithography, and with a vast number of wood-engravings, was formerly issued by Messrs. Chapman and Hall. The enterprising firm in Leicester-square, Messrs. Bickers and Son, who have purchased the copyright, as well as the same author's work on "The Eighteenth Century," now present us with a new volume of "The Middle Ages," which is the fourth, the concluding part, and not the least interesting, of the historic and antiquarian dissertation. It is devoted to The Science and Literature of the Middle Ages, which seems an immense, manifold, and diversified topic of discussion, but which may prove to have a certain unity, when treated by a competent scholar with French lightness of hand and literary skill. To follow the Bibliophile Jacob, in his course of descriptive chit-chat, with ever so many little pictures by the way, through an account of the mediæval schools and universities, philosophies, fancies, and superstitious fables, poetry and romance, alchemies and astrologies, histories and chronicles, dramatic performances, preachings, and other intellectual exercises, would be a pleasant task if we had but space and leisure. We commend it to readers who have enough of both. They must, however, expect to find that French instances are made to occupy the greater part of the extensive ground. Dante is put off with twenty lines, Petrarch with ten lines, and Chaucer with five. M. Lacroix, indeed, has no adequate appreciation of the general advance of the human mind.

The new volume of Picturesque Europe, a splendidly illustrated work of descriptive topography, published by Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin, has been completed for this season. It is, like the first volume, occupied with the British Isles; and its contents form an exhibition of some of the most interesting scenery in provincial counties, both north and south of the Tweed. The first chapter presents a few examples of "Old English Homes," not only those famous noble mansions, Haddon Hall, ruined Kenilworth, Penshurst, and the like, with Hever Castle, Scarborough Castle, and Chepstow Castle, but some antique town houses in Bristol, and the George Inn, at Glastonbury. In speaking, by the way, of Kenilworth Castle, the writer of this chapter points out, not for the first time, that Sir Walter Scott perpetrates an anachronism in bringing Shakespeare, as well as Raleigh and Bacon, to the Earl of Leicester's grand entertainment there in 1575. But he does not observe that Sir Walter, though he personally visited Kenilworth to make accurate local observations for the materials of his story, has described the Castle buildings as "grey," whereas they are constructed entirely of red stone. We do not, indeed, think it matters very much in a romantic fiction, the entire story of Amy Robsart and her marriage being quite different, in fact, from what Scott's fancy has made it; seeing that she died some time before, and had been publicly espoused to Robert Dudley at the Court of Edward VI. This is the privileged trick of genius—"atque ita mentitur, sic veris falsa remiscet." The next chapter calls itself "The West Coast of Ireland;" but this is surely a misnomer—we will not say an "Irish bull"—for it is the north and the east coasts, all round Donegal and Antrim, and down to Dublin Bay, that here chiefly engage the reader's attention. "Border Castles and Counties," dwelling especially on the banks of the Tweed and Teviot, the Ettrick and Yarrow, and the west-country Esk, forms the next subject of discourse. We are somewhat amazed at the awful exaggeration in the picture of Smailholm Tower. "Cathedral Cities" is a desultory paper, slightly treating of Gloucester, Canterbury, York, Durham, Salisbury, Rochester, Exeter, Hereford, and Lincoln, or at least of their majestic ecclesiastical buildings. It is followed by one which bears the title of "The Grampians," but which extends its descriptive limits to the mountains of Loch Lomond, and even to Turnberry Castle, on the Ayrshire coast; while the Bass Rock, in a fine steel engraving, from Birket Foster's drawing, confronts its final page. There is another paper on "Scotland, from Loch Ness to Loch Eil," which includes the Isle of Staffa, so that we find the Scottish, as well as the Irish, geography rather confused. The writers in these cases, Dr. Waller and Mr. James Grant, have, of course, made no confusion, but it arises simply from an inappropriate title, for which neither of those gentlemen may be answerable. The most satisfactory chapters, to our mind, are those on Oxford and Cambridge, the former by Mr. R. J. King, the latter by the Rev. T. G. Bonney; "The West Coast of Wales," and "South Wales," by Mr. H. Schütz Wilson; "North Devon" and "The South Coast of Devonshire," by Mr. R. J. King; there is also a fair account of the English Lake Country, by the Rev. Mr. Bonney; and Mr. H. S. Pearce describes the Isle of Wight. It is, however, by the merits of the illustrations, and especially of the dozen steel engravings, with a multitude of finely-executed woodcuts, that this publication will stand eminent among works of its kind. The artists whose drawings are reproduced on these steel plates, Messrs. Birket Foster, S. Read, Wimperis, H. Fenn, D. McKewan, W. Leitch, J. B. Smith, and S. Cook, have rendered the happiest effects of landscape and architecture with their usual fidelity; and these are well preserved by the engravers, to whom likewise due praise should be given.

A noble subject for picturesque topography is The Rhine Illustrated, from its Source to the Sea; which fills a portly and handsome volume, published by Messrs. Bickers and Son, Leicester-square. The descriptive and historical commentary, written by three German authors, Karl Stieler, H. Wachenhusen, and F. W. Hackländer, has been translated by Mr. G. C. T. Bartley. The engravings, about sixty of full-page size, and three hundred and sixty smaller woodcuts, are designed by above twenty German artists, from original landscape drawings, or from the photographs of architecture and of smaller objects. The entire course of that great and famous river, from its sources in the Alpine glaciers, near the entrances to the Via Mala and the Splügen passes, down through the Lake of Constance, on to Schaffhausen, Bâle, and Freiburg, thence to Strasburg, to Worms and Mayence, with excursions into the Schwarzwald and the Odenwald, to Baden, Heidelberg, and Darmstadt, and soon afterwards to Frankfurt, to Wiesbaden, and to Homburg, in the Taunus range, and other pleasant haunts of the tourist not far away from the Rhine, is here followed in a very engaging manner. Nassau and Ems, on the Lahn, and Trèves, on the Moselle, with Aix-la-Chapelle or Aachen, and the Rhineland generally, as well as Coblenz, the Drachenfels, Bonn, Cologne, and Düsseldorf, are included in this survey, which extends to the Dutch outlets of the river, called the Waal and Maas, in the flat country of Holland. Here is abundant variety, both of scenery and of nationality, of romantic and realistic associations, to which the writers of this book have done ample justice, while the multitude of engravings, which we cannot attempt to enumerate, will give the eye much agreeable occupation.

We next take up The Mediterranean Illustrated (T. Nelson and Sons), which is a fair description of the shores and islands of that most interesting inland sea. It begins with Gibraltar and Malta; then taking the Spanish east coast, with Granada, the South of France, the Riviera, Corsica and Sardinia, all the Italian coasts, with Sicily, Rome, Florence, and Venice, the Adriatic, Greece, Asia Minor, the Ionian Isles, Syria and Palestine, and Egypt; returning westward, by Tunis and Tripoli, to Algiers and Morocco. The mind that is alive to all the sacred, classical, religious, historic, poetic, and other reminiscences belonging to this circuit of the Mediterranean, has left not much unlearned of what literature can teach, in the recognised direction of scholarship and "culture." It is probable also that even a hearsay familiarity with the celebrated places of ancient and mediæval civilisations may have an elevating and refining influence upon the mind. In any case, these scenes and sites of a glorious past, to say nothing of what is ever beautiful, and still of practical importance, in the present aspect and condition of those countries, must be an interesting topic for all persons of intelligence. Nearly 150 engravings are comprised in the volume.

The Imperial Assemblage at Delhi, held on last New-Year's Day, to celebrate the Queen's assumption of her new title as "Empress of India," was, of course, a splendid affair. Perhaps the public mind had become rather blasé to those gorgeous Oriental ceremonial festivities, since the Prince of Wales's tour in India a twelvemonth before. But a splendid illustrated history of those Imperial proceedings, with historical notices of India and its native Princes, is a work deserving our commendation. Such is the stately volume, published by Messrs. Longmans and Co., in which Mr. J. Talboys Wheeler, author of several books of allied research, has complied, with care and skill, a sufficient amount of authentic information upon those topics. The admirable photographs, however, mostly taken by Messrs. Bourne and Shepherd, of Simla, Calcutta, and Bombay, form the most valuable contents of this work. No portraits can be more striking in their life-like and characteristic effect; the views of buildings at Delhi are likewise not to be surpassed. Portraits of her Majesty and the Viceroy, Lord Lytton, of the late Maharajah Jung Bahadur, of Scindia, of the Nizam, the Guicowar, the Maharajah of Mysore, and those of Indore, Jeypore, Oudeypore, Kashmir, and the Begum of Bhopal, are given in this series. That of the Queen or Empress Victoria is from the picture by Angeli, and does not please us so well; but Lord Lytton, attired in his robes as Grand Master of the Star of India, is a graceful figure and an excellent likeness. The work is, altogether, a very fine one, and worthy of the grand occasion.

The American Centennial Exhibition of last year at Philadelphia comprised an Art Gallery, to which pictures and sculptures were contributed by artists of different nations. A selection from these works, represented by sixteen steel engravings, proofs on India paper, and some fifty engravings on wood, makes the volume published by Messrs. Bradbury, Agnew, and Co., which is called International Art. Mr. Edward Strahan, who has written the introduction and descriptive notes, seems to be well acquainted with the examples and qualities of foreign art. Some of the works here reproduced are familiar to most people in England, but many others are by artists of whom we had scarcely heard before. The steel plates, at any rate, are very nicely engraved, and the book has a degree of occasional interest as a record of that Exhibition.

Our examination of the Christmas romances and fairy-tales, and the yearly bound volumes of popular magazines and illustrated serial publications, is deferred till next week. The pocket-books and diaries for the New Year may as well be noticed at once, and the pretty fluttering swarm of Christmas cards. Messrs. T. De la Rue and Co., as usual, have catered for the taste of different buyers with a variety of the neatest and most convenient little books, tablets, and almanack cards, for use during the next twelvemonth. A pocket-book of the smaller sizes, A and B, in velvet or morocco leather binding, lined with silk, is perfectly suitable for a lady; while gentlemen may prefer the C size, or those of oblong shape, for the easier writing of memoranda. The calendar tablets, or the leather frames, open in front, to admit of a change of cards for each month, showing the day of the week at each day of the month and year, should be kept in every ordinary sitting-room. They will be an ornament to the mantelpiece, with their pretty floral borders. Messrs. Marcus Ward and Co. have instituted a "Daily Date Card," with notifications of the hours of sunrise and sunset, the moon's changes, the appointed festivals and holidays, and with an "appropriate" quotation from Shakespeare, for every day in the year. The day's card is to be uncovered by tearing off yesterday's card, as they are stuck on together in front of a larger pasteboard, which exhibits the portrait of Shakespeare and several groups of Shaksperian characters. The business-like "Improved Diary and Memorandum-Book" of Messrs. De la Rue, for the desk, appears without the photographs of astronomical phenomena that used to stand for a frontispiece; and we need scarcely say that the famous Diaries and Memorandum-Books of Messrs. Letts and Co., in a variety of forms and dimensions, are still available for the constant service of practical and punctual folk. In the way of playful Christmas compliments, and graceful tokens of friendly remembrance, there is a sufficient abundance of ornamental cards. Mr. Eugene Rimmel, the eminent perfumer and fancy stationer, has employed his tasteful and ingenious artists to devise new wares of this kind. There are, too, several attractive sets of Christmas Cards issued by De la Rue, which represent the customs of Yule-tide, scenes in the harem life of Eastern women, English field sports, elfin gambols, antique drolleries, the habits of animals, and other notions of an entertaining character. Mr. H. Rothe, fine-art publisher, of Southampton-street, presents some very chaste floral designs on a stone-colour ground, with verses of religious poetry, or with simple mottoes and messages of kindness. These will do either for Christmas Day or New-Year's Day. From Messrs. Mullord Brothers, of Hoxton, we have received sets of playing cards, with printed directions, for the novel and amusing games of "Snip" and "Snap," that of "The Willow Pattern Plate," and an old Egyptian pastime called "The Pyramids; or, Sesostri and Thothis." But we cannot find leisure to play at these games until Christmas Eve.

MUSIC.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

Last week's specialty was the performance of "Der Freischütz" on the Thursday, for the first time in the new theatre. The occasion gave fresh evidence of the enhanced efficiency and power of Madame Marie Roze in serious and romantic opera. As Agata, the heroine of Weber's celebrated work, that lady sang with much dramatic feeling and earnestness, particularly in the great scena known (in the English version) as "Softly sighs," the prayer in which was rendered with admirable grace and pathos. Another excellent piece of vocalisation was the delivery of the cavatina in the last act, which was given with great refinement and expression. Mdlle. Bauermeister was a particularly good representative of Annetta, having been an excellent second (to Madame Roze) in the duet beginning the second act. The "Polacca" aria, too, and the romance with viola obbligato were very successfully sung by Mdlle. Bauermeister, the obligato having been skillfully played by Mr. C. Doyle. Signor Fancelli, as Max, sang well (particularly in the scena in the first act) although the character generally is not so well suited to him as most others with which he is associated. Signor Foli's Caspar was as good vocally as heretofore, and dramatically much better, especially in the incantation music and the concluding death scene. His drinking song was encored, and his revenge scena was also well given. Other characters were filled by M. Gonnet, and Signori Franceschi, Brocolini, and Grazi. The opera was very well placed on the stage, with good dresses and scenery.

"Ruy Blas" was given for the third time on the Friday, and the closing performance of the past week was "La Sonnambula."

This week's performances opened with "Lucia," on Tuesday "Ruy Blas" was given again; for Wednesday "Faust" was announced; for Thursday "Don Giovanni;" for Friday "Der Freischütz;" and for to-night (Saturday) "Les Huguenots."

The theatre is to close next Saturday, to be reopened on Boxing-Night, again under Mr. Mapleson's management.

Only two more Crystal Palace Saturday concerts remain to be given before Christmas. At the ninth of the series, last week, a new symphony by Mr. E. Prout was performed for the first time, being the second work of the kind that Mr.

Prout has produced at these concerts, the first (in C) having been brought out in February, 1874. The symphony now referred to is in the key of G minor, and consists of four divisions—an "Allegro moderato con fuoco," "Larghetto espressivo" (in E flat), "Scherzo" (in C minor, with a trio in A flat and another in C), and a finale, "Vivace assai," in the original key. The work is well sustained throughout, the most successful movement, perhaps, being the "Larghetto," which is very flowing and melodious. The instrumentation of the whole symphony is full of skilful combinations and contrasts. Each portion was greatly applauded, and the composer was called on to the platform at the close of the performance. At the same concert Mdlle. Lilly Oswald made a most successful début in her performance of Chopin's pianoforte concerto in E, in which the lady displayed exceptionally high qualities of style and execution. The impression produced was of the most favourable kind. Miss Lisa Walton made her first appearance at these concerts, and was well received, her songs having been "On mighty pens," from Haydn's "Creation," and Beethoven's lied, "New Love, New Life." Mr. E. Lloyd and Mr. B. Lane were the other vocalists. The concert opened with the overture and introductory chorus from Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Nacht" music, included a chorus from Weber's "Preciosa," and closed with the third of Beethoven's "Leonora" overtures. At the last concert of the year (on Dec. 15) Mr. J. L. Hatton's new sacred drama, "Hezekiah," will be produced.

Herr Straus appeared as leading violinist at this week's Monday Popular Concert. The programme included Cherubini's fine string quartet in D minor, in which Herr Straus's coadjutors were MM. L. Ries, Zerbini, and Piatti. Herr Straus also played Max Bruch's "Romance," and co-operated with Mr. Zerbini and Signor Piatti in Mendelssohn's pianoforte quartet in B minor; the pianist therein having been Mdlle. Dora Schirmacher, who also gave Beethoven's solo sonata in C (from op. 2) with great effect. Mr. Santley was the vocalist. At the previous Saturday afternoon concert Madame Haas was the solo pianist, and Herr Straus leading violinist.

An afternoon concert was given on Wednesday, at St. James's Hall, in aid of the Stafford House Fund for the Relief of the Sick and Wounded Turkish Soldiers. Several eminent vocalists and instrumentalists contributed to the performances.

Mr. Sydney Smith gave his second recital at Willis's Rooms on Wednesday afternoon, when the programme included his own performance of several of his new compositions.

The third of the new series of the London Ballad Concerts, and the last but one before Christmas, took place at St. James's Hall on Wednesday evening, when the programme was again of a very attractive kind.

A large number of tickets having been sold, and the artists engaged, for Miss Emily Mott's fifth annual concert, it was announced to take place, at St. James's Hall, yesterday (Friday) evening.

A second Handel Concert is to take place at the Alexandra Palace this (Saturday) evening, when selections from the works of the composer will be given.

Professor G. A. Macfarren's new oratorio, "Joseph," produced at the Leeds Triennial Musical Festival in September last, is to be given (for the first time in London) on Tuesday next by the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society, it being the second concert of their new season.

THEATRES.

The last days of the theatrical year are approaching, and some of the pantomimes are already announced. To-night the drama of "Amy Robsart" will be withdrawn from the boards of Drury Lane, and the house will be closed until the 26th inst. The pantomime to be then produced is written, as usual, by Mr. E. L. Blanchard, and is entitled "The White Cat," with scenery by Mr. William Beverley. The subject at Covent Garden is "Puss in Boots," and much may be expected from the costly style in which such productions are illustrated at that theatre. The Gaiety announces a Christmas pantomime on the subject of "Valentine and Orson." At the Princess's a new fairy play will be produced at Christmas, entitled "Elfinella."

The bills at the other theatres during the week have continued unaltered. Mr. Gilbert's comedy of "Engaged" retains possession of the Haymarket; and "Formosa" at the Adelphi, "Jane Shore" at the Princess's, and the burlesque of "Faust," still attract considerable audiences. "The Omadhaun"—affording, as it does, a suitable part for Miss Henrietta Hodson—is likely to become a favourite at the Queen's. Mention is made of a version of Sardou's "Patrie," as being intended for this theatre. We had hoped that an exceptional course might have been struck out, and that an arena for original English dramas would be opened at the Queen's. With an intelligent capitalist for the manager, some encouragement of the poetical drama might have been reasonably expected. At the Olympic "Henry Dunbar" retains the stage for a limited number of nights, to be succeeded by "The Turn of the Tide," when Mrs. Leigh Murray, it is said, joins Mr. Neville's company. The Strand rejoices in a trio of successful pieces—"Timothy to the Rescue," "Family Ties," and "Champagne." At the Prince of Wales's "An Unequal Match" remains a distinguishing feature. "Stolen Kisses" and "Our Boys" are still in the ascendant at the Globe and Vaudeville. At the Duke's "Sardanapalus" has been cordially accepted by the public. "The House of Darnley" at the Court maintains its attraction. "The Porter's Knot" and "The Pink Dominoes" command crowded houses, as usual, at the Criterion. The morning performances at this theatre have been continued, according to the programme given last week. The Crystal Palace on Tuesday presented Mr. Byron's play of "Blow for Blow," and on Thursday a drama entitled "£100,000," in which Mr. Lionel Brough appeared. The Surrey, having closed the engagement with the Californian actor, in his singularly-entitled drama, "Fates and Furies," on Saturday produced respectable versions of "The Heart of Midlothian" and "East Lynne" with success. In the former piece Miss Eloise Juno ably supported the character of Jeannie Deans, and Miss Lily Stone that of Effie. The important part of Georgie Robertson was played with spirit by Mr. I. A. Arnold, and Mr. Harry Taylor made quite a hit in Dumbiedikes. The drama was effectively cast throughout.

Sir Stafford Northcote on Tuesday attended the celebration of the opening of the Christchurch and Bournemouth Conservative and Constitutional Club, on behalf of which association an address was presented to him. In the course of his speech he said that he firmly believed the Government possessed the confidence of the country in regard to Eastern affairs, but deprecated question on the subject, in view of the danger which might arise from the utterance of an imprudent word as to the relations of the Government with foreign countries.

RESCUE.

MAP OF WESTERN BULGARIA, WITH SOFIA, AND THE DANUBE TO THE AUSTRIAN FRONTIER.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

LADY GOMM.

Elizabeth Anne, Lady Gomm, who died at her residence in Spring-gardens, on the 31st ult., was the eldest daughter of Major-General Lord Robert Kerr, by Mary, his wife, daughter of the Rev. Edmund Gilbert, of Windsor House, Cornwall, and was granddaughter of William John, fifth Marquis of Lothian, K.T. Her Ladyship was married, as his second wife, in 1830, to Field Marshal Sir William Maynard Gomm, G.C.B., Colonel Coldstream Guards, at one time Commander-in-Chief in India, and was left a widow, March 15, 1875.

GENERAL LORD HENRY PERCY.

General Lord Henry Hugh Manvers Percy, K.C.B., V.C., brother of the Duke of Northumberland, was found dead on his bed on Monday afternoon at his residence in Eaton-square. He had been out for his usual carriage drive in the morning, and after luncheon went to his bed-room. Some time afterwards his servant entered the room, and found him on the bed, apparently asleep; but the medical men called in suppose that he had been dead about an hour. Lord Henry Percy was the youngest son of George, fifth Duke of Northumberland, and was born Aug. 22, 1817. He obtained his first commission in the Grenadier Guards in July, 1836, and served with that regiment in Canada during the insurrection in 1838, and in the Eastern campaign of 1854-5. He was present at the battles of Alma (where he was wounded), Balaklava, and Inkerman (where he was again wounded), and for his personal bravery at the latter conflict he received the Victoria Cross. He also received the brevet rank of Colonel, and was appointed Aide-de-Camp to the Queen. Afterwards he was appointed to command the British-Italian Legion, with the local rank of Brigadier-General. He commanded the first battalion Grenadier Guards on the expedition through New Brunswick after the Trent affair, and retired from the regiment in 1862. In July, 1865, he was elected M.P. for North Northumberland, and sat for the county till December, 1868. He was appointed Colonel of the 89th (Princess Victoria's) Foot in June, 1874, and obtained the rank of General on Oct. 1 last, under the new Army scheme.

ADMIRAL HENRY BAGOT.

Admiral Henry Bagot, who died on the 30th ult., at Brewood Hall, near Stafford, aged sixty-seven, was second son of the Hon. and Right Rev. Richard Bagot, D.D., Bishop of Bath and Wells, grandson of William, first Lord Bagot, and nephew of the fourth Earl of Jersey. He married first, Nov. 17, 1846, Wilhelmina Frederica, daughter of the late Right Hon. Sir Charles Bagot, G.C.B.; and, secondly, Feb. 9, 1858, Eleanor, daughter of the late E. S. Chandos-Pole, Esq., of Radborne, Derbyshire, and leaves issue by both wives. He attained the rank of Admiral this year.

MR. WHEELER, OF OTTERDEN PLACE.

The Rev. Charles Wheeler, M.A., of Ledston Hall, Yorkshire and Otterden Place, Faversham, died on the 20th ult., aged eighty-three. He was son of Granville William Hastings Medhurst, Esq., of Kippax Hall, Yorkshire, and assumed the surname of Wheeler in 1843, on succeeding his cousin, Granville Hastings Wheeler, Esq. The Rev. Mr. Wheeler graduated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford; was lord of the manor of Charing, Kent; patron of five livings, and a very large landed proprietor. He derived his descent from the Rev. Sir George Wheeler, Knt., D.D., of Charing and Odham, son of Colonel Charles Wheeler, of the Life Guards, who suffered exile for his loyalty to Charles I. Sir George married Grace Higgins, niece of John Granville, Earl of Bath, and had a son, the Rev. Granville Wheeler, who married Lady Catherine Hastings, daughter of the Earl of Huntingdon, and was great-grandfather of the gentleman whose death we record.

The deaths have also been announced of—

The Rev. Robert Tritton, M.A., Rector of Morden, Surrey, on the 27th ult., in his eighty-sixth year.

John Mitchell, Esq., J.P., on the 29th ult., suddenly, at Summerhill House, Lyme Regis, aged sixty-three years.

William Turner, Esq., J.P. and D.L., late Judge of County Courts, Sussex, on the 25th ult., aged eighty-seven.

The Very Rev. Michael J. Keating, M.A., Dean of Kilfenora, and Vicar-Choral of St. Mary's Cathedral, Limerick, on the 25th ult., at Limerick, aged eighty.

James Wilson Rimington-Wilson, Esq., J.P., of Broomhead Hall and Newstead Hall, Yorkshire, at Broomhead, on the 25th ult., aged fifty-four.

Colonel John Wildman, a Peninsular and Waterloo veteran, who for many years was owner of Newstead Abbey, on the 28th ult., at his chambers, in Hanover-square.

The Rev. William Fraser, D.C.L., for twenty years Vicar of Alton, Staffordshire, and for some time Proctor in Convocation for the diocese of Lichfield, on the 26th ult., at Alton Vicarage, aged fifty-three.

The Rev. William Hiley Bathurst, M.A., of Lydney Park, Gloucestershire, on the 25th ult., aged eighty-one. He was only surviving son of the Right Hon. Charles Bragge, M.P. (who assumed the name of Bathurst), by Charlotte, his wife, daughter of Anthony Addington, M.D., of Upper Ottery, Devon. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford; and was lord of the manor of Lydney.

John Entwistle Peel, Esq., of Llanstinan, Pembrokeshire, on the 23rd ult., at Beechwood House, Cheltenham, aged sixty-seven. He was son of Robert Peel, Esq., of Bath, and grandson of Lawrence Peel, Esq., of Ardwick, younger brother of the first Sir Robert Peel, Bart. He married Anna Maria Cordelia, only child of James James, Esq., and niece of Sir W. P. L. Philips, Bart., by whom he had two daughters.

Henry Alexander, Esq., of Forkhill, in the county of Armagh, at 6, Marine-parade, Dover, on the 1st inst., in his seventy-fifth year. He was fourth son of the Most Rev. Nathaniel Alexander, D.D., Bishop of Meath, by Anne, his wife, daughter of the Right Hon. Richard Jackson, of Coleraine; and was grandson of Robert Alexander, of Broomhall, Londonderry, elder brother of the first Earl of Caledon. He married, 1839, Lady Louisa Knox, daughter of the second Earl of Ranfurly, by whom he leaves issue. He was a D.L. for the county of Armagh, and served as High Sheriff in 1856.

The Marquis of Headfort laid the foundation-stone of a new wing to the Adelaide Hospital, Dublin, on Tuesday. The cost will be £13,000.

An extraordinary memorial to the Queen upon the distress prevailing in the district of Dean Forest has been signed by ten dames of the Forest, each about eighty years of age; ten mothers, each of whom has ten children; ten widows of ten colliers, ten orphan girls, and ten ladies.

The King of Holland has awarded a massive gold medal to Mr. Charles L. W. Gardiner, an enterprising English yachtsman, in honour of the recovery by him and the presentation to the Dutch Government of the final relics of the Barents Expedition of 1597 to Nova Zembla, which are now deposited in the Naval Museum at the Hague.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications relating to this department of the Paper should be addressed to the Editor, and have the word "Chess" written on the envelope.

A L P.—We know of no playing machine bearing either of the names mentioned, but imagine you must be referring to the automaton exhibited at the London Aquarium. SARRS.—Either "The Chess Openings" by R. B. Wormald, or the "Synopsis of the Chess Openings" by W. Cook, would answer your purpose.

W. P. POOL.—The Hackney Chess Club meets at No. 194, Mare-street, and the North London Chess Club at the Mitford, Hackney.

E. H. H. V.—Obliged for the information. A revised problem is not, per se, inadmissible, especially when it embodies a good idea; but, very evidently, no composer ought to send any such modified position without, at the same time, furnishing a statement of the facts. At present, we do not know whether that course was adopted in the instance to which you refer.

J. C. (Hull).—Made in two moves by 1. Kt to Q 4th (dis. ch.).

D. D. (Dundee).—Scarcely up to the mark, we are afraid.

CAPTAIN MELNADO and J. TARRANT.—Your communications to hand. We shall at all times be glad to give publicity to the proceedings of your respective clubs.

Da F. ST.—A chess problem which admits of more than one solution is, of course defective.

H. HELLWELL.—"English Chess Problems" or Messrs. Pierce's Problems will either of them please you well.

W. C. D. SMITH.—On the following Thursday.

J. G. FINCH.—Problem received.

J. A. M. (Fakenham).—Unable to do so this week, but will endeavour to find an opportunity.

PROBLEMS received from W. Grimshaw, W. T. Pierce, J. J. Watta, J. G. Finch, and M. Clark. CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1760 received from H. Stebbing, W. B. Grove, N. B. (Freckenham), E. Burkhard, Jane Nott Utrecht, and P. S. Shenale.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1761 received from Jane N. of Utrecht, P. S. Shenale, South Bank, J. H. Skelton, S. Phelps, R. F. Prettejohn, H. Beermann, Queenwood, J. M. Barker, E. Burkhard, A. Middleton, H. F. J. Longfield, M. Clark, E. Clarkson, A. J. Johnson, E. Forster, H. Roe, H. Stebbing, T. Burrell, F. Smart, F. Long, and A. W. A.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1762 received from Woolwich Chess Club, Robin Gray, P. S. Shenale, H. A. N. E. H. V. Cant, M. C. Haywood, Paul's Root, M. McIntyre, M. A. W., R. H. Brooks, W. T. Aman, W. C. Dutton, N. Powell, G. Wright, Long Stop, and Only Jones.

* * * This problem cannot be solved, as many correspondents have supposed, by 1. R to R 4th. Black's reply to that move is B to K 5th, after which White, being himself exposed to a discovered check, cannot effectively capture the Bishop, nor has he any forcing line of play on.

NOTE.—The first player in the second game published by us on the 26th ult. was Mr. W. T. Pierce. It is right that this should be made clear, in order that he may have full credit for his very ingenious invention on the eighth move.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 1761.

WHITE. BLACK. WHITE. BLACK.
1. Q to Q B 7th Any move 2. Mates accordingly.

PROBLEM No. 1764.

By W. GRIMSHAW.

BLACK.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

CHESS IN GERMANY.

A Game, hitherto unpublished, between Herr HELLWIG and the eminent Prussian Analyst, Herr DURNESSE. It was played in 1872.

(Sicilian Defence.)

WHITE (Herr D.) BLACK (Herr H.)
1. P to K 4th P to Q 4th
2. Kt to K B 3rd P to K 3rd
3. Kt to Q B 3rd P to K 3rd
4. P to Q 4th P takes P
5. Kt takes P B to Kt 5th

This descent of the Bishop seems to involve a tardy development of Black's forces. We should have preferred Kt to Q B 3rd.

6. B to Q 3rd P to Q 3rd
7. B to Q 2nd Kt to K B 3rd
8. Castles B to B 4th
9. Kt to Kt 3rd B to B 2nd
10. B to Kt 5th

Q to K 2nd, to be followed in most cases by B to K 3rd, appears more to our judgment. The invited move of P to B 3rd will only tend to Black's advantage.

11. Q to Q 2nd Kt to B 3rd
12. B to K 3rd P to B 3rd
13. P to K R 3rd B to Kt 4th
14. P to Kt 4th Kt to K 4th
15. P to B 4th P takes P
16. B takes P B to Kt sq

Black has now a very strong attack, and this may be said to arise altogether from the fact that five moves back his K R P advanced, under provocation, to the third rank.

17. Q R to K B sq Kt to B 4th
18. K R to B 2nd Kt to Kt 5th
19. Kt to Q 4th and the game was then drawn by mutual consent.

CHESS INTELLIGENCE.

An important provincial chess meeting takes place at the Guildhall, Grantham, on the 31st inst. Tournaments are announced for various degrees of strength. In the chief of these the Lincoln County Association offers a prize of £10, and thereto his Royal Highness Prince Leopold has added a £5 cup. There will be two other prizes—viz., of £5 and £2. The entrance-fee is £1 1s.; and all British amateurs (not including the chief prize-winners in London tournaments) are eligible. In the second-class tournament the first prize is £7, and the entrance-fee 10s. 6d. In the third class the entrance-fee will be 5s., with prizes according to the entries. Play in the above-mentioned contests will commence on the 31st inst., and will continue during the week. There will also be a displacement competition, with a prize of £5 5s., offered by the Rev. G. Greene. Play to commence on Jan. 7. Intending competitors are to send in their names, with subscriptions, on or before the 15th inst., to the Rev. A. B. Skipworth, Burnham, Lynn, Norfolk.

The pairing for the third round of the City of London Chess Club has taken place; and amongst the most noticeable names drawn together are the following—viz., MacDonnell v. Potter, Huckle v. Watta, Beardsell v. Block, and Delaunay v. Lord.

It is with great regret that we announce the death of Mr. J. W. Remington Wilson, at his residence, Bromhead Hall, on the 25th ult. The deceased gentleman was a staunch supporter of chess, and was particularly known as a collector of books relating to that game. His chess library has always been considered to be one of the largest in the world.

The annual tournament of the City and County of Dublin Chess Club has been started with twenty entries, and a further number may have joined before the date of commencement—namely, the 7th instant. The various players have been arranged according to strength, and each competitor will play with every other, drawn games counting as half. Four prizes are to be competed for. Simultaneously there is to be a handicap with two prizes, the players being paired by lot.

The Railway Clearing-House Chess Club lately played a match with the Eccletic Club, the former being victorious by eight games to three, with three draws.

THE HIGH SCHOOL OF KOLAPORE.

The native Indian State of Kolapore, in the Deccan region, two or three hundred miles south-east of Bombay, is much larger than Yorkshire, and contains half a million of people. During the minority of the young Rajah, who died at Florence, while on a visit to Europe, five or six years ago, the government of this territory was administered by Colonel G. S. Anderson, Political Agent. Popular education was one of the objects to which the authorities directed their attention, and a High School was established at Kolapore, upon the plans of Sir Alexander Grant, then Director of Public Instruction in the Bombay Presidency, approved by the Governor, Sir Bartle Frere. The school has prospered, and has been found useful to the native youth of the upper classes in Kolapore, being constantly attended by 300 students. The building of which we give an illustration has been constructed from the designs of Captain C. Mant, R.E., Executive Engineer. Its interior arrangements are suitable to the purpose, with twelve classrooms for the accommodation of 350 or 400 pupils, a lecture-hall, a museum, and convenient offices. The style of architecture adopted is the Hindoo-Saracenic, to agree with that of the adjoining gateway of the Palace Yard. The institution is dedicated by name to the memory of the late Rajaram Chutraputtee, Maharajah of Kolapore, whose death has been mentioned.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will and codicil (dated April 30, 1874, and March 29, 1875) of Mr. John Leschallas, late of Page-green, Tottenham, Middlesex, who died on Oct. 18 last, were proved on the 3rd inst. by his friend, James Nicholson, and his cousin, Henry Pigé Leschallas, the two acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £500,000. He leaves to each of his executors £500; to Mr. Henry Pigé Leschallas £50,000; and numerous legacies to relatives and friends, also to some of his domestic and other servants; and £500 to each of the following institutions—viz., the London Hospital; the City of London Hospital for Diseases of the Chest, Victoria Park; the Hospital for Consumption, Brompton; the Asylum for Idiots, Earlswood; the Royal Dramatic College; the Free Cancer Hospital, West Brompton; the London Orphan Asylum, Watford; the Warehousemen and Clerks' Schools; the Commercial Travellers' Schools, Pinner; the Green School, Tottenham; the Royal Hospital for Incurables, Putney; the Asylum for Female Orphans, Beddington; the City of London Truss Society; the National Benevolent Institution; and St. Mark's Hospital, City-road. All legacies are given duty free. The residue of his real and personal estate he leaves to his said cousin Henry Pigé Leschallas, absolutely.

The will (dated Oct. 23, 1876) of Miss Elizabeth Frances Webb, late of No. 29, Chesham-place, who died on Oct. 6 last, was proved on the 3rd ult. by the Rev. William Frederick Erskine Knollys, John Wingfield Stratford, and John Endell Powles, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £70,000. The testatrix, after leaving a large number of legacies to relatives, friends, and servants, and specifically devising parts of her real estate, gives £100 each to the Gloucester Infirmary, the Oxford Infirmary, the Pimlico Dispensary, the Royal Hospital for Incurables, Putney; the Cancer Hospital, Brompton; and the Hospital for Sick Children, Great Ormond-street. The residue of her real and personal estate she leaves to her executors absolutely; her wish, however, is that they should divide it between the Cancer Hospital, Brompton, the Royal Hospital for Incurables, Putney, and the Hospital for Sick Children, Great Ormond-street; but she expressly declares that she creates no trust in their favour.

The will and codicil (dated Oct. 27, 1873, and May 5, 1876) of Miss Jane Fisher, late of Whitley Bridge Lodge, New Forest, Southampton, who died on Oct. 13 last, were proved on the 26th ult. by Herbert William Fisher, the nephew, the executor, the personal estate being sworn under £70,000. The testatrix bequeaths to the Sons of the Clergy Corporation, the Friend of the Clergy Corporation, and the London Diocesan Penitentiary, £200 each; to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, £100; considerable legacies to many of her relatives; and the residue to her said nephew, Mr. Fisher.

The will and codicil (dated Nov. 20, 1871, and Oct. 31, 1876) of Colonel the Hon. Berkeley Wodehouse, C.M.G., her Majesty's Consul at Dunkirk, who died at Pau, in France, on Sept. 13 last, were proved on the 3rd ult. by Bertram Wodehouse Currie and the Rev. Maynard Wodehouse Currie, the nephews, and Edmund Robert Wodehouse, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £30,000. The testator gives some legacies and makes provision for his son Armine; the rest of his property he leaves to his sons Killegrew Reginald and Clarence.

The will and codicil (dated Aug. 13, 1874, and July 28, 1876), of Mr. Daniel Inwood, late of Binstead, near Alton, Southampton, who died on Sept. 2 last, have been proved by Louis Leslie, William Berry, and Joseph Soames, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £30,000. The testator bequeaths £1500 each to the Hants County Hospital, Winchester; King's College Hospital, London; and the Ophthalmic Hospital, Moorfields, London; he also bequeaths £1500 to the Alton Cottage Hospital on condition of the name being changed to the Inwood's Cottage Hospital and of his executors being appointed life governors within twelve months after his decease; upon trust for his son Daniel and his children, £9000; £100 per annum to his brother George; and legacies to his executors and servants. The residue of his property he gives to the children of John Turville.

The will (dated March 1, 1876) of General Sir George Bell, K.C.B., late of No. 156, Westbourne-terrace, Hyde Park, who died on July 10 last, was proved on the 21st ult. by Lady Margaret Addison Bell, the widow, Mrs. Mary Ann Addison Maitland, the daughter, and Richard Belton Foster, the executors, the personal estate in England being sworn under £16,000. The testator bequeaths upon trust for his granddaughter, Miss Margaretta Marian Maitland, £1000; to his wife, his household furniture and effects, £200, and the income of the residue of his property for life. At her death other legacies to members of his family take effect, and the ultimate residue is to be held upon trust for his daughter, Mrs. Maitland.

Mr. Hugh Turpey was last Saturday elected for a second year Lord Mayor of Dublin.

At a meeting of the Birmingham Hospital Sunday Committee on Monday it was announced that collections were made on Oct. 28 in aid of the General Hospital, and that the proceeds amounted to £5200.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer presided yesterday week at the festival of the Scottish Corporation, and delivered a message from the Queen expressing her regret at the recent destruction of the society's hall. In proposing the toast of the evening, Sir Stafford said he thought the society's loss by fire ought not to discourage them, but, on the contrary, should serve as an incentive to redoubled exertions. Subscriptions amounting to £2700—the largest sum hitherto given—were announced, in addition to other large sums.

DR. DUNBAR'S ALKARAM, or ANTI-CATARRH SMELLING BOTTLE.

THE ONLY CURE for COLDS and SORE THROATS, BY INHALATION.

ALKARAM, if inhaled on the first symptoms of cold, will at once arrest them; and even when a cold has been neglected and become severe, it will give immediate relief, and generally cure in one day.

ALKARAM contains no narcotic, and never produces any unpleasant effects. All those who dread the usual remedies for Colds, which almost always contain morphia or chloral, may safely avail themselves of this innocent and pleasant remedy. It acts as a slight cauter, but gives no pain; on the contrary, the smell is agreeable and reviving.

ALKARAM. "Sandgate-road, Folkestone Jan. 4, 1874.

"Sir,—I have just obtained a bottle of your excellent and unrivalled Cure for Colds. I have tried at over 200 chemists for an effective cure, but never found one till I obtained your Alkaram, for which I thank you heartily.
"I am, Sir, yours, &c.,
"CYRIL DAVENOR."

ALKARAM may be safely used by Children, as will be seen from the following Testimonial:—

"49, Grosvenor-road, Highbury.
"Sir,—Allow me to testify to the efficacy of your Cure for Colds. Six of my children were troubled with colds, and, having been induced to try your Alkaram, I have much pleasure in saying that it cured them in one day thoroughly.
"I am, Sir, yours respectfully,
"LOUIS GOLDBERGER."

ALKARAM. "35, Baker-street, May 10, 1876.

"Dear Sir,—Your Alkaram is certainly a great boon, and seems to have a wonderful effect in cases of Hay-Fever and Cold in the Head. It should prove more and more valuable during the winter months, when colds are so general.
"Yours truly,

PART THE FIRST. THE DISAPPEARANCE.

CHAPTER I.

Old Lady Lydiard sat meditating by the fireside, with three letters lying open on her lap.

Time had discoloured the paper, and had turned the ink to a brownish hue. The letters were all addressed to the same person—"THE RIGHT HON. LORD LYDIARD"—and were all signed in the same way—"Your affectionate cousin, James Tollmidge." Judged by these specimens of his correspondence, Mr. Tollmidge must have possessed one great merit as a letter-writer—the merit of brevity. He will weary nobody's patience, if he is allowed to have a hearing. Let him, therefore, be permitted, in his own high-flown way, to speak for himself.

First Letter—"My statement, as your Lordship requests, shall be short and to the point. I was doing very well as a portrait-painter in the country; and I had a wife and children to consider. Under these circumstances, if I had been left to decide for myself, I should certainly have waited until I had saved a little money before I ventured on the serious expense of taking a house and studio at the west end of London. Your Lordship, I positively declare, encouraged me to try the experiment without waiting. And here I am, unknown and unemployed, a helpless artist lost in London—with a sick wife and hungry children, and bankruptly staring me in the face. On whose shoulders does this dreadful responsibility rest? On your Lordship's!"

Second Letter—"After a week's delay, you favour me, my Lord, with a curt reply. I can be equally curt on my side. I indignantly deny that I or my wife ever presumed to use your Lordship's name as a means of recommendation to sitters without your permission. Some enemy has slandered us. I claim as my right to know the name of that enemy."

Third (and last) letter—"Another week has passed—and not a word of answer has reached me from your Lordship. It matters little. I have employed the interval in making inquiries, and I have at last discovered the hostile influence which has estranged you from me. I have been, it seems, so unfortunate as to offend Lady Lydiard (how, I cannot imagine); and the all-powerful influence of this noble lady is now used against the struggling artist who is united to you by the sacred ties of kindred. Be it so. I can fight my way upwards, my Lord, as other men have done before me. A day may yet come when the throng of carriages waiting at the door of the fashionable portrait-painter will include her Ladyship's vehicle, and bring me the tardy expression of her Ladyship's regret. I refer you, my Lord Lydiard, to that day!"

Having read Mr. Tollmidge's formidable assertions relating to herself for the second time, Lady Lydiard's meditations came to an abrupt end. She rose, took the letters in both hands to tear them up, hesitated, and threw them back into the cabinet drawer in which she had discovered them, among other papers that had not been arranged since Lord Lydiard's death.

"The idiot!" said her Ladyship, thinking of Mr. Tollmidge. "I never even heard of him, in my husband's lifetime; I never even knew that he was really related to Lord Lydiard, till I found his letters. What is to be done next?"

She looked, as she put that question to herself, at an open newspaper thrown on the table, which announced the death of "that accomplished artist Mr. Tollmidge, related, it is said, to the late well-known connoisseur, Lord Lydiard." In the next sentence the writer of the obituary notice deplored the destitute condition of Mrs. Tollmidge and her children, "thrown helplessly on the mercy of the world." Lady Lydiard stood by the table, with her eyes on those lines, and saw but too plainly the direction in which they pointed—the direction of her cheque-book.

Turning towards the fireplace, she rang the bell. "I can do nothing in this matter," she thought to herself, "until I know whether the report about Mrs. Tollmidge and her family is to be depended on. Has Moody come back?" she asked, when the servant appeared at the door. "Moody" (otherwise her Ladyship's steward) had not come back. Lady Lydiard dismissed the subject of the artist's widow from further consideration until the steward returned, and gave her mind to a question of domestic interest which lay nearer to her heart. Her favourite dog had been ailing for some time past, and no report of him had reached her that morning. She opened a door near the fireplace, which led, through a little corridor hung with rare pictures, to her own boudoir. "Isabel!" she called out, "how is Tommie?"

A fresh young voice answered, from behind the curtain which closed the further end of the corridor, "No better, my Lady."

A low growl followed the fresh young voice, and added (in dog's language), "Much worse, my Lady—much worse!"

Lady Lydiard closed the door again, with a compassionate sigh for Tommie, and walked slowly to and fro in her spacious drawing-room, waiting for the steward's return.

Accurately described, Lord Lydiard's widow was short and fat, and perulously near her sixtieth birthday.

But it may be said, without paying a compliment, that she looked younger than her age by ten years at least. Her complexion was of that delicate pink tinge which is sometimes seen in old women with well-preserved constitutions. Her eyes (equally well preserved) were of that hard light blue colour which wears well, and does not wash out when tried by the test of tears. Add to this her short nose, her plump cheeks that set wrinkles at defiance, her white hair dressed in stiff little curls; and, if a doll could grow old, Lady Lydiard, at sixty, would have been the living image of that doll—taking life easily on its journey downwards to the prettiest of tombs, in a burial-ground where the myrtles and roses grew all the year round!

These being her Ladyship's personal merits, impartial history must acknowledge, on the list of her defects, a total want of tact and taste in her attire. The lapse of time since Lord Lydiard's death had left her at liberty to dress as she pleased. She arranged her short, clumsy figure in colours that were far too bright for a woman of her age. Her dresses, badly chosen as to their hues, were perhaps not badly made, but were certainly badly worn. Morally, as well as physically, it must be said of Lady Lydiard that her outward side was her worst side. The anomalies of her dress were matched by the anomalies of her character. There were moments when she felt and spoke as became a lady of rank; and there were other moments when she felt and spoke as might have become the cook in the kitchen. Beneath these superficial inconsistencies, the great heart, the essentially true and generous nature of the woman, only waited the sufficient occasion to assert themselves. In the trivial intercourse of society she was open to ridicule on every side of her. But when a serious emergency tried the metal of which she was really made, the people who were loudest in laughing at her stood aghast, and wondered what had become of the familiar companion of their every-day lives.

Her Ladyship's promenade had lasted but a little while, when a man in black clothing presented himself noiselessly at the great door which opened on the staircase. Lady Lydiard signed to him impatiently to enter the room.

"I have been expecting you for some time, Moody," she said. "You look tired. Take a chair."

The man in black bowed respectfully, and took his seat.

CHAPTER II.

Robert Moody was at this time nearly forty years of age. He was a shy, quiet, dark person, with a pale, closely-shaven face, agreeably animated by large black eyes, set deep in their orbits. His mouth was perhaps his best feature; he had firm, well-shaped lips, which softened on rare occasions into a particularly winning smile. The whole look of the man, in spite of his habitual reserve, declared him to be eminently trustworthy. His position in Lady Lydiard's household was in no sense of the mental sort. He acted as her almoner and secretary as well as her steward—distributed her charities, wrote her letters on business, paid her bills, engaged her servants, stocked her wine-cellar, was authorised to borrow books from her library, and was served with his meals in his own room. His parentage gave him claims to these special favours; he was by birth entitled to rank as a gentleman. His father had failed at a time of commercial panic as a country banker, had paid a good dividend, and had died in exile abroad a broken-hearted man. Robert had tried to hold his place in the world, but adverse fortune kept him down. Undeserved disaster followed him from one employment to another, until he abandoned the struggle, bade a last farewell to the pride of other days, and accepted the position considerably and delicately offered to him in Lady Lydiard's house. He had now no near relations living, and he had never made many friends. In the intervals of occupation he led a lonely life in his little room. It was a matter of secret wonder among the women in the servants' hall, considering his personal advantages and the opportunities which must surely have been thrown in his way, that he had never tempted fortune in the character of a married man. Robert Moody entered into no explanations on that subject. In his own sad and quiet way he continued to lead his own sad and quiet life. The women all failing, from the handsome housekeeper downwards, to make the smallest impression on him, consoled themselves by prophetic visions of his future relations with the sex, and predicted vindictively that "his time would come."

"Well," said Lady Lydiard, "and what have you done?"

"Your Ladyship seemed to be anxious about the dog," Moody answered, in the low tone which was habitual to him. "I went first to the veterinary surgeon. He had been called away into the country; and—"

Lady Lydiard waved away the conclusion of the sentence with her hand. "Never mind the surgeon. We must find somebody else. Where did you go next?"

"To your Ladyship's lawyer. Mr. Troy wished me to say that he will have the pleasure of waiting on you."

"Pass over the lawyer, Moody. I want to know about the painter's widow. Is it true that Mrs. Tollmidge and her family are left in helpless poverty?"

"Not quite true, my Lady. I have seen the clergyman of the parish, who takes an interest in the case."

Lady Lydiard interrupted her steward for the third time. "You have not mentioned my name?" she asked, sharply.

"Certainly not, my Lady. I followed my instructions, and described you as a benevolent person in search of cases of real distress. It is quite true that Mr. Tollmidge has died, leaving nothing to his family. But the widow has a little income of seventy pounds in her own right."

"Is that enough to live on, Moody?" her Ladyship asked.

"Enough, in this case, for the widow and her daughter," Moody answered. "The difficulty is to pay the few debts left standing, and to start the two sons in life. They are reported to be steady lads; and the family is much respected in the neighbourhood. The clergyman proposes to get a few influential names to begin with, and to start a subscription."

"No subscription!" protested Lady Lydiard. "Mr. Tollmidge was Lord Lydiard's cousin; and Mrs. Tollmidge is related to his Lordship by marriage. It would be degrading to my husband's memory to have the begging-box sent round for his relations, no matter how distant they may be. Cousins!" exclaimed her Ladyship, suddenly descending from the lofty ranges of sentiment to the low. "I hate the very name of them! A person who is near enough to me to be my relation and far enough off from me to be my sweetheart, is a double-faced sort of person that I don't like. Let's get back to the widow and her sons. How much do they want?"

"A subscription of five hundred pounds, my Lady, would provide for everything—if it could only be collected."

"It shall be collected, Moody! I will pay the subscription out of my own purse." Having asserted herself in those noble terms, she spilt the effect of her own outburst of generosity by dropping to the sordid view of the subject in her next sentence. "Five hundred pounds is a good bit of money, though; isn't it, Moody?"

"It is, indeed, my Lady. Rich and generous as he knew his mistress to be, her proposal to pay the whole subscription took the steward by surprise. Lady Lydiard's quick perception instantly detected what was passing in his mind."

"You don't quite understand my position in this matter," she said. "When I read the newspaper notice of Mr. Tollmidge's death, I searched among his Lordship's papers to see if they really were related. I discovered some letters from Mr. Tollmidge, which showed me that he and Lord Lydiard were cousins. One of those letters contains some very painful statements, reflecting most untruly and unjustly on my conduct;—lies, in short," her Ladyship burst out, losing her dignity, as usual. "Lies, Moody, for which Mr. Tollmidge deserved to be horsewhipped. I would have done it myself if his Lordship had told me at the time. No matter; it's useless to dwell on the thing now," she continued, ascending again to the forms of expression which became a lady of rank. "This unhappy man has done me a gross injustice; my motives may be seriously misjudged, if I appear personally in communicating with his family. If I relieve them anonymously in their present trouble, I spare them the exposure of a public subscription; and I do what I believe his Lordship would have done himself if he had lived. My desk is on the other table. Bring it here, Moody; and let me return good for evil, while I'm in the humour for it!"

"Moody obeyed in silence. Lady Lydiard wrote a cheque.

"Take that to the banker's, and bring back a five-hundred pound note," she said. "I'll inclose it to the clergyman as coming from 'an unknown friend.' And be quick about it. I am only a fallible mortal, Moody. Don't leave me time enough to take the stingy view of five hundred pounds."

Moody went out with the cheque. No delay was to be apprehended in obtaining the money; the banking-house was hard by, in St. James's-street. Left alone, Lady Lydiard decided on occupying her mind in the generous direction by composing her anonymous letter to the clergyman. She had just taken a sheet of note-paper from her desk, when a servant appeared at the door announcing a visitor—

"Mr. Felix Sweetstair!"

CHAPTER III.

"My nephew!" Lady Lydiard exclaimed, in a tone which expressed astonishment, but certainly not pleasure as well. "How many years is it since you and I last met?" she asked, in her abruptly straightforward way, as Mr. Felix Sweetstair approached her writing-table.

The visitor was not a person easily discouraged. He took Lady Lydiard's hand, and kissed it with easy grace. A shade of irony was in his manner, agreeably relieved by a playful flash of tenderness.

"Years, my dear aunt?" he said. "Look in your glass and you will see that time has stood still since we met last. How wonderfully well you wear! When shall we celebrate the appearance of your first wrinkle? I am too old; I shall never live to see it."

He took an easy-chair, uninvited; placed himself close at his aunt's side, and ran his eye over her ill-chosen dress with an air of satirical admiration. "How perfectly successful!" he said, with his well-bred insolence. "What a chaste gaiety of colour!"

"What do you want?" asked her Ladyship, not in the least softened by the compliment.

"I want to pay my respects to my dear aunt," Felix answered, perfectly impenetrable to his ungracious reception, and perfectly comfortable in a spacious arm-chair.

No pen-and-ink portrait need surely be drawn of Felix Sweetstair—he is too well known a picture in society. The little lithe man, with his bright, restless eyes, and his long iron-grey hair falling in curls to his shoulders; his airy step and his cordial manner; his uncertain age, his innumerable accomplishments, and his unbounded popularity—is he not familiar everywhere, and welcome everywhere? How gratefully he receives, how prodigally he repays, the cordial appreciation of an admiring world! Every man he knows is "a charming fellow." Every woman he sees is "sweetly pretty." What picnics he gives on the banks of the Thames in the summer season! What a well-earned little income he derives from the whist-table! What an inestimable actor he is at private theatricals of all sorts (weddings included)! Did you never read Sweetstair's novel, dashed off in the intervals of curative perspiration at a German bath? Then you don't know what brilliant fiction really is. He has never written a second work; he does everything, and only does it once. One song—the despair of professional composers. One picture—just to show how easily a gentleman can take up an art and drop it again. A really multifarious man, with all the graces and all the accomplishments scintillating perpetually at his fingers' ends. If these poor pages have achieved nothing else, they have done a service to persons not in society by presenting them to Sweetstair. In his gracious company the narrative brightens; and writer and reader (catching reflected brilliancy) understand each other at last, thanks to Sweetstair.

"Well," said Lady Lydiard, "now you are here, what have you got to say for yourself? You have been abroad, of course! Where?"

"Principally at Paris, my dear aunt. The only place that is fit to live in—for this excellent reason, that the French are the only people who know how to make the most of life. One has relations and friends in England; and every now and then one returns to London."

"When one has spent all one's money in Paris," her Ladyship interposed. "That's what you were going to say, isn't it?"

Felix submitted to the interruption with his delightful good-humour.

"What a bright creature you are!" he exclaimed. "What would I not give for your flow of spirits! Yes—one does spend money in Paris, as you say. The clubs, the stock exchange, the racetrack: you try your luck here, there, and everywhere; and you lose and win, win and lose—and you haven't a dull day to complain of." He paused, his smile died away, he looked inquiringly at Lady Lydiard. "What a wonderful existence yours must be," he resumed. "The everlasting question with your needy fellow-creatures, 'Where am I to get money?' is a question that has never passed your lips. Envious woman!" He paused once more—surprised and puzzled this time. "What is the matter, my dear aunt? You seem to be suffering under some uneasiness."

"I am suffering under your conversation," her Ladyship answered, sharply. "Money is a sore subject with me just now," she went on, with her eyes on her nephew, watching the effect of what she said. "I have spent five hundred pounds this morning with a scrape of my pen. And, only a week since, I yielded to temptation and made an addition to my picture-gallery." She looked, as she said those words, towards an archway at the farther end of the room, closed by curtains of purple velvet. "I really tremble when I think of what that one picture cost me before I could call it mine. A landscape by Hobbema; and the National Gallery bidding against me. Never mind!" she concluded, consoling herself, as usual, with considerations that were beneath her. "Hobbema will sell at my death for a bigger price than I gave for him—that's one comfort!" She looked again at Felix; a smile of mischievous satisfaction began to show itself in her face. "Anything wrong with your watch-chain?" she asked.

Felix, absently playing with his watch-chain, started as if his aunt had suddenly awakened him. While Lady Lydiard had been speaking his vivacity had subsided little by little, and had left him looking so serious and so old that his most intimate friend would hardly have known him again. Roused by the sudden question that had been put to him, he seemed to be casting about in his mind in search of the first excuse for his silence that might turn up. "I was wondering," he began, "why I miss something when I look round this beautiful room; something familiar, you know, that I fully expected to find here."

"Tommie?" suggested Lady Lydiard, still watching her nephew as maliciously as ever.

"That's it!" cried Felix, seizing his excuse, and rallying his spirits. "Why don't I hear Tommie snoring behind me; why don't I feel Tommie's teeth in my trousers?"

The smile vanished from Lady Lydiard's face; the tone taken by her nephew in speaking of her dog was disapproved of in the extreme. She showed him plainly that she disapproved of it. Felix went on, nevertheless, impenetrable to reproach of the silent sort. "Dear little Tommie! So delightfully fat; and such an infernal temper! I don't know whether I hate him or love him. Where is he?"

"Ill in bed," answered her Ladyship, with a gravity which startled even Felix himself. "I wish to speak to you about Tommie. You know everybody. Do you know of a good doctor? The person I have employed so far doesn't at all satisfy me."

"Professional person?" inquired Felix.

"Yes." "All humbugs," my dear aunt. The worse the dog gets the bigger the bill grows, don't you see? I have got the man for you—a gentleman. Knows more about horses and dogs than all the veterinary surgeons put together. We met in the boat yesterday crossing the Channel. You know him by name, of course? Lord Rotherfield's youngest son, Alfred Hardyman."

"The owner of the stud farm? The man who has bred the famous racehorses?" cried Lady Lydiard. "My dear Felix, how can I presume to trouble such a great personage about my dog?"

Felix burst into his genial laugh. "Never was modesty more wofully out of place," he rejoined. "Hardyman is dying to be presented to your Ladyship. He has heard, like everybody, of the magnificent decorations of this house, and he is longing to see them. His chambers are close by, in Pall-mall. If he is at home we will have him here in five minutes. Perhaps I had better see the dog first?"

Lady Lydiard shook her head. "Isabel says he had better not be disturbed," she answered. "Isabel understands him better than anybody."

Felix lifted his lively eyebrows with a mixed expression of curiosity and surprise. "Who is Isabel?"

Lady Lydiard was vexed with herself for carelessly mentioning Isabel's name in her nephew's presence. Felix was not the sort of person whom she was desirous of admitting to her confidence in domestic matters. "Isabel is an addition to my household since you were here last," she answered shortly.

"Young and pretty?" inquired Felix. "Ah! you look serious, and you don't answer me. Young and pretty, evidently. Which may I see first, the addition to your household or the addition to your picture-gallery? You look at the picture-gallery—I am answered again." He rose to approach the archway, and stopped at his first step forward. "A sweet girl is a dreadful responsibility, aunt," he resumed, with an ironical assumption of gravity. "Do you know, I shouldn't be surprised if Isabel, in the long run, cost you more than Hobbema. Who is this at the door?"

The person at the door was Robert Moody, returned from the bank. Mr. Felix Sweetstair, being near-sighted, was obliged to fit his eye-glass in position before he could recognise the prime minister of Lady Lydiard's household.

"Ha! our worthy Moody. How well he wears! Not a grey hair on his head—and look at mine! What dye do you use, Moody? If he had my open disposition he would tell. As it is, he looks unutterable things, and holds his tongue. Ah! if I could only have held my tongue—when I was in the diplomatic service, you know—what a position I might have occupied by this time! Don't let me interrupt you, Moody, if you have anything to say to Lady Lydiard."

Having acknowledged Mr. Sweetser's lively greeting by a formal bow, and a grave look of wonder which respectfully repelled that vivacious gentleman's flow of humour, Moody turned towards his mistress.

"Have you got the bank-note?" asked her Ladyship.

Moody laid the bank-note on the table.

"Am I in the way?" inquired Felix.

"No," said his aunt. "I have a letter to write; it won't occupy me for more than a few minutes. You can stay here, or go and look at the Hobbema, which you please."

Felix made a second sauntering attempt to reach the picture-gallery. Arrived within a few steps of the entrance, he stopped again, attracted by an open cabinet of Italian workmanship, filled with rare old china. Being nothing if not a cultivated amateur, Mr. Sweetser paused to pay his passing tribute of admiration before the contents of the cabinet. "Charming! charming!" he said to himself, with his head twisted appreciatively a little on one side. Lady Lydiard and Moody left him in undisturbed enjoyment of the china, and went on with the business of the bank-note.

"Ought we to take the number of the note, in case of accident?" asked her Ladyship.

Moody produced a slip of paper from his waistcoat pocket. "I took the number, my Lady, at the bank."

"Very well. You keep it. While I am writing my letter, suppose you direct the envelope. What is the clergyman's name?" Moody mentioned the name and directed the envelope. Felix, happening to look round at Lady Lydiard and the steward while they were both engaged in writing, returned suddenly to the table as if he had been struck by a new idea.

"Is there a third pen?" he asked. "Why shouldn't I write a line at once to Hardyman, aunt? The sooner you have his opinion about Tommie the better—don't you think so?"

Lady Lydiard pointed to the pen-tray, with a smile. To show consideration for her dog was to seize irresistibly on the high-road to her favour. Felix set to work on his letter, in a large scrambling hand-writing, with plenty of ink and a noisy pen. "I declare we are like clerks in an office," he remarked, in his cheery way. "All with our noses to the paper, writing as if we lived by it! Here, Moody, let one of the servants take this at once to Mr. Hardyman's."

The messenger was dispatched. Robert returned, and waited near his mistress, with the directed envelope in his hand. Felix sauntered back slowly towards the picture-gallery, for the third time. In a moment more Lady Lydiard finished her letter, and folded up the bank-note in it. She had just taken the directed envelope from Moody, and had just placed the letter inside it, when a scream from the inner room, in which Isabel was nursing the sick dog, startled everybody. "My Lady! my Lady!" cried the girl, distractedly. "Tommie is in a fit! Tommie is dying!"

Lady Lydiard dropped the unclosed envelope on the table, and ran—yes, short as she was and fat as she was, ran—into the inner room. The two men, left together, looked at each other.

"Moody," said Felix, in his lazily-cynical way, "Do you think if you or I were in a fit that her Ladyship would run? Bah! these are the things that shake one's faith in human nature. I feel infernally seedy. That cursed Channel passage—I tremble in my inmost stomach when I think of it. Get me something, Moody."

"What shall I send you, Sir?" Moody asked, coldly.

"Some dry curaçao and a biscuit. And let it be brought to me in the picture-gallery. Damn the dog! I'll go and look at Hobbema."

This time he succeeded in reaching the archway, and disappeared behind the curtains of the picture-gallery.

CHAPTER IV.

Left alone in the drawing-room, Moody looked at the unfastened envelope on the table.

Considering the value of the inclosure, might he feel justified in wetting the gum and securing the envelope for safety's sake? After thinking it over, Moody decided that he was not justified in meddling with the letter. On reflection, her Ladyship might have changes to make in it—or might have a postscript to add to what she had already written. Apart, too, from these considerations, was it reasonable to act as if Lady Lydiard's house was an hotel, perpetually open to the intrusion of strangers? Objects worth twice five hundred pounds in the aggregate were scattered about on the tables and in the unlocked cabinets all round him. Moody withdrew, without further hesitation, to order the light restoratives prescribed for himself by Mr. Sweetser.

The footman who took the curaçao into the picture-gallery found Felix recumbent on a sofa, admiring the famous Hobbema.

"Don't interrupt me," he said, peevishly, catching the servant in the act of staring at him. "Put down the bottle and go!" Forbidden to look at Mr. Sweetser, the man's eyes as he left the gallery turned wonderingly towards the famous landscape. And what did he see? He saw one towering big cloud in the sky that threatened rain, two withered mahogany-coloured trees sorely in want of rain, a muddy road greatly the worse for rain, and a vagabond boy running home who was afraid of the rain. That was the picture, to the footman's eye. He took a gloomy view of the state of Mr. Sweetser's brains on his return to the servants' hall. "A slate loose, poor devil!" That was the footman's report of the brilliant Felix.

Immediately on the servant's departure, the silence in the picture-gallery was broken by voices penetrating into it from the drawing-room. Felix rose to a sitting position on the sofa. He had recognised the voice of Alfred Hardyman saying, "Don't disturb Lady Lydiard," and the voice of Moody answering, "I will just knock at the door of her Ladyship's room, Sir; you will find Mr. Sweetser in the picture-gallery."

The curtains over the archway parted, and disclosed the figure of a tall lean man, with a closely cropped head set a little stiffly on his shoulders. The immovable gravity of face and manner which every Englishman seems to acquire who lives constantly in the society of horses, was the gravity which this gentleman displayed as he entered the picture-gallery. He was a finely made, sinewy man, with clearly cut, regular features. If he had not been affected with horses on the brain he would doubtless have been personally popular with the women. As it was, the serene and hippic gloom of the handsome horsebreeder daunted the daughters of Eve, and they failed to make up their minds about the exact value of him, socially considered. Alfred Hardyman was nevertheless a remarkable man in his way. He had been offered the customary alternatives submitted to the younger sons of the nobility—the Church or the diplomatic service—and had refused the one and the other. "I like horses," he said, "and I mean to get my living out of them. Don't talk to me about my position in the world. Talk to my eldest brother, who gets the money and the title." Starting in life with these sensible views, and with a small capital of five thousand pounds, Hardyman took his own place in the sphere that was fitted for him. At the period of this narrative he was already a rich man, and one of the greatest authorities on horse-breeding in England. His prosperity made no change in him. He was always the same grave, quiet, obstinately resolute man—true to the few friends whom he admitted to his intimacy, and sincere to a fault in the expression of his feelings among persons whom he distrusted or disliked. As he entered the picture-gallery and paused for a moment looking at Felix on the sofa, his large, cold, steady grey eyes rested on the little man with an indifference that just verged on contempt. Felix, on the other hand, sprang to his feet with alert politeness and greeted his friend with exuberant cordiality.

"Dear old boy! This is so good of you," he began. "I feel it—I do assure you I feel it!"

"You needn't trouble yourself to feel it," was the quietly-ungracious answer. "Lady Lydiard brings me here. I come to see the house—and the dog." He looked round the gallery in his gravely attentive way. "I don't understand pictures," he remarked, resignedly. "I shall go back to the drawing-room."

After a moment's consideration, Felix followed him into the drawing-room, with the air of a man who was determined not to be repelled.

"Well?" asked Hardyman. "What is it?"

"About that matter?" Felix said, inquiringly.

"What matter?"

"Oh, you know. Will next week do?"

"Next week won't do."

Mr. Felix Sweetser cast one look at his friend. His friend was too intently occupied with the decorations of the drawing-room to notice the look.

"Will to-morrow do?" Felix resumed, after an interval.

"Yes."

"At what time?"

"Between twelve and one in the afternoon."

"Between twelve and one in the afternoon," Felix repeated. He looked again at Hardyman and took his hat. "Make my apologies to my aunt," he said. "You must introduce yourself to her Ladyship. I can't wait here any longer." He walked out of the room, having deliberately returned the contemptuous indifference of Hardyman by a similar indifference on his own side, at parting.

Left by himself, Hardyman took a chair and glanced at the door which led into the boudoir. The steward had knocked at that door, had disappeared through it, and had not appeared again. How much longer was Lady Lydiard's visitor to be left unnoticed in Lady Lydiard's house?

As the question passed through his mind the boudoir door opened. For once in his life, Alfred Hardyman's composure deserted him. He started to his feet, like an ordinary mortal taken completely by surprise.

Instead of Mr. Moody, instead of Lady Lydiard, there appeared in the open doorway a young woman in a state of embarrassment, who actually quickened the beat of Mr. Hardyman's heart the moment he set eyes on her. Was the person who produced this amazing impression at first sight a person of importance? Nothing of the sort. She was only "Isabel," surnamed "Miller." Even her name had nothing in it. Only "Isabel Miller!"

Had she any pretensions to distinction in virtue of her personal appearance?

It is not easy to answer the question. The women (let us put the worst judges first) had long since discovered that she wanted that indispensable elegance of figure which is derived from slimmness of waist and length of limb. The men (who were better acquainted with the subject) looked at her figure from their point of view; and, finding it essentially embraceable, asked for nothing more. It might have been her bright complexion, or it might have been the bold lustre of her eyes (as the women considered it), that dazzled the lords of creation generally, and made them all alike incompetent to discover her faults. Still, she had compensating attractions which no severity of criticism could dispute. Her smile, beginning at her lips, flowed brightly and instantly over her whole face. A delicious atmosphere of health, freshness, and good humour seemed to radiate from her wherever she went and whatever she did. For the rest, her brown hair grew low over her broad white forehead, and was topped by a neat little lace cap with ribbons of a violet colour. A plain collar and plain cuffs encircled her smooth, round neck, and her plump, dimpled hands. Her merino dress, covering but not hiding the charming outline of her bosom, matched the colour of cap-ribbons, and was brightened by a white muslin apron coquettishly trimmed about the pockets, a gift from Lady Lydiard. Blushing and smiling, she let the door fall to behind her, and, shyly approaching the stranger, said to him, in her small, clear voice, "If you please, Sir, are you Mr. Hardyman?"

The gravity of the great horsebreeder deserted him at her first question. He smiled as he acknowledged that he was "Mr. Hardyman"—he smiled as he offered her a chair.

"No, thank you, Sir," she said, with a quaintly pretty inclination of her head. "I am only sent here to make her Ladyship's apologies. She has put the poor dear dog into a warm bath, and she can't leave him. And Mr. Moody can't come instead of me, because I was too frightened to be of any use, and so he had to hold the dog. That's all. We are very anxious, Sir, to know if the warm bath is the right thing. Please come into the room and tell us."

She led the way back to the door. Hardyman, naturally enough, was slow to follow her. When a man is fascinated by the charm of youth and beauty he is in no hurry to transfer his attention to a sick animal in a bath. Hardyman seized on the first excuse that he could devise for keeping Isabel to himself—that is to say, for keeping her in the drawing-room.

"I think I shall be better able to help you," he said, "if you will tell me something about the dog first."

Even his accent in speaking had altered to a certain degree. The quiet, dreary monotone in which he habitually spoke quickened a little under his present excitement. As for Isabel, she was too deeply interested in Tommie's welfare to suspect that she was being made the victim of a stratagem. She left the door and returned to Hardyman with eager eyes. "What can I tell you, Sir?" she asked innocently.

Hardyman pressed his advantage without mercy.

"You can tell me what sort of dog he is?"

"Yes, Sir."

"How old he is?"

"Yes, Sir."

"What his name is?—what his temper is?—what his illness is?—what diseases his father and mother had?—what?"

Isabel's head began to turn giddy. "One thing at a time, Sir!" she interposed, with a gesture of entreaty. "The dog sleeps on my bed, and I had a bad night with him, he disturbed me so, and I am afraid I am very stupid this morning. His name is Tommie. We are obliged to call him by it, because he won't answer to any other than the name he had when my Lady bought him. But we spell it with an i at the end, which makes it less vulgar than Tommy with a y. I am very sorry, Sir—I forget what else you wanted to know. Please to come in here and my lady will tell you everything."

She tried to get back to the door of the boudoir. Hardyman, feasting his eyes on the pretty, changeable face that looked up at him with such innocent confidence in his authority, drew her away again from the door by the one means at his disposal. He returned to his questions about Tommie.

"Wait a little, please. What sort of dog is he?"

Isabel turned back again from the door. To describe Tommie was a labour of love. "He is the most beautiful dog in the world!" the girl began, with kindling eyes. "He has the most exquisite white curly hair and two light brown patches on his back—and, oh! such lovely dark eyes! They call him a Scotch terrier. When he is well his appetite is truly wonderful—nothing comes amiss to him, Sir, from pâté de foie gras to potatoes. He has his enemies, poor dear, though you wouldn't think it. People who won't put up with being bitten by him (what shocking tempers one does meet with, to be sure!) call him a mongrel. Isn't it a shame? Please come in and see him, Sir; my Lady will be tired of waiting."

Another journey to the door followed those words, checked instantly by a serious objection.

"Stop a minute! You must tell me what his temper is, or I can do nothing for him."

Isabel returned once more, feeling that it was really serious this time. Her gravity was even more charming than her gaiety. As she lifted her face to him, with large solemn eyes, expressive of her sense of responsibility, Hardyman would have given every horse in his stables to have had the privilege of taking her in his arms and kissing her.

"Tommie has the temper of an angel with the people he likes," she said. "When he bites, it generally means that he objects to strangers. He loves my Lady, and he loves Mr. Moody, and he loves me, and—and I think that's all. This way, Sir, if you please; I am sure I heard my Lady call."

"No," said Hardyman, in his immovably obstinate way. "Nobody called. About this dog's temper? Doesn't he take to any strangers? What sort of people does he bite in general?"

Isabel's pretty lips began to curl upward at the corners in a quaint smile. Hardyman's last imbecile question had opened her eyes to the true state of the case. Still, Tommie's future was in this strange gentleman's hands; she felt bound to consider that. And, moreover, it was no everyday event, in Isabel's experience, to fascinate a famous personage, who was also a magnificent and perfectly-dressed man. She ran the risk of wasting another minute or two, and went on with the memoirs of Tommie.

"I must own, Sir," she resumed, "that he behaves a little ungratefully—even to strangers who take an interest in him. When he gets lost in the streets (which is very often), he sits down on the pavement and howls till he collects a pitying crowd round him; and when they try to read his name and address on his collar he snaps at them. The servants generally find him and bring him back; and as soon as he gets home he turns round on the doorstep and snaps at the servants. I think it must be his fun. You should see him sitting up in his chair at dinner-time, waiting to be helped, with his fore paws on the edge of the table, like the hands of a gentleman at a public dinner making a speech. But, oh!" cried Isabel, checking herself, with the tears in her eyes, "how can I talk of him in this way when he is so dreadfully ill! Some of them say it's bronchitis, and some say it's his liver. Only yesterday I took him to the front door to give him a little air, and he stood still on the pavement, quite stupefied. For the first time in his life, he snapped at nobody who went by; and, oh, dear, he hadn't even the heart to smell a lamp-post!"

Isabel had barely stated this last afflicting circumstance when the memoirs of Tommie were suddenly cut short by the voice of Lady Lydiard—really calling this time—from the inner room.

"Isabel! Isabel!" cried her Ladyship, "what are you about?"

Isabel ran to the door of the boudoir and threw it open. "Go in, Sir! Pray go in!" she said.

"Without you?" Hardyman asked.

"I will follow you, Sir. I have something to do for her Ladyship first."

She still held the door open, and pointed entreatingly to the passage which led to the boudoir. "I shall be blamed, Sir," she said, "if you don't go in."

This statement of the case left Hardyman no alternative. He presented himself to Lady Lydiard without another moment of delay.

Having closed the drawing-room door on him, Isabel waited a little, absorbed in her own thoughts.

She was now perfectly well aware of the effect which she had produced on Hardyman. Her vanity, it is not to be denied, was flattered by his admiration—he was so grand and so tall, and he had such fine large eyes. The girl looked prettier than ever as she stood with her head down and her colour heightened, smiling to herself. A clock on the chimneypiece striking the half-hour roused her. She cast one look at the glass, as she passed it, and went to the table at which Lady Lydiard had been writing.

Methodical Mr. Moody, in submitting to be employed as bath-attendant upon Tommie, had not forgotten the interests of his mistress. He reminded her Ladyship that she had left her letter, with a bank-note inclosed in it, unsealed. Absorbed in the dog, Lady Lydiard answered, "Isabel is doing nothing, let Isabel seal it. Show Mr. Hardyman in here," she continued, turning to Isabel, "and then seal a letter of mine which you will find on the table." "And when you have sealed it," careful Mr. Moody added, "put it back on the table; I will take charge of it when her Ladyship has done with me."

Such were the special instructions which now detained Isabel in the drawing-room. She lit the taper, and closed and sealed the open envelope, without feeling curiosity enough even to look at the address. Mr. Hardyman was the uppermost subject in her thoughts. Leaving the sealed letter on the table, she returned to the fireplace, and studied her own charming face attentively in the looking-glass. The time passed—and Isabel's reflection was still the subject of Isabel's contemplation. "He must see many beautiful ladies," she thought, veering backwards and forwards between pride and humility. "I wonder what he sees in me?"

The clock struck the hour. Almost at the same moment the boudoir-door opened, and Robert Moody, released at last from attendance on Tommie, entered the drawing-room.

CHAPTER V.

"Well?" asked Isabel eagerly, "what does Mr. Hardyman say? Does he think he can cure Tommie?"

Moody answered a little coldly and stiffly. His dark, deeply-set eyes rested on Isabel with an uneasy look.

"Mr. Hardyman seems to understand animals," he said. "He lifted the dog's eyelid and looked at his eye, and then he told us the bath was useless."

"Go on!" said Isabel impatiently. "He did something, I suppose, besides telling you that the bath was useless?"

"He took a knife out of his pocket, with a lancet in it."

Isabel clasped her hands with a faint cry of horror. "Oh, Mr. Moody! did he hurt Tommie?"

"Hurt him?" Moody repeated, indignant at the interest which she felt in the animal, and the indifference which she exhibited towards the man (as represented by himself). "Hurt him, indeed! Mr. Hardyman bled the brute!"

"Brute?" Isabel reiterated, with flashing eyes. "I know some people, Mr. Moody, who really deserve to be called by that horrid word. If you can't say 'Tommie,' when you speak of him in my presence, be so good as to say 'the dog.'"

Moody yielded with the worst possible grace. "Oh, very well! Mr. Hardyman bled the dog, and brought him to his senses directly. I am charged to tell you"—He stopped, as if the message which he was instructed to deliver was in the last degree distasteful to him.

"Well, what were you charged to tell me?"

"I was to say that Mr. Hardyman will give you instructions how to treat the dog for the future."

Isabel hastened to the door, eager to receive her instructions. Moody stopped her before she could open it.

"You are in a great hurry to get to Mr. Hardyman," he remarked.

Isabel looked back at him in surprise. "You said just now that Mr. Hardyman was waiting to tell me how to nurse Tommie."

"Let him wait," Moody rejoined sternly. "When I left him, he was sufficiently occupied in expressing his favourable opinion of you to her Ladyship."

The steward's pale face turned paler still as he said those words. With the arrival of Isabel in Lady Lydiard's house "his time had come"—exactly as the women in the servants' hall had predicted. At last the impenetrable man felt the influence of the sex; at last he knew the passion of love—misplaced, ill-starred, hopeless love, for a woman who was young enough to be his child. He had already spoken to Isabel more than once in terms which told his secret plainly enough. But the smouldering fire of jealousy in the man, fanned into flame by Hardyman, now showed itself for the first time. His looks, even more than his words, would have warned a woman with any knowledge of the nature of men to be careful how she answered him. Young, giddy, and inexperienced, Isabel followed the flippant impulse of the moment, without a thought of the consequences. "I'm sure it's very kind of Mr. Hardyman to speak favourably of me," she said, with a pert little laugh. "I hope you are not jealous of him, Mr. Moody?"

Moody was in no humour to make allowances for the unbridled gaiety of youth and good spirits. "I hate any man who admires you," he burst out passionately, "let him be who he may!"

Isabel looked at her strange lover with unaffected astonishment. How unlike Mr. Hardyman, who had treated her as a lady from first to last! "What an odd man you are!" she said. "You can't take a joke. I'm sure I didn't mean to offend you."

"You don't offend me—you do worse, you distress me."

Isabel's colour began to rise. The merriment died out of her face; she looked at Moody gravely. "I don't like to be accused of distressing people when I don't deserve it," she said. "I had better leave you. Let me by, if you please."

Having committed one error in offending her, Moody committed another in attempting to make his peace with her. Acting under the fear that she would really leave him, he took her roughly by the arm.

"You are always trying to get away from me," he said. "I wish I knew how to make you like me, Isabel."

"I don't allow you to call me Isabel!" she retorted, struggling to free herself from his hold. "Let go of my arm. You hurt me."

Moody dropped her arm with a bitter sigh. "I don't know how to deal with you," he said simply. "Have some pity on me!"

If the steward had known anything of women (at Isabel's age) he would never have appealed to her mercy in those plain terms, and at that unpropitious moment. "Pity you?" she repeated contemptuously. "Is that all you have to say to me after hurting my arm? What a bear you are!" She shrugged her shoulders and put her hands coquettishly into the pockets of her apron. That was how she pitied him! His face turned paler and paler—he writhed under it.

"For God's sake, don't turn everything I say to you into ridicule!" he cried. "You know I love you with all my heart and soul. Again and again I have asked you to be my wife—and you laugh at me as if it was a joke. I haven't deserved to be treated in that cruel way. It maddens me—I can't endure it!"

Isabel looked down at the floor, and followed the lines in the pattern of the carpet with the end of her smart little shoe. She could hardly have been farther away from really understanding Moody if he had spoken in Hebrew. She was partly startled, partly puzzled, by the strong emotions which she had unconsciously called into being. "Oh dear me!" she said, "why can't you talk of something else? Why can't we be friends? Excuse me for mentioning it," she went on, looking up at him with a saucy smile, "you are old enough to be my father."

Moody's head sank on his breast. "I own it," he answered humbly. "But there is something to be said for me. Men as old as I am have made good husbands before now. I would devote my whole life to make you happy. There isn't a wish you could form which I wouldn't be proud to obey. You mustn't reckon me by years. My youth has not been wasted in a profligate life; I can be truer to you and fonder of you than many a younger man. Surely my heart is not quite unworthy of you, when it is all yours. I have lived such a lonely, miserable life—and you might so easily brighten it. You are kind to everybody else, Isabel. Tell me dear, why are you so hard on me?"

His voice trembled as he appealed to her in those simple words. He had taken the right way at last to produce an impression on her. She really felt for him. All that was true and tender in her nature began to rise in her and take his part. Unhappily, he felt too deeply and too strongly to be patient, and to give her time. He completely misinterpreted her silence—completely mistook the motive that made her turn aside for a moment, to gather composure enough to speak to him. "Ah!" he burst out bitterly, turning away on his side, "you have no heart."

She instantly resented those unjust words. At that moment they wounded her to the quick.

"You know best," she said. "I have no doubt you are right. Remember one thing, however, though I have no heart, I have never encouraged you, Mr. Moody. I have declared over and over again that I could only be your friend. Understand that, for the future, if you please. There are plenty of nice women who will be glad to marry you, I have no doubt. You will always have my best wishes for your welfare. Good morning. Her Ladyship will wonder what has become of me. Be so kind as to let me pass."

Tortured by the passion that consumed him, Moody obstinately kept his place between Isabel and the door. The unworthy suspicion of her, which had been in his mind all through the interview, now forced its way outwards to expression at last.

"No woman ever used a man as you use me without some reason for it," he said. "You have kept your secret wonderfully well—but, sooner or later, all secrets get found out. I know what is in your mind as well as you know it yourself. You are in love with some other man."

Isabel's face flushed deeply; the defensive pride of her sex was up in arms in an instant. She cast one disdainful look at Moody, without troubling herself to express her contempt in words. "Stand out of my way, Sir!"—that was all she said to him.

"You are in love with some other man," he reiterated passionately. "Deny it if you can!"

"Deny it?" she repeated, with flashing eyes. "What right have you to ask the question? Am I not free to do as I please?"

He stood looking at her, meditating his next words, with a sudden and sinister change to self-restraint. Suppressed rage was in his rigidly set eyes, suppressed rage was in his trembling hand as he raised it emphatically while he spoke his next words.

"I have one thing more to say," he answered, "and then I have done. If I am not your husband, no other man shall be. Look well to it, Isabel Miller. If there is another man between us I can tell him this—he shall find it no easy matter to rob me of you!"

She started, and turned pale—but it was only for a moment. The high spirit that was in her rose brightly in her eyes, and faced him without shrinking.

"Threats?" she said, with quiet contempt. "When you make love, Mr. Moody, you take strange ways of doing it. My conscience is easy. You may try to frighten me, but you will not succeed. When you have recovered your temper I will accept your excuses." She paused, and pointed to the table. "There is the letter that you told me to leave for you when I had sealed it," she went on. "I suppose you have her Ladyship's orders. Isn't it time you began to think of obeying them?"

The contemptuous composure of her tone and manner seemed to act on Moody with crushing effect. Without a word of answer, the unfortunate steward took up the letter from the table. Without a word of answer, he walked mechanically to the great door which opened on the staircase—turned on the threshold to look at Isabel—waited a moment, pale and still—and suddenly left the room.

That silent departure, that hopeless submission, impressed Isabel in spite of herself. The sustaining sense of injury and insult sank, as it were, from under her the moment she was alone. He had not been gone a minute before she began to be sorry for him once more. The interview had taught her nothing. She was neither old enough nor experienced enough to understand the overwhelming revolution produced in a man's character when he feels the passion of love for the first time in the maturity of his life. If Moody had stolen a kiss at the first opportunity, she would have resented the liberty that he had taken with her; but she would have thoroughly understood him. His terrible earnestness, his overpowering agitation, his abrupt violence—all these evidences of a passion that was a mystery to himself—simply puzzled her. "I'm sure I didn't wish to hurt his feelings" (such was the form that her reflections took, in her present penitent frame of mind); "but why did he provoke me? It is a shame to tell me that I love some other man—when there is no other man. I declare I begin to hate the men, if they are all like Mr. Moody. I wonder whether he will forgive me when he sees me again? I'm sure I'm willing to forget and forgive on my side—especially if he won't insist on my being fond of him because he is fond of me. Oh, dear! I wish he would come back and shake hands. It's enough to try the patience of a saint to be treated in this way. I wish I was ugly! The ugly ones have a quiet time of it—the men let them be. Mr. Moody! Mr. Moody!" She went out to the landing and called to him softly. There was no answer. He was no longer in the house. She stood still for a moment in silent vexation. "I'll go to Tommie!" she decided. "I'm sure he's the more agreeable company of the two. And—oh, good gracious!—there's Mr. Hardyman waiting to give me my instructions! How do I look, I wonder?"

She consulted the glass once more—gave one or two corrective touches to her hair and her cap—and hastened into the boudoir.

CHAPTER VI.

For a quarter of an hour the drawing-room remained empty. At the end of that time the council in the boudoir broke up. Lady Lydiard led the way back to the drawing-room, followed by Hardyman; Isabel being left to look after the dog. Before the door closed behind him, Hardyman turned round to reiterate his last medical direction—or, in plainer words, to take a last look at Isabel.

"Plenty of water, Miss Isabel, for the dog to lap, and a little bread or biscuit, if he wants something to eat. Nothing more, if you please, till I see him to-morrow."

"Thank you, Sir. I will take the greatest care!"—At that point Lady Lydiard cut short the interchange of instructions and civilities. "Shut the door, if you please, Mr. Hardyman. I feel the draught. Many thanks! I am really at a loss to tell you how gratefully I feel your kindness. But for you, my poor little dog might have been dead by this time."

Hardyman answered, in the quiet, melancholy monotone which was habitual with him, "Your Ladyship need feel no further anxiety about the dog. Only be careful not to overfeed him. He will do very well under Miss Isabel's care. By-the-by, her family name is Miller—is it not? Is she related to the Warwickshire Millers, of Duxborough House?"

Lady Lydiard looked at him with an expression of satirical surprise. "Mr. Hardyman," she said, "this makes the fourth time you have questioned me about Isabel. 'You seem to take a great interest in my little companion. Don't make any apologies, pray! You pay Isabel a compliment; and, as I am very fond of her, I am naturally gratified when I find her admired. At the same time,' she added, with one of her abrupt transitions of language, 'I had my eye on you, and I had my eye on her, when you were talking in the next room; and I don't mean to let you make a fool of the girl. She is not in your line of life, and the sooner you know it the better. You make me laugh when you ask if she is related to gentlefolks. She is the orphan daughter of a chemist in the country. Her relations haven't a penny to bless themselves with; except an old aunt, who lives in a village on two or three hundred a year. I heard of the girl by accident. When she lost her father and mother, her aunt offered to take her. Isabel said, 'No, thank you; I will not be a burden on a relation who has only enough for herself. A girl can earn an honest living if she tries; and I mean to try'—that's what she said. I admired her independence," her Ladyship proceeded, ascending again to the higher regions of thought and expression. "My niece's marriage, just at that time, had left me alone in this great house. I proposed to Isabel to come to me as companion and reader for a few weeks, and to decide for herself whether she liked the life or not. We have never been separated since that time. I could hardly be fonder of her if she were my own daughter; and she returns my affection with all her heart. She has excellent qualities—prudent, cheerful, sweet-tempered; with good sense enough to understand what her place is in the world, as distinguished from her place in my regard. I have taken care, for her own sake, never to leave that part of the question in any doubt. It would be cruel kindness to deceive her as to her future position when she marries. I shall take good care that the man who pays his addresses to her is a man in her rank of life. I know but too well, in the case of one of my own relatives, what miseries unequal marriages bring with them. Excuse me for troubling you at this length on domestic matters. I am very fond of Isabel; and a girl's head is so easily turned. Now you know what her position really is, you will also know what limits there must be to the expression of your interest in her. I am sure we understand each other; and I say no more."

Hardyman listened to this long harangue with the immovable gravity which was part of his character—except when Isabel had taken him by surprise. When her Ladyship gave him the opportunity of speaking on his side, he had very little to say, and that little did not suggest that he had greatly profited by what he had heard. His mind had been full of Isabel when Lady Lydiard began; and it remained just as full of her, in just the same way, when Lady Lydiard had done.

"Yes," he remarked, quietly, "Miss Isabel is an uncommonly nice girl, as you say. Very pretty, and such frank, unaffected manners. I don't deny that I feel an interest in her. The young ladies one meets in society are not much to my taste. Miss Isabel is my taste."

Lady Lydiard's face assumed a look of blank dismay. "I am afraid I have failed to convey my exact meaning to you," she said.

Hardyman gravely declared that he understood her perfectly. "Perfectly!" he repeated, with his impenetrable obstinacy. "Your Ladyship exactly expresses my opinion of Miss Isabel. Prudent, and cheerful, and sweet-tempered, as you say—all the qualities in a woman that I admire. With good looks, too—of course, with good looks. She will be a perfect treasure (as you remarked just now) to the man who marries her. I may claim to know something about it. I have twice narrowly escaped being married myself; and, though I can't exactly explain it, I'm all the harder to please in consequence. Miss Isabel pleases me. I think I have said that before? Pardon me for saying it again. 'I'll call to-morrow morning and look at the dog, as early as eleven o'clock, if you will allow me. Later in the day I must be off to France to attend a sale of horses. Glad to have been of any use to your Ladyship, I am sure. Good morning.'"

Lady Lydiard let him go, wisely resigning any further attempt to establish an understanding between her visitor and herself.

"He is either a person of very limited intelligence when he is away from his stables," she thought, "or he deliberately declines to take a plain hint when it is given to him. I can't drop his acquaintance, on Tommie's account. The only other alternative is to keep Isabel out of his way. My good little girl shall not drift into a false position while I am living to look after her. When Mr. Hardyman calls to-morrow she shall be out on an errand. When he calls on his return she shall be up stairs with a headache. And if he tries it again she shall be away at my house in the country. If he makes any remarks on her absence, well, he will find that I can be just as dull of understanding as he is when the occasion calls for it."

Having arrived at this satisfactory solution of the difficulty, Lady Lydiard became conscious of an irresistible impulse to summon Isabel to her presence and caress her. In the nature of a warm-hearted woman, this was only the inevitable reaction which followed the subsidence of anxiety about the girl, after her own resolution had set that anxiety at rest. She threw open the door and made one of her sudden appearances in the boudoir. Even in the fervent outpouring of her affection, there was still the inherent abruptness of manner which so strongly marked Lady Lydiard's character in all the relations of life.

"Did I give you a kiss, this morning?" she asked, when Isabel rose to receive her.

"Yes, my Lady," said the girl, with her charming smile. "Come, then, and give me a kiss in return. Do you love me? Very well, then, treat me like your mother. Never mind 'my Lady' this time. Give me a good hug!"

Something in those homely words, or something perhaps in the look that accompanied them, touched sympathies in Isabel which seldom showed themselves on the surface. Her smiling lips trembled, the bright tears rose in her eyes. "You are too good to me," she murmured, with her head on Lady Lydiard's bosom. "How can I ever love you enough in return?"

Lady Lydiard patted the pretty head that rested on her with such filial tenderness. "There! there!" she said. "Go back and play with Tommie, my dear. We may be as fond of each other as we like; but we mustn't cry. God bless you! Go away—go away!"

She turned aside quickly; her own eyes were moistening, and it was part of her character to be reluctant to let Isabel see it. "Why have I made a fool of myself?" she wondered, as she approached the drawing-room door. "It doesn't matter. I am all the better for it. Odd, that Mr. Hardyman should have made me feel fonder of Isabel than ever!"

With those reflections, she re-entered the drawing-room—and suddenly checked herself with a start. "Good Heavens!" she exclaimed irritably, "how you frightened me! Why was I not told you were here?"

Having left the drawing-room in a state of solitude, Lady Lydiard on her return found herself suddenly confronted with a gentleman, mysteriously planted on the hearth-rug in her absence. The new visitor may be rightly described as a grey man. He had grey hair, eyebrows, and whiskers; he wore a grey coat, waistcoat, and trousers, and grey gloves. For the rest, his appearance was eminently suggestive of wealth and respectability—and, in this case, appearances were really to be trusted. The grey man was no other than Lady Lydiard's legal adviser, Mr. Troy.

"I regret, my Lady, that I should have been so unfortunate as to startle you," he said, with a certain underlying embarrassment in his manner. "I had the honour of sending word by Mr. Moody that I would call at this hour, on some matters of business connected with your Ladyship's house property. I presumed that you expected to find me here, waiting your pleasure."

Thus far, Lady Lydiard had listened to her legal adviser, fixing her eyes on his face in her usually frank, straightforward way. She now stopped him in the middle of a sentence with a change of expression in her own face, which was undisguisedly a change to alarm.

"Don't apologise, Mr. Troy," she said. "I am to blame for forgetting your appointment, and for not keeping my nerves under proper control." She paused for a moment, and took a seat before she said her next words. "May I ask," she resumed, "if there is something unpleasant in the business that brings you here?"

"Nothing whatever, my Lady; mere formalities, which can wait till to-morrow or next day, if you wish it."

Lady Lydiard's fingers drummed impatiently on the table. "You have known me long enough, Mr. Troy, to know that I cannot endure suspense. You have something unpleasant to tell me."

The lawyer respectfully remonstrated. "Really, Lady Lydiard!"—he began.

"It won't do, Mr. Troy! I know how you look at me on ordinary occasions, and I see how you look at me now. You are a very clever lawyer; but, happily for the interests that I commit to your charge, you are also a thoroughly honest man. After twenty years' experience of you, you can't deceive me. You bring me bad news. Speak at once, Sir, and speak plainly."

Mr. Troy yielded—in by inch, as it were. "I bring news which, I fear, may annoy your Ladyship." He paused, and advanced another inch. "It is news which I only became acquainted with myself on entering this house." He waited again, and made another advance. "I happened to meet your Ladyship's steward, Mr. Moody, in the hall."

"Where is he?" Lady Lydiard interposed, angrily. "I can make him speak out, and I will. Send him here instantly."

The lawyer made a last effort to hold off the coming disclosure a little longer. "Mr. Moody will be here directly," he said. "Mr. Moody requested me to prepare your Ladyship."

"Will you ring the bell, Mr. Troy, or must I?"

Moody had evidently been waiting outside while the lawyer spoke for him. He saved Mr. Troy the trouble of ringing the bell by presenting himself in the drawing-room. Lady Lydiard's eyes searched his face as he approached. Her bright complexion faded suddenly. Not a word more passed her lips. She looked, and waited.

In silence on his side, Moody laid an open sheet of paper on the table. The paper quivered in his trembling hand.

Lady Lydiard recovered herself first. "Is that for me?" she asked.

"Yes, my Lady."

She took up the paper without an instant's hesitation. Both the men watched her anxiously as she read it.

The handwriting was strange to her. The words were these:—"I hereby certify that the bearer of these lines, Robert Moody by name, has presented to me the letter with which he was charged, addressed to myself, with the seal intact. I regret to add that there is, to say the least of it, some mistake. The inclosure referred to by the anonymous writer of the letter, who signs 'a friend in need,' has not reached me. No five hundred pound bank-note was in the letter when I opened it. My wife was present when I broke the seal, and can certify to this statement if necessary. Not knowing who my charitable correspondent is (Mr. Moody being forbidden to give me any information), I can only take this means of stating the case exactly as it stands, and hold myself at the disposal of the writer of the letter. My private address is at the head of the page.—Samuel Bradstock, Rector, St. Anne's, Deansbury, London."

Lady Lydiard dropped the paper on the table. For the moment, plainly as the Rector's statement was expressed, she appeared to be incapable of understanding it. "What, in God's name, does this mean?" she asked.

The lawyer and the steward looked at each other. Which of the two was entitled to speak first? Lady Lydiard gave them no time to decide. "Moody," she said, sternly, "You took charge of the letter—I look to you for an explanation."

Moody's dark eyes flashed. He answered Lady Lydiard, without caring to conceal that he resented the tone in which she had spoken to him.

"I undertook to deliver the letter at its address," he said. "I found it, sealed, on the table. Your Ladyship has the clergyman's written testimony that I handed it to him with the seal unbroken. I have done my duty; and I have no explanation to offer."

Before Lady Lydiard could speak again, Mr. Troy discreetly interfered. He saw plainly that his experience was required to lead the investigation in the right direction.

"Pardon me, my Lady," he said, with that happy mixture of the positive and the polite in his manner, of which lawyers alone possess the secret. "There is only one way of arriving at the truth in painful matters of this sort. We must begin at the beginning. May I venture to ask your Ladyship a question?"

Lady Lydiard felt the composing influence of Mr. Troy. "I am at your disposal, Sir," she said quietly.

"Are you absolutely certain that you inclosed the bank-note in the letter?" the lawyer asked.

"I certainly believe I inclosed it," Lady Lydiard answered. "But I was so alarmed at the time by the sudden illness of my dog, that I do not feel justified in speaking positively."

"Was anybody in the room with your Ladyship when you put the inclosure in the letter—as you believe?"

"I was in the room," said Moody. "I can swear that I saw her Ladyship put the bank-note in the letter, and the letter in the envelope."

"And seal the envelope?" asked Mr. Troy.

"No, Sir. Her Ladyship was called away into the next room to the dog, before she could seal the envelope."

Mr. Troy addressed himself once more to Lady Lydiard. "Did your Ladyship take the letter into the next room with you?"

"I was too much alarmed to think of it, Mr. Troy. I left it here, on the table."

"With the envelope open?"

"Yes."

"How long were you absent in the other room?"

"Half an hour or more."

"Ha!" said Mr. Troy to himself. "This complicates it a little. He reflected for a while, and then turned again to Moody. "Did any of the servants know of this bank-note being in her Ladyship's possession?"

"Not one of them," Moody answered.

"Do you suspect any of the servants?"

"Certainly not, Sir."

"Are there any workmen employed in the house?"

"No, Sir."

"Do you know of any persons who had access to the room while Lady Lydiard was absent from it?"

"Two visitors called, Sir."

"Who were they?"

"Her Ladyship's nephew, Mr. Felix Sweetser, and the Honourable Alfred Hardyman."

Mr. Troy shook his head irritably. "I am not speaking of gentlemen of high position and repute," he said. "It's absurd even to mention Mr. Sweetser and Mr. Hardyman. My question related to strangers who might have obtained access to the drawing-room—people calling, with her Ladyship's sanction, for subscriptions, for instance; or people calling with articles of dress or ornament to be submitted to her Ladyship's inspection."

"No such persons came to the house, to my knowledge," Moody answered.

Mr. Troy suspended the investigation, and took a turn thoughtfully in the room. The theory on which his inquiries had proceeded thus far and failed to produce any results. His experience warned him to waste no more time on it, and to return to the starting-point of the investigation—in other words, to the letter. Shifting his point of view, he turned again to Lady Lydiard, and tried his questions in a new direction.

"Mr. Moody mentioned just now," he said, "that your Ladyship was called into the next room before you could seal your letter. On your return to this room, did you seal the letter?"

"I was busy with the dog," Lady Lydiard answered. "Isabel Miller was of no use in the boudoir, and I told her to seal it for me."

Mr. Troy started. The new direction in which he was pushing his inquiries began to look like the right direction already. "Miss Isabel Miller," he proceeded, "has been a resident under your Ladyship's roof for some little time, I believe?"

"For nearly two years, Mr. Troy."

"As your Ladyship's companion and reader?"

"As my adopted daughter," her Ladyship answered, with marked emphasis.

Wise Mr. Troy rightly interpreted the emphasis as a warning to him to suspend the examination of her Ladyship, and to address to Mr. Moody the far more serious questions which were now to come.

SCENE FROM "MY LADY'S MONEY." DRAWN BY F. BARNARD.

"Did anyone give you the letter before you left the house with it?" he said to the steward. "Or did you take it yourself?"
 "I took it myself, from the table here."
 "Was it sealed?"
 "Yes."
 "Was anybody present when you took the letter from the table?"
 "Miss Isabel was present."
 "Did you find her alone in the room?"
 "Yes, Sir."

Lady Lydiard opened her lips to speak, and checked herself. Mr. Troy, having cleared the ground before him, put the fatal question.

"Mr. Moody," he said, "when Miss Isabel was instructed to seal the letter, did she know that a bank-note was inclosed in it?"

Instead of replying, Robert drew back from the lawyer with a look of horror. Lady Lydiard started to her feet, and checked herself again, on the point of speaking.

"Answer him, Moody," she said, putting a strong constraint on herself.

Robert answered very unwillingly. "I took the liberty of reminding her Ladyship that she had left her letter unsealed," he said. "And I mentioned as my excuse for speaking"—he stopped, and corrected himself—"I believe I mentioned that a valuable inclosure was in the letter."

"You believe?" Mr. Troy repeated. "Can't you speak more positively than that?"

"I can speak positively," said Lady Lydiard, with her eyes on the lawyer. "Moody did mention the inclosure in the letter—in Isabel Miller's hearing as well as in mine." She paused, steadily controlling herself. "And what of that, Mr. Troy?" she added, very quietly and firmly.

Mr. Troy answered quietly and firmly, on his side. "I am surprised that your Ladyship should ask the question," he said.

"I persist in repeating the question," Lady Lydiard rejoined. "I say that Isabel Miller knew of the inclosure in my letter—and I ask, What of that?"

"And I answer," retorted the impenetrable lawyer, "that the suspicion of theft rests on your Ladyship's adopted daughter, and on nobody else."

"It's false!" cried Robert, with a burst of honest indignation. "I wish to God I had never said a word to you about the loss of the bank-note! Oh, my Lady! my Lady! don't let him distress you! What does he know about it?"

"Hush!" said Lady Lydiard. "Control yourself, and hear what he has to say." She rested her hand on Moody's shoulder, partly to encourage him, partly to support herself; and, fixing her eyes again on Mr. Troy, repeated his last words, "Suspicion rests on my adopted daughter, and on nobody else." Why on nobody else?

"Is your Ladyship prepared to suspect the Rector of St. Anne's of embezzlement, or your own relatives and equals of theft?" Mr. Troy asked. "Does a shadow of doubt rest on the servants? Not if Mr. Moody's evidence is to be believed. Who, to our own certain knowledge, had access to the letter while it was unsealed? Who was alone in the room with it? And who knew of the inclosure in it? I leave the answer to your Ladyship."

"Isabel Miller is as incapable of an act of theft as I am. There is my answer, Mr. Troy."

The lawyer bowed resignedly, and advanced to the door.

"Am I to take your Ladyship's generous assertion as finally disposing of the question of the lost bank-note?" he inquired.

Lady Lydiard met the challenge without shrinking from it.

"No!" she said. "The loss of the bank-note is known out of my house. Other persons may suspect this innocent girl as you suspect her. It is due to Isabel's reputation—her unstained reputation, Mr. Troy!—that she should know what has happened, and should have an opportunity of defending herself. She is in the next room, Moody. Bring her here."

Robert's courage failed him: he trembled at the bare idea of exposing Isabel to the terrible ordeal that awaited her. "Oh, my Lady!" he pleaded, "think again before you tell the poor girl that she is suspected of theft. Keep it a secret from her—the shame of it will break her heart!"

"Keep it a secret," said Lady Lydiard, "when the Rector and the Rector's wife both know of it! Do you think they will let the matter rest where it is, even if I could consent to hush it up? I must write to them; and I can't write anonymously after what has happened. Put yourself in Isabel's place, and tell me if you would thank the person who knew you to be innocently exposed to a disgraceful suspicion, and who concealed it from you? Go, Moody! The longer you delay, the harder it will be."

With his head sunk on his breast, with anguish written in every line of his face, Moody obeyed. Passing slowly down the short passage which connected the two rooms, and still shrinking from the duty that had been imposed on him, he paused, looking through the curtains which hung over the entrance to the boudoir.

CHAPTER VII.

The sight that met Moody's view wrung him to the heart.

Isabel and the dog were at play together. Among the varied accomplishments possessed by Tommie, the capacity to take his part at a game of hide-and-seek was one. His playfellow for the time being put a shawl or a handkerchief over his head, so as to prevent him from seeing, and then hid among the furniture a pocket-book or a cigar-case, or a purse, or anything else that happened to be at hand, leaving the dog to find it, with his keen sense of smell to guide him. Doubly relieved by the fit and the bleeding, Tommie's spirits had revived; and he and Isabel had just begun their game when Moody looked into the room, charged with his terrible errand. "You're burning, Tommie, you're burning!" cried the girl, laughing and clapping her hands. The next moment she happened to look round and saw Moody through the parted curtains. His face warned her instantly that something serious had happened. She advanced a few steps, her eyes resting on him in silent alarm. He was himself too painfully agitated to speak. Not a word was exchanged between Lady Lydiard and Mr. Troy in the next room. In the complete stillness that prevailed, the dog was heard sniffing and fidgeting about the furniture. Robert took Isabel by the hand and led her into the drawing-room. "For God's sake, spare her, my Lady!" he whispered. The lawyer heard him. "No," said Mr. Troy. "Be merciful, and tell her the truth!"

He spoke to a woman who stood in no need of his advice. The inherent nobility in Lady Lydiard's nature was roused: her great heart offered itself patiently to any sorrow, to any sacrifice.

Putting her arm round Isabel—half caressing her, half supporting her—Lady Lydiard accepted the whole responsibility and told the whole truth.

Reeling under the first shock, the poor girl recovered herself with admirable courage. She raised her head, and eyed the lawyer without uttering a word. In its artless consciousness of innocence the look was nothing less than sublime. Addressing herself to Mr. Troy, Lady Lydiard pointed to Isabel. "Do you see guilt there?" she asked.

Mr. Troy made no answer. In the melancholy experience of humanity to which his profession condemned him, he had seen conscious guilt assume the face of innocence, and helpless innocence admit the disguise of guilt: the keenest observation, in either case, failing completely to detect the truth. Lady Lydiard misinterpreted his silence as expressing the sullen self-assertion of a heartless man. She turned from him, in contempt, and held out her hand to Isabel.

"Mr. Troy is not satisfied yet," she said, bitterly. "My love, take my hand, and look me in the face as your equal; I know no difference of rank at such a time as this. Before God, who hears you, are you innocent of the theft of the bank-note?"

"Before God, who hears me," Isabel answered. "I am innocent."

Lady Lydiard looked once more at the lawyer, and waited to hear if he believed that.

Mr. Troy took refuge in dumb diplomacy—he made a low bow. It might have meant that he believed Isabel, or it might have meant that he modestly withdrew his own opinion into the background. Lady Lydiard did not condescend to inquire what it meant.

"The sooner we bring this painful scene to an end the better," she said. "I shall be glad to avail myself of your professional assistance, Mr. Troy, within certain limits. Outside of my house, I beg that you will spare no trouble in tracing the lost money to the person who has really stolen it. Inside of my house, I must positively request that the disappearance of the note may never be alluded to, in any way whatever, until your inquiries have been successful in discovering the thief. In the meanwhile, Mrs. Tollmidge and her family must not be sufferers by my loss: I shall pay the money again." She paused, and pressed Isabel's hand with affectionate fervour. "My child," she said, "one last word to you, and I have done. You remain here, with my trust in you, and my love for you, absolutely unshaken. You are dearer to me than ever. Never forget that!"

Isabel bent her head, and kissed the kind hand that still held her's. The high spirit that was in her, inspired by Lady Lydiard's example, rose equal to the dreadful situation in which she was placed.

"No, my Lady," she said, calmly and sadly; "it cannot be. What this gentleman has said of me is not to be denied—the appearances are against me. The letter was open, and I was alone in the room with it, and Mr. Moody told me that a valuable inclosure was inside it. Dear and kind mistress! I am not fit to be a member of your household, I am not worthy to live with the honest people who serve you, while my innocence is in doubt. It is enough for me now that you don't doubt it. I can wait patiently, after that, for the day that gives me back my good name. Oh, my Lady, don't cry about it! Pray, pray don't cry!"

Lady Lydiard's self-control failed her for the first time. Isabel's courage had made Isabel dearer to her than ever. She sank into a chair, and covered her face with her handkerchief. Mr. Troy turned aside abruptly, and examined a Japanese vase, without any idea in his mind of what he was looking at. Lady Lydiard had gravely misjudged him in believing him to be a heartless man.

Isabel followed the lawyer, and touched him gently on the arm to rouse his attention.

"I have one relation living, Sir—an aunt—who will receive me if I go to her," she said, simply. "Is there any harm in my going? Lady Lydiard will give you the address when you want me. Spare her Ladyship, Sir, all the pain and trouble that you can."

At last the heart that was in Mr. Troy asserted itself. "You are a fine creature!" he said, with a burst of enthusiasm. "I agree with Lady Lydiard—I believe you are innocent, too; and I will leave no effort untried to find the proof of it." He turned aside again, and had another look at the Japanese vase.

As the lawyer withdrew himself from observation, Moody approached Isabel.

Thus far he had stood apart, watching her and listening to her in silence. Not a look that had crossed her face, not a word that had fallen from her, had escaped him. Unconsciously on her side, unconsciously on his side, she now wrought on his nature with a purifying and ennobling influence which animated it with a new life. All that had been selfish and violent in his passion for her left him to return no more. The immeasurable devotion which he laid at her feet, in the days that were yet to come—the unyielding courage which cheerfully accepted the sacrifice of himself when events demanded it at a later period of his life—struck root in him now. Without attempting to conceal the tears that were falling fast over his cheeks—striving vainly to express those new thoughts in him that were beyond the reach of words—he stood before her the truest friend and servant that ever woman had. "Oh, my dear! my heart is heavy for you. Take me to serve you and help you. Her Ladyship's kindness will permit it, I am sure."

He could say no more. In those simple words the cry of his heart reached her. "Forgive me, Robert," she answered, gratefully. "If I said anything to pain you when we spoke together a little while since, I didn't mean it." She gave him her hand, and looked timidly over her shoulder at Lady Lydiard. "Let me go!" she said, in low, broken tones. "Let me go!"

Mr. Troy heard her, and stepped forward to interfere before Lady Lydiard could speak. The man had recovered his self-control; the lawyer took his place again on the scene.

"You must not leave us, my dear," he said to Isabel, "until I have put a question to Mr. Moody in which you are interested. Do you happen to have the number of the lost bank-note?" he asked, turning to the steward.

Moody produced his slip of paper with the number on it. Mr. Troy made two copies of it before he returned the paper. One copy he put in his pocket, the other he handed to Isabel.

"Keep it carefully," he said. "Neither you nor I know how soon it may be of use to you."

Receiving the copy from him, she felt mechanically in her apron for her pocket-book. She had used it, in playing with the dog, as an object to hide from him; but she had suffered, and was still suffering, too keenly to be capable of the effort of remembrance. Moody, eager to help her even in the most trifling thing, guessed what had happened. "You were playing with Tommie," he said; "is it in the next room?"

The dog heard his name pronounced through the open door. The next moment he trotted into the drawing-room with Isabel's pocket-book in his mouth. He was a strong, well-grown Scotch terrier of the largest size, with bright, intelligent eyes, and a coat of thick curling white hair, diversified by two light brown patches on his back. As he reached the middle of the room, and looked from one to another of the persons present, the fine sympathy of his race told him that there was trouble among his human friends. His tail dropped; he whined softly as he approached Isabel, and laid her pocket-book at her feet.

She knelt as she picked up the pocket-book, and raised her playfellow of happier days to take her leave of him. As the dog put his paws on her shoulders, returning her caresses, her first tears fell. "Foolish of me," she said, faintly, "to cry over a dog. I can't help it. Good-by, Tommie!"

Putting him away from her gently, she walked towards the door. The dog instantly followed. She put him away from her, for the second time, and left him. He was not to be denied; he followed her again, and took the skirt of her dress in his teeth, as if to hold her back. Robert forced the dog, growling and resisting with all his might, to let go of the dress. "Don't be rough with him," said Isabel. "Put him on her Ladyship's lap; he will be quieter there." Robert obeyed. He whispered to Lady Lydiard as she received the dog: she seemed to be still incapable of speaking—she bowed her head in silent assent. Robert hurried back to Isabel before she had passed the door. "Not alone!" he said, entreatingly. "Her Ladyship permits it, Isabel. Let me see you safe to your aunt's house."

Isabel looked at him, felt for him, and yielded. "Yes," she answered, softly; "to make amends for what I said to you when I was thoughtless and happy!" She waited a little to compose herself before she spoke her few farewell words to Lady Lydiard. "Good-by, my Lady. Your kindness has not been thrown away on an ungrateful girl. I love you, and thank you, with all my heart."

Lady Lydiard rose, placing the dog on the chair as she left it. She seemed to have grown older by years, instead of by minutes, in the short interval that had passed since she had hidden her face from view. "I can't bear it!" she cried, in husky, broken tones. "Isabel! Isabel! I forbid you to leave me!"

But one person present could venture to resist her. That person was Mr. Troy—and Mr. Troy knew it.

"Control yourself," he said to her in a whisper. "The girl is doing what is best and most becoming in her position—and is doing it with a patience and courage wonderful to see. She places herself under the protection of her nearest relative until her character is vindicated and her position in your house is once more beyond a doubt. Is this a time to throw obstacles in her way? Be worthy of yourself, Lady Lydiard—and think of the day when she will return to you without the breath of a suspicion to rest on her!"

There was no disputing with him—he was too plainly in the right. Lady Lydiard submitted; she concealed the torture that her own resolution inflicted on her with an endurance which was, indeed, worthy of herself. Taking Isabel in her arms she kissed her in a passion of sorrow and love. "My poor dear! My own sweet girl! don't suppose that this is a parting kiss! I shall see you again—often and often I shall see you again at your aunt's!" At a sign from Mr. Troy, Robert took Isabel's arm in his and led her away. Tommie, watching her from his chair, lifted his little white muzzle as his playfellow looked back on passing the doorway. The long, melancholy farewell howl of the dog was the last sound Isabel Miller heard as she left the house.

PART THE SECOND.
THE DISCOVERY.

CHAPTER VIII.

On the day after Isabel left Lady Lydiard's house Mr. Troy set forth for the Head Office in Whitehall to consult the police on the question of the missing money. He had previously sent information of the robbery to the Bank of England, and had also advertised the loss in the daily newspapers.

The air was so pleasant, and the sun was so bright, that he determined on proceeding to his destination on foot. He was hardly out of sight of his own offices when he was overtaken by a friend, who was also walking in the direction of Whitehall. This gentleman was a person of considerable worldly wisdom and experience; he had been officially associated with cases of striking and notorious crime, in which Government had lent its assistance to discover and punish the criminals. The opinion of a person in this position might be of the greatest value to Mr. Troy, whose practice as a solicitor had thus far never brought him into collision with thieves and mysteries. He accordingly decided, in Isabel's interests, on confiding to his friend the nature of his errand to the police. Concealing the names, but concealing nothing else, he described what had happened on the previous day at Lady Lydiard's house, and then put the question plainly to his companion,

"What would you do in my place?"

"In your place," his friend answered quietly, "I should not waste time and money in consulting the police."

"Not consult the police!" exclaimed Mr. Troy in amazement. "Surely, I have not made myself understood? I am going to the Head Office; and I have got a letter of introduction to the chief inspector in the detective department. I am afraid I omitted to mention that?"

"It doesn't make any difference," proceeded the other, as coolly as ever. "You have asked for my advice, and I give you my advice. Tear up your letter of introduction and don't stir a step farther in the direction of Whitehall."

Mr. Troy began to understand. "You don't believe in the detective police?" he said.

"Who can believe in them, who reads the newspapers and remembers what he reads?" his friend rejoined. "Fortunately for the detective department, the public in general forgets what it reads. Go to your club, and look at the criminal history of our own time, recorded in the newspapers. Every crime is more or less a mystery. You will see that the mysteries which the police discover are, almost without exception, mysteries made penetrable by the commonest capacity, through the extraordinary stupidity exhibited in the means taken to hide the crime. On the other hand, let the guilty man or woman be a resolute and intelligent person, capable of setting his (or her) wits fairly against the wits of the police—in other words, let the mystery really be a mystery—and cite me a case if you can (a really difficult and perplexing case) in which the criminal has not escaped. Mind! I don't charge the police with neglecting their work. No doubt they do their best, and take the greatest pains in following the routine to which they have been trained. It is their misfortune, not their fault, that there is no man of superior intelligence among them—I mean no man who is capable, in great emergencies, of placing himself above conventional methods, and following a new way of his own. There have been such men in the police—men naturally endowed with that faculty of mental analysis which can decompose a mystery, resolve it into its component parts, and find the clue at the bottom, no matter how remote from ordinary observation it may be. But those men have died, or have retired. One of them would have been invaluable to you in the case you have just mentioned to me. As things are, unless you are wrong in believing in the young lady's innocence, the person who has stolen that bank-note will be no easy person to find. In my opinion, there is only one man now in London who is likely to be of the slightest assistance to you—and he is not in the police."

"Who is he?" asked Mr. Troy.

"An old rogue, who was once in your branch of the legal profession," the friend answered. "You may, perhaps, remember the man: they call him 'Old Sharon.'"

"What! The scoundrel who was struck off the Roll of Attorneys, years since? Is he still alive?"

"Alive and prospering. He lives in a court or lane running out of Long-acre, and he offers advice to persons interested in recovering missing objects of any sort. Whether you have lost your wife, or lost your cigar-case, old Sharon is equally useful to you. He has an inbred capacity for reading the riddle the right way in cases of mystery, great or small. In short, he possesses exactly that analytical faculty to which I alluded just now. I have his address at my office, if you think it worth while to try him."

"Who can trust such a man?" Mr. Troy objected. "He would be sure to deceive me."

"You are entirely mistaken. Since he was struck off the Rolls old Sharon has discovered that the straight way is, on the whole, the best way, even in a man's own interests. His consultation fee is a guinea; and he gives a signed estimate beforehand for any supplementary expenses that may follow. I can tell you (this is, of course, strictly between ourselves) that the authorities at my office took his advice in a Government case that puzzled the police. We approached him, of course, through persons who were to be trusted to represent us, without betraying the source from which their instructions were derived; and we found the old rascal's advice well worth paying for. It is quite likely that he may not succeed so well in your case. Try the police, by all means; and, if they fail, why, there is Sharon as a last resource."

This arrangement commended itself to Mr. Troy's professional caution. He went on to Whitehall, and he tried the detective police. They at once adopted the obvious conclusion to persons of ordinary capacity—the conclusion that Isabel was the thief. Acting on this conviction, the authorities sent an experienced woman from the office to Lady Lydiard's house, to examine the poor girl's clothes and ornaments before they were packed up and sent after her to her aunt's. The search led to nothing. The only objects of any value that were discovered had been presents from Lady Lydiard. No jewellers' or milliners' bills were among the papers found in her desk. Not a sign of secret extravagance in dress was to be seen anywhere. Defeated so far, the police proposed next to have Isabella privately watched. There might be a prodigal lover somewhere in the background, with ruin staring him in the face unless he could raise five hundred pounds. Lady Lydiard (who had only consented to the search under stress of persuasive argument from Mr. Troy) resented this ingenious idea as an insult. She declared that if Isabel was watched the girl should know of it instantly from her own lips. The police listened with perfect resignation and decorum, and politely shifted their ground. A certain suspicion (they remarked) always rested in cases of this sort on the servants. Would her Ladyship object to private inquiries into the characters and proceedings of the servants? Her Ladyship instantly objected, in the most positive terms. Thereupon the "Inspector" asked for a minute's private conversation with Mr. Troy. "The thief is certainly a member of Lady Lydiard's household," this functionary remarked, in his politely-positive way. "If her Ladyship persists in refusing to let us make the necessary inquiries, our hands are tied, and the case comes to an end through no fault of ours. If her Ladyship changes her mind, perhaps you will drop me a line, Sir, to that effect. Good morning."

So the experiment of consulting the police came to an untimely end. The one result obtained was the expression of a purling opinion by the authorities of the detective department, which pointed to Isabel, or at one of the servants, as the undiscovered thief. Thinking the matter over in the retirement of his own office—and not forgetting his promise to Isabel to leave no means untried of establishing her innocence—Mr. Troy could see but one alternative left to him. He took up his pen, and wrote to his friend at the Government office. There was nothing for it now but to run the risk, and try old Sharon.

CHAPTER IX.

The next day, Mr. Troy (taking Robert Moody with him as a valuable witness) rung the bell at the mean and dirty lodging-house in which old Sharon received the clients who stood in need of his advice.

They were led up stairs to a back room on the second floor of the house. Entering the room, they discovered through a thick cloud of tobacco smoke, a small, fat, baldheaded, dirty, old man, in an arm-chair, robed in a tattered flannel dressing-gown, with a short pipe in his mouth, a pug-dog on his lap, and a French novel in his hands.

"Is it business?" asked old Sharon, speaking in a hoarse, asthmatical voice, and fixing a pair of bright, shameless black eyes attentively on the two visitors.

"It is business," Mr. Troy answered, looking at the old rogue who had disgraced an honourable profession, as he might have looked at a reptile which had just risen rampant at his feet. "What is your fee for a consultation?"

"You give me a guinea, and I'll give you half an hour." With this reply old Sharon held out his unwashed hand across the rickety ink-splashed table at which he was sitting.

Mr. Troy would not have touched him with the tips of his own fingers for a thousand pounds. He laid the guinea on the table.

Old Sharon burst into a fierce laugh—a laugh strangely accompanied by a frowning contraction of his eyebrows, and a frightful exhibition of the whole inside of his mouth. "I'm not clean enough for you—eh?" he said, with an appearance of being very much amused. "There's a dirty old man described in this book that is a little like me." He held up his French novel. "Have you read it? A capital story—well put together. Ah, you haven't read it? You have got a pleasure to come. I say, do you mind tobacco-smoke? I think faster while I smoke—that's all."

Mr. Troy's respectable hand waved a silent permission to smoke, given under dignified protest.

"All right," said old Sharon. "Now, get on."

He laid himself back in his chair, and puffed out his smoke, with eyes lazily half closed, like the eyes of the pug-dog on his lap. At that moment, indeed, there was a curious resemblance between the two. They both seemed to be preparing themselves, in the same idle way, for the same comfortable nap.

Mr. Troy stated the circumstances under which the five-hundred-pound note had disappeared, in clear and consecutive narrative. When he had done, Old Sharon suddenly opened his eyes. The pug-dog suddenly opened his eyes. Old Sharon looked hard at Mr. Troy. The pug looked hard at Mr. Troy. Old Sharon spoke. The pug growled.

"I know who you are—you're a lawyer. Don't be alarmed! I never saw you before; and I don't know your name. What I do know, is a lawyer's statement of facts when I hear it. Who's this?" Old Sharon looked inquisitively at Moody as he put the question.

Mr. Troy introduced Moody as a competent witness, thoroughly acquainted with the circumstances, and ready and willing to answer any questions relating to them. Old Sharon waited a little, smoking hard and thinking hard. "Now, then!" he burst out in his fiercely sudden way. "I'm going to get to the root of the matter."

He leaned forward with his elbows on the table, and began his examination of Moody. Heartily as Mr. Troy despised and disliked the old rogue, he listened with astonishment and admiration—literally extorted from him by the marvellous ability with which the questions were adapted to the end in view. In a quarter of an hour Old Sharon had extracted from the witness everything, literally everything down to the smallest detail, that Moody could tell him. Having now, in his own phrase, "got to the root of the matter," he relit his pipe with a grunt of satisfaction, and laid himself back again in his old arm-chair.

"Well?" said Mr. Troy. "Have you formed your opinion?"

"Yes; I've formed my opinion."

"What is it?"

Instead of replying, Old Sharon winked confidentially at Mr. Troy, and put a question on his side.

"I say! Is a ten-pound note much of an object to you?"

"It depends," answered Mr. Troy, "on what the money is wanted for."

"Look here," said Old Sharon; "I can give you an opinion for your guinea; but, mind this, it's an opinion founded on hearsay—and you know as a lawyer what that is worth. Venture your ten pounds—in plain English, pay me for my time and trouble in a baffling and difficult case—and I'll give you an opinion founded on my own experience."

"Explain yourself a little more clearly," said Mr. Troy. "What do you guarantee to tell us if we venture the ten pounds?"

"I guarantee to name the person, or the persons, on whom the suspicion really rests. And if you employ me after that, I guarantee (before you pay me a halfpenny more) to prove that I am right by laying my hand on the thief."

"Let us have the guinea opinion first," said Mr. Troy.

Old Sharon made another frightful exhibition of the whole inside of his mouth; his laugh was louder and fiercer than ever. "I like you!" he said to Mr. Troy, "you are so devilish fond of your money. Lord! how rich you must be! Now listen. Here's the guinea opinion:—Suspect, in this case, the very last person on whom suspicion could possibly fall."

Moody, listening attentively, started, and changed colour at those last words. Mr. Troy looked thoroughly disappointed, and made no attempt to conceal it.

"Is that all?" he asked.

"All?" retorted the cynical vagabond. "You're a pretty lawyer! What more can I say, when I don't know for certain whether the witness who has given me my information has misled me or not? Have I spoken to the girl and formed my own opinion? No! Have I been introduced among the servants (as errand-boy, or to clean the boots and shoes, or what not), and have I formed my own judgment of them? No! I take your opinions for granted, and I tell you how I should set to work myself if they were my opinions too—and that's a guinea's-worth, a devilish good guinea's-worth to a rich man like you!"

Old Sharon's logic produced a certain effect on Mr. Troy, in spite of himself. It was smartly put from his point of view—there was no denying that.

"Even if I consented to your proposal," he said, "I should object to your annoying the young lady with impertinent questions, or to your being introduced as a spy into a respectable house."

Old Sharon doubled his dirty fists and drummed with them on the rickety table in a comical frenzy of impatience while Mr. Troy was speaking.

"What the devil do you know about my way of doing my business?" he burst out when the lawyer had done. "One of us two is talking like a born idiot—and (mind this) it isn't me. Look here! Your young lady goes out for a walk, and she meets with a dirty, shabby old beggar—I look like a shabby old beggar already, don't I? Very good. This dirty old wretch whines and whimpers and tells a long story, and gets sixpence out of the girl—and knows her by that time, inside and out, as well as if he had made her—and, mark! hasn't asked her a single question, and, instead of annoying her, has made her happy in the performance of a charitable action. Stop a bit! I haven't done with you yet. Who blacks your boots and shoes? Look here!" He pushed his pug dog off his lap, dived under the table, appeared again with an old boot and a bottle of blacking, and set to work with tigerish activity. "I'm going out for a walk, you know, and I may as well make myself smart." With that announcement, he began to sing over his work—a song of sentiment, popular in England in the early part of the present century—"She's all my fancy painted her; she's lovely, she's divine; but her heart it is another's; and it never can be mine! Too-ral-loo-ral-loo. I like a love song. Brush away! brush away! till I see my own pretty face in the blacking. Hey! Here's a nice, harmless, jolly old man! sings and jokes over his work, and makes the kitchen quite cheerful. What's that you say? He's a stranger, and don't talk to him too freely. You ought to be ashamed of yourself to speak in that way of a poor old fellow with one foot in the grave. Mrs.-cook will give him a nice bit of dinner in the scullery; and John-footman will look out an old coat for him. And when he's heard everything he wants to hear, and doesn't come back again the next day to his work—what do they think of it in the servants' hall? Do they say, 'We've had a spy among us!' Yah! you know better than that, by this time. The cheerful old man has been run over in the street, or is down with the fever, or has turned up his toes in the parish dead-house—that's what they say in the servants' hall. Try me in your own kitchen, and see if your servants take me for a spy. Come, come,

Mr. Lawyer! out with your ten pounds, and don't waste any more precious time about it!"

"I will consider and let you know," said Mr. Troy. "Old Sharon laughed more ferociously than ever, and hobbled round the table in a great hurry to the place at which Moody was sitting. He laid one hand on the steward's shoulder, and pointed derisively with the other to Mr. Troy.

"I say, Mr. Silent-man! Bet you five pounds I never hear of that lawyer again!"

Silently attentive all through the interview (except when he was answering questions), Moody only replied in the fewest possible words. "I don't bet," was all he said. He showed no resentment at Sharon's familiarity, and he appeared to find no amusement in Sharon's extraordinary talk. The old vagabond seemed actually to produce a serious impression on him! When Mr. Troy set the example of rising to go, he still kept his seat, and looked at the lawyer as if he regretted leaving the atmosphere of tobacco-smoke reeking in the dirty room.

Have you anything to say before we go?" Mr. Troy asked. Moody rose slowly, and looked at old Sharon. "Not just now, Sir," he replied, looking away again, after a moment's reflection.

Old Sharon interpreted Moody's look and Moody's reply from his own peculiar point of view. He suddenly drew the steward away into a corner of the room.

"I say!" he began, in a whisper. "Upon your solemn word of honour, you know—are you as rich as the lawyer there?"

"Certainly not."

"Look here! It's half price to a poor man. If you feel like coming back, on your own account—five pounds will do from you. There! there! Think of it!—think of it!"

"Now, then!" said Mr. Troy, waiting for his companion, with the door open in his hand. He looked back at Sharon when Moody joined him. The old vagabond was settled again in his arm-chair, with his dog in his lap, his pipe in his mouth, and his French novel in his hand; exhibiting exactly the picture of frowsy comfort which he had presented when his visitors first entered the room.

"Good-day," said Mr. Troy, with haughty condescension.

"Don't interrupt me!" rejoined old Sharon, absorbed in his novel. "You've had your guinea's-worth. Lord! what a lovely book this is! Don't interrupt me!"

"Impudent scoundrel!" said Mr. Troy, when he and Moody were in the street again. "What could my friend mean by recommending him? Fancy his expecting me to trust him with ten pounds! I consider even the guinea completely thrown away."

"Begging your pardon, Sir," said Moody, "I don't quite agree with you there."

"What! don't mean to tell me you understand that oracular sentence of his—'Suspect the very last person on whom suspicion could possibly fall.' Rubbish!"

"I don't say I understand it, Sir. I only say it has set me thinking."

"Thinking of what? Do your suspicions point to the thief?"

"If you will please to excuse me, Mr. Troy, I should like to wait a while before I answer that."

Mr. Troy suddenly stood still, and eyed his companion a little distrustfully.

"Are you going to turn detective policeman on your own account?" he asked.

"There's nothing I won't turn to, and try, to help Miss Isabel in this matter," Moody answered, firmly. "I have saved a few hundred pounds in Lady Lydiard's service, and I am ready to spend every farthing of it, if I can only discover the thief."

Mr. Troy walked on again. "Miss Isabel seems to have a good friend in you," he said. He was (perhaps unconsciously) a little offended by the independent tone in which the steward spoke, after he had himself engaged to take the vindication of the girl's innocence into his own hands.

"Miss Isabel has a devoted servant and slave in me!" Moody answered, with passionate enthusiasm.

"Very creditable; I haven't a word to say against it," Mr. Troy rejoined. "But don't forget that the young lady has other devoted friends besides you. I am her devoted friend, for instance—I have promised to serve her, and I mean to keep my word. You will excuse me for adding that my experience and discretion are quite as likely to be useful to her as your enthusiasm. I know the world well enough to be careful in trusting strangers. It will do you no harm, Mr. Moody, to follow my example."

Moody accepted his reproof with becoming patience and resignation. "If you have anything to propose, Sir, that will be of service to Miss Isabel," he said, "I shall be happy if I can assist you in the humblest capacity."

"And if not?" Mr. Troy inquired, conscious of having nothing to propose as he asked the question.

"In that case, Sir, I must take my own course, and blame nobody but myself if it leads me astray."

Mr. Troy said no more: he parted from Moody at the next turning.

Pursuing the subject privately in his own mind, he decided on taking the earliest opportunity of visiting Isabel at her aunt's house, and on warning her, in her future intercourse with Moody, not to trust too much to the steward's discretion. "I haven't a doubt," thought the lawyer, "of what he means to do next. The infatuated fool is going back to old Sharon!"

CHAPTER X.

Returning to his office, Mr. Troy discovered, among the correspondence that was waiting for him, a letter from the very person whose welfare was still the uppermost subject in his mind. Isabel Miller wrote in these terms:—

"Dear Sir,—My aunt, Miss Pink, is very desirous of consulting you professionally at the earliest opportunity. Although South Morden is within little more than half an hour's railway ride from London, Miss Pink does not presume to ask you to visit her, being well aware of the value of your time. Will you, therefore, be so kind as to let me know when it will be convenient to you to receive my aunt at your office in London? Believe me, dear Sir, respectfully yours, ISABEL MILLER. P.S.—I am further instructed to say that the regrettable event at Lady Lydiard's house is the proposed subject of the consultation. The Lawn, South Morden. Thursday."

Mr. Troy smiled as he read the letter. "Too formal for a young girl!" he said to himself. "Every word of it has been dictated by Miss Pink." He was not long in deciding what course he should take. There was a pressing necessity for cautioning Isabel, and here was his opportunity. He sent for his head clerk, and looked at his list of engagements for the day. There was nothing set down in the book which the clerk was not quite as well able to manage as the master. Mr. Troy consulted his railway-guide, ordered his cab, and caught the next train to South Morden.

South Morden was then (and remains to this day) one of those primitive agricultural villages, passed over by the march of modern progress, which are still to be found in the near neighbourhood of London. Only the slow trains stopped at the station; and there was so little to do that the station-master and his porter grew flowers on the embankment and trained creepers over the waiting-room window. Turning your back on the railway, and walking along the one street of South Morden, you found yourself in the old England of two centuries since. Gabled cottages, with fast-closed windows; pigs and poultry in quiet possession of the road; the venerable church surrounded by its shady burial-ground; the grocer's shop which sold everything, and the butcher's shop which sold nothing; the scarce inhabitants who liked a good look at a stranger, and the unwashed children who were pictures of dirty health; the clash of the iron-chained bucket in the public well, and the thump of the falling ninepins in the skittle-ground behind the public-house; the horse-pond on one bit of open ground, and the old elm-tree with the wooden seat round it on the other—these were some of the objects that you saw, and some of the noises that you heard in South Morden, as you passed from one end of the village to the other.

About half a mile beyond the last of the old cottages, modern England met you again under the form of a row of little villas, set up by an adventurous London builder who had bought the land a bargain. Each villa stood in its own little garden, and looked across a stony road at the meadow lands and softly-rising wooded hills beyond. Each villa faced you in the sunshine with the horrid glare of new red brick, and forced its nonsensical name on your attention, traced in bright paint on the posts of its entrance gate. Consulting the posts as he advanced, Mr. Troy arrived in due course of time at the villa called The Lawn, which derived its name apparently from a circular patch of grass in front of the house. The gate resisting his efforts to open it, he rang the bell.

Admitted by a trim, clean, shy little maid-servant, Mr. Troy looked about him in silent amazement. Turn which way he might, he found himself silently confronted by posted and painted instructions to visitors, which forbade him to do this, and commanded him to do that, at every step of his progress from the gate to the house. On the side of the lawn a label informed him that he was not to walk on the grass. On the other side a painted hand pointed along a boundary-wall to an inscription which warned him to go that way if he had business in the kitchen. On the gravel walk at the foot of the house-steps words, neatly traced in little white shells, reminded him not to "forget the scraper." On the door-step he was informed, in letters of lead, that he was "Welcome!" On the mat in the passage bristly black words burst on his attention, commanding him to "wipe his shoes." Even the hat-stand in the hall was not allowed to speak for itself; it had "Hats and Cloaks" inscribed on it, and it issued its directions imperatively in the matter of your wet umbrella—"Put it here!"

Giving the trim little servant his card, Mr. Troy was introduced to a reception-room on the lower floor. Before he had time to look round him the door was opened again from without, and Isabel stole into the room on tiptoe. She looked worn and anxious. When she shook hands with the old lawyer the charming smile that he remembered so well was gone.

"Don't say you have seen me," she whispered. "I am not to come into the room till my aunt sends for me. Tell me two things before I run away again. How is Lady Lydiard? And have you discovered the thief?"

"Lady Lydiard was well when I last saw her; and we have not yet succeeded in discovering the thief." Having answered the questions in those terms, Mr. Troy decided on cautioning Isabel on the subject of the steward while he had the chance. "One question on my side," he said, holding her back from the door by the arm. "Do you expect Moody to visit you here?"

"I am sure he will visit me," Isabel answered, warmly. "He has promised to come here at my request. I never knew what a kind heart Robert Moody had till this misfortune fell on me. My aunt, who is not easily taken with strangers, respects and admires him. I can't tell you how good he was to me on the journey here—and how kindly, how nobly, he spoke to me when we parted." She paused, and turned her head away. The tears were rising in her eyes. "In my situation," she said, faintly, "kindness is very keenly felt. Don't notice me, Mr. Troy."

The lawyer waited a moment to let her recover herself.

"I agree entirely, my dear, in your opinion of Moody," he said. "At the same time, I think it right to warn you that his zeal in your service may possibly outrun his discretion. He may feel too confidently about penetrating the mystery of the missing money; and, unless you are on your guard, he may raise false hopes in you when you next see him. Listen to any advice that he may give you, by all means. But, before you decide on being guided by his opinion, consult my older experience, and hear what I have to say on the subject. Don't suppose that I am attempting to make you distrust this good friend," he added, noticing the look of uneasy surprise which Isabel fixed on him. "No such idea is in my mind. I only warn you that Moody's eagerness to be of service to you may mislead him. You understand me."

"Yes, Sir," replied Isabel, coldly; "I understand you. Please let me go now. My aunt will be down directly; and she must not find me here." She curtsied with distant respect, and left the room.

"So much for trying to put two ideas together into a girl's mind!" thought Mr. Troy, when he was alone again. "The little fool evidently thinks I am jealous of Moody's place in her estimation. Well! I have done my duty—and I can do no more."

He looked round the room. Not a chair was out of its place, not a speck of dust was to be seen. The brightly-perfect polish of the table made your eyes ache; the ornaments on it looked as if they had never been touched by mortal hand; the piano was an object for distant admiration, not an instrument to be played on; the carpet made Mr. Troy look nervously at the soles of his shoes; and the sofa (protected by layers of white crochet-work) said as plainly as if in words, "Sit on me if you dare!" Mr. Troy retreated to a bookcase at the farther end of the room. The books fitted the shelves to such absolute perfection that he had some difficulty in taking one of them out. When he had succeeded, he found himself in possession of a volume of the History of England. On the fly-leaf he encountered another written warning:—"This book belongs to Miss Pink's Academy for Young Ladies, and is not to be removed from the library." The date, which was added, referred to a period of ten years since. Miss Pink now stood revealed as a retired schoolmistress; and Mr. Troy began to understand some of the characteristic peculiarities of that lady's establishment which had puzzled him up to the present time.

He had just succeeded in putting the book back again when the door opened once more, and Isabel's aunt entered the room.

If Miss Pink could, by any possible conjuncture of circumstances, have disappeared mysteriously from her house and her friends, the police would have found the greatest difficulty in composing the necessary description of the missing lady. The acutest observer could have discovered nothing that was noticeable or characteristic in her personal appearance. The pen of the present writer portrays her in despair by a series of negatives. She was not young, she was not old; she was neither tall nor short, nor stout nor thin; nobody could call her features attractive, and nobody could call them ugly; there was nothing in her voice, her expression, her manner, or her dress that differed in any appreciable degree from the voice, expression, manner, and dress of five hundred thousand other single ladies of her age and position in the world. If you had asked her to describe herself, she would have answered, "I am a gentlewoman;" and if you had further inquired which of her numerous accomplishments took highest rank in her own esteem, she would have replied, "My powers of conversation." For the rest, she was Miss Pink, of South Morden; and, when that has been said, all has been said.

"Pray be seated, Sir. We have had a beautiful day, after the late long-continued wet weather. I am told that the season is very unfavourable for wall-fruit. May I offer you some refreshment after your journey?" In these terms, and in the smoothest of voices, Miss Pink opened the interview.

Mr. Troy made a polite reply, and added a few strictly conventional remarks on the beauty of the neighbourhood. Not even a lawyer could sit in Miss Pink's presence, and hear Miss Pink's conversation, without feeling himself called upon (in the nursery phrase) to "be on his best behaviour."

"It is extremely kind of you, Mr. Troy, to favour me with this visit," Miss Pink resumed. "I am well aware that the time of professional gentlemen is of especial value to them; and I will therefore ask you to excuse me if I proceed abruptly to the subject on which I desire to consult your experience."

Here the lady modestly smoothed out her dress over her knees, and the lawyer made a bow. Miss Pink's highly-trained conversation had perhaps one fault—it was not, strictly speaking, conversation at all. In its effect on her hearers it rather resembled the contents of a fluently conventional letter, read aloud.

The circumstances under which my niece Isabel has left Lady Lydiard's house," Miss Pink proceeded, "are so indescribably painful—I will go further, I will say so deeply humiliating—that I have forbidden her to refer to them again in my presence, or to mention them in the future to any living creature besides myself. You are acquainted with those circumstances, Mr. Troy; and you will understand my indignation when I first learnt that my sister's child had been suspected of theft. I have not the honour of being acquainted with Lady Lydiard. She is not a Countess, I believe? Just so! Her husband was only a Baron. I am not acquainted with Lady Lydiard; and I will not trust myself to say what I think of her conduct to my niece."

"Pardon me, Madam," Mr. Troy interposed. "Before you say any more about Lady Lydiard, I really must beg leave to observe"—

A BLOODLESS BATTLE. DRAWN BY R. BARNES.

A LITTLE BAGGAGE. DRAWN BY W. GOODMAN.

"Pardon me," Miss Pink rejoined. "I never form a hasty judgment. Lady Lydiard's conduct is beyond the reach of any defence, no matter how ingenious it may be. You may not be aware, Sir, that in receiving my niece under her roof her Ladyship was receiving a gentleman by birth as well as by education. My late lamented sister was the daughter of a clergyman of the Church of England. I need hardly remind you that, as such, she was a born lady. Under favouring circumstances, Isabel's maternal grandfather might have been Archbishop of Canterbury, and have taken precedence of the whole House of Peers, the Princes of the blood Royal alone excepted. I am not prepared to say that my niece is equally well connected on her father's side. My sister surprised—I will not add shocked—us when she married a chemist. At the same time, a chemist is not a tradesman. He is a gentleman at one end of the profession of Medicine, and a titled physician is a gentleman at the other end. That is all. In inviting Isabel to reside with her, Lady Lydiard, I repeat, was bound to remember that she was associating herself with a young gentleman. She has not remembered this, which is one insult; and she has suspected my niece of theft, which is another."

Miss Pink paused to take breath. Mr. Troy made a second attempt to get a hearing.

"Will you kindly permit me, Madam, to say two words?"

"No!" said Miss Pink, asserting the most immovable obstinacy under the blandest politeness of manner. "Your time, Mr. Troy, is really too valuable! Not even your trained intellect can excuse conduct which is manifestly inexcusable on the face of it. Now you know my opinion of Lady Lydiard, you will not be surprised to hear that I decline to trust her Ladyship. She may, or she may not, cause the necessary inquiries to be made for the vindication of my niece's character. In a matter so serious as this—I may say, in a duty which I owe to the memories of my sister and my parents—I will not leave the responsibility to Lady Lydiard. I will take it on myself. Let me add that I am able to pay the necessary expenses. The earlier years of my life, Mr. Troy, have been passed in the tuition of young ladies. I have been happy in meriting the confidence of parents; and I have been strict in observing the golden rules of economy. On my retirement, I have been able to invest a modest, a very modest, little fortune in the Funds. A portion of it is at the service of my niece for the recovery of her good name; and I desire to place the necessary investigation, confidentially, in your hands. You are acquainted with the case; and the case naturally goes to you. I could not prevail on myself—I really could not prevail on myself to mention it to a stranger. That is the business on which I wished to consult you. Please say nothing more about Lady Lydiard—the subject is inexpressibly disagreeable to me. I will only trespass on your kindness to tell me if I have succeeded in making myself understood."

Miss Pink leaned back in her chair, at the exact angle permitted by the laws of propriety; rested her left elbow on the palm of her right hand, and lightly supported her cheek with her forefinger and thumb. In this position she waited Mr. Troy's answer—the living picture of human obstinacy, in its most respectable form.

If Mr. Troy had not been a lawyer—in other words, if he had not been professionally capable of persisting in his own course, in the face of every conceivable difficulty and discouragement—Miss Pink might have remained in undisturbed possession of her own opinions. As it was, Mr. Troy had got his hearing at last; and no matter how obstinately she might close her eyes to it, Miss Pink was now destined to have the other side of the case presented to her view.

"I am sincerely obliged to you, Madam, for the expression of your confidence in me," Mr. Troy began; "at the same time, I must beg you to excuse me if I decline to accept your proposal."

Miss Pink had not expected to receive such an answer as this. The lawyer's brief refusal surprised and annoyed her.

"Why do you decline to assist me?" she asked.

"Because," answered Mr. Troy, "my services are already engaged, in Miss Isabel's interest, by a client whom I have served for more than twenty years. My client is—"

Miss Pink anticipated the coming disclosure. "You need not trouble yourself, Sir, to mention your client's name," she said.

"My client," persisted Mr. Troy, "loves Miss Isabel, dearly!"

"That is a matter of opinion," Miss Pink interposed.

"And believes in Miss Isabel's innocence," proceeded the irrepressible lawyer, "as firmly as you believe in it yourself."

Miss Pink (being human) had a temper; and Mr. Troy had found his way to it.

"If Lady Lydiard believes in my niece's innocence," said Miss Pink, suddenly sitting bolt upright in her chair, "why has my niece been compelled, in justice to herself, to leave Lady Lydiard's house?"

"You will admit, Madam," Mr. Troy answered cautiously, "that we are all of us liable, in this wicked world, to be the victims of appearances. Your niece is a victim—an innocent victim. She wisely withdraws from Lady Lydiard's house until appearances are proved to be false and her position is cleared up."

Miss Pink had her reply ready. "That is simply acknowledging, in other words, that my niece is suspected. I am only a woman, Mr. Troy—but it is not quite so easy to mislead me as you seem to suppose."

Mr. Troy's temper was admirably trained. But it began to acknowledge that Miss Pink's powers of irritation could sting to some purpose.

"No intention of misleading you, Madam, has ever crossed my mind," he rejoined warmly. "As for your niece, I can tell you this. In all my experience of Lady Lydiard, I never saw her so distressed as she was when Miss Isabel left the house!"

"Indeed?" said Miss Pink, with an incredulous smile. "In my rank of life, when we feel distressed about a person, we do our best to comfort that person by a kind letter or an early visit. But then I am not a lady of title."

"Lady Lydiard engaged herself to call on Miss Isabel in my hearing," said Mr. Troy. "Lady Lydiard is the most generous woman living!"

"Lady Lydiard is here!" cried a joyful voice on the other side of the door.

At the same moment, Isabel burst into the room in a state of excitement which actually ignored the formidable presence of Miss Pink. "I beg your pardon, aunt! I was up stairs at the window, and I saw the carriage stop at the gate. And Tommie has come, too! The darling saw me at the window!" cried the poor girl, her eyes sparkling with delight as a perfect explosion of barking made itself heard over the tramp of horses' feet and the crash of carriage wheels outside.

Miss Pink rose slowly, with a dignity that looked capable of adequately receiving—not one noble lady only, but the whole peerage of England.

"Control yourself, dear Isabel," she said. "No well-bred young lady permits herself to become unduly excited. Stand by my side—a little behind me."

Isabel obeyed. Mr. Troy kept his place, and privately enjoyed his triumph over Miss Pink. If Lady Lydiard had been actually in league with him, she could not have chosen a more opportune time for her visit. A momentary interval passed. The carriage drew up at the door; the horses trampled on the gravel; the bell rang madly; the uproar of Tommie, released from the carriage and clamouring to be let in, redoubled its fury. Never before had such an unruly burst of noises invaded the tranquillity of Miss Pink's villa!

CHAPTER XI.

The trim little maid-servant ran up stairs from her modest little kitchen, trembling at the terrible prospect of having to open the door. Miss Pink, deflected by the barking, had just time to say, "What a very ill-behaved dog," when a sound of small objects overthrowing in the hall, and a scurrying of furious claws across the oil-cloth, announced that Tommie had invaded the house. As the servant appeared, introducing Lady Lydiard, the dog ran in. He made one frantic leap at Isabel, which would certainly have knocked her down but for the chair that happened to be standing behind her. Received on her lap, the faithful creature half smothered her with his caresses. He barked, he shrieked, in his joy at seeing her again. He jumped off her lap and tore round and round the room at the top of his speed; and every time he passed Miss Pink he showed the whole range of his teeth and snarled ferociously at her ankles. Having at last exhausted his superfluous energy, he leapt back again on Isabel's lap, with his tongue quivering in his open mouth, his tail wagging softly, and his eye on Miss Pink, inquiring how she liked a dog in her drawing-room!

"I hope my dog has not disturbed you, Ma'am?" said Lady Lydiard, advancing from the mat at the doorway, on which she had patiently waited until the raptures of Tommie subsided into repose.

Miss Pink, trembling between terror and indignation, acknowledged Lady Lydiard's polite inquiry by a ceremonious bow, and an answer which administered by implication a dignified reproof. "Your Ladyship's dog does not appear to be a very well-trained animal," the ex-schoolmistress remarked.

"Well trained?" Lady Lydiard repeated, as if the expression was perfectly unintelligible to her. "I don't think you have had much experience of dogs, Ma'am." She turned to Isabel, and embraced her tenderly. "Give me a kiss, my dear—you don't know how wretched I have been since you left me." She looked back again at Miss Pink. "You are not, perhaps, aware, Ma'am, that my dog is devotedly attached to your niece. A dog's love has been considered by many great men (whose names at the moment escape me) as the most touching and disinterested of all earthly affections." She looked the other way, and discovered the lawyer. "How do you do, Mr. Troy; it's a pleasant surprise to find you here. The house was so dull without Isabel that I really couldn't put off seeing her any longer. When you are more used to Tommie, Miss Pink, you will understand and admire him. You understand and admire him, Isabel—don't you? My child! you are not looking well. I shall take you back with me, when the horses have had their rest. We shall never be happy away from each other."

Having expressed her sentiments, distributed her greetings, and defended her dog—all, as it were, in one breath—Lady Lydiard sat down by Isabel's side, and opened a large green fan that hung at her girdle. "You have no idea, Miss Pink, how fat people suffer in hot weather," said the old lady, using her fan vigorously.

Miss Pink's eyes dropped modestly to the ground—"fat" was such a coarse word to use, if a lady must speak of her own superfluous flesh! "May I offer some refreshment?" Miss Pink asked, mincingly. "A cup of tea?"

Lady Lydiard shook her head.

"A glass of water?"

Lady Lydiard declined this last hospitable proposal with an exclamation of disgust. "Have you got any beer?" she inquired.

"I beg your Ladyship's pardon," said Miss Pink, doubting the evidence of her own ears. "Did you say—beer?"

Lady Lydiard gesticulated vehemently with her fan. "Yes, to be sure! Beer! beer!"

Miss Pink rose, with a countenance expressive of genteel disgust, and rang the bell. "I think you have been down stairs, Susan!" she said, when the maid appeared at the door.

"Yes, Miss."

"A glass of beer for Lady Lydiard," said Miss Pink—under protest.

"Bring it in a jug," shouted her Ladyship, as the maid left the room. "I like to froth it up for myself," she continued, addressing Miss Pink. "Isabel sometimes does it for me, when she is at home—don't you, my dear?"

Miss Pink had been waiting her opportunity to assert her own claim to the possession of her own niece, from the time when Lady Lydiard had coolly declared her intention of taking Isabel back with her. The opportunity now presented itself.

"Your Ladyship will pardon me," she said, "if I remark that my niece's home is under my humble roof. I am properly sensible, I hope, of your kindness to Isabel; but while she remains the object of a disgraceful position she remains with me."

Lady Lydiard closed her fan with an angry snap.

"You are completely mistaken, Miss Pink. You may not mean it—but you speak most unjustly if you say that your niece is an object of suspicion to me, or to anybody in my house."

Mr. Troy, quietly listening up to this point, now interposed to stop the discussion before it could degenerate into a personal quarrel. His keen observation, aided by his accurate knowledge of his client's character, had plainly revealed to him what was passing in Lady Lydiard's mind. She had entered the house, feeling (perhaps unconsciously) a jealousy of Miss Pink, as her predecessor in Isabel's affections, and as the natural protectress of the girl under existing circumstances. Miss Pink's reception of her dog had additionally irritated the old lady. She had taken a malicious pleasure in shocking the schoolmistress's sense of propriety—and she was now only too ready to proceed to further extremities on the delicate question of Isabel's justification for leaving her house. For Isabel's own sake, therefore—to say nothing of other reasons—it was urgently desirable to keep the peace between the two ladies. With this excellent object in view, Mr. Troy seized his opportunity of striking into the conversation for the first time.

"Pardon me, Lady Lydiard," he said, "you are speaking of a subject which has been already sufficiently discussed between Miss Pink and myself. I think we shall do better not to dwell uselessly on past events, but to direct our attention to the future. We are all equally satisfied of the complete rectitude of Miss Isabel's conduct, and we are all equally interested in the vindication of her good name."

Whether these temperate words would of themselves have exercised the pacifying influence at which Mr. Troy aimed may be doubtful. But, as he ceased speaking, a powerful auxiliary appeared in the shape of the beer. Lady Lydiard seized on the jug, and filled the tumbler for herself with an unsteady hand. Miss Pink, trembling for the integrity of her carpet, and scandalised at seeing a peeress drinking beer like a washerwoman, forgot the sharp answer that was just rising to her lips when the lawyer interfered. "Small!" said Lady Lydiard, setting down the empty tumbler, and referring to the quality of the beer. "But very pleasant and refreshing. What's the servant's name? Susan? Well, Susan, I was dying of thirst; and you have saved my life. You can leave the jug—I dare say I shall empty it before I go."

Mr. Troy, watching Miss Pink's face, saw that it was time to change the subject again.

"Did you notice the old village, Lady Lydiard, on your way here?" he asked. "The artists consider it one of the most picturesque places in England."

"I noticed that it was a very dirty village," Lady Lydiard answered, still bent on making herself disagreeable to Miss Pink. "The artists may say what they please; I see nothing to admire in rotten cottages, and bad drainage, and ignorant people. I suppose the neighbourhood has its advantages. It looks dull enough, to my mind."

Isabel had hitherto modestly restricted her exertions to keeping Tommie quiet on her lap. Like Mr. Troy, she occasionally looked at her aunt—and she now made a timid attempt to defend the neighbourhood, as a duty that she owed to Miss Pink.

"Oh, my Lady! don't say it's a dull neighbourhood," she pleaded. "There are such pretty walks all round us. And, when you get to the hills, the view is beautiful."

Lady Lydiard's answer to this was a little masterpiece of good-humoured contempt. She patted Isabel's cheek, and said, "Pooh! pooh!"

"Your Ladyship does not admire the beauties of Nature," Miss Pink remarked, with a compassionate smile. "As we get older, no doubt our sight begins to fail!"

"And we leave off canting about the beauties of Nature," added Lady Lydiard. "I hate the country. Give me London, and the pleasures of society."

"Come! come! Do the country justice, Lady Lydiard!" put in peace-making Mr. Troy. "There is plenty of society to be found out of London—as good society as the world can show."

"The sort of society," added Miss Pink, "which is to be found, for example, in this neighbourhood. Her Ladyship is evidently not aware that persons of distinction surround us, whichever way we turn. I may instance, among others, the Honourable Mr. Hardyman."

Lady Lydiard, in the act of pouring out a second glassful of beer, suddenly set down the jug.

"Who is that you're talking of, Miss Pink?"

"I am talking of our neighbour, Lady Lydiard—the Honourable Mr. Hardyman."

"Do you mean Alfred Hardyman—the man who breeds the horses?"

"The distinguished gentleman who owns the famous stud-farm," said Miss Pink, correcting the bluntly-direct form in which Lady Lydiard had put her question.

"Is he in the habit of visiting here?" the old lady inquired, with a sudden appearance of anxiety. "Do you know him?"

"I had the honour of being introduced to Mr. Hardyman at our last flower show," Miss Pink replied. "He has not yet favoured me with a visit."

Lady Lydiard's anxiety appeared to be to some extent relieved.

"I knew that Hardyman's farm was in this county," she said; "but I had no notion that it was in the neighbourhood of South Morden. How far away is he—ten or a dozen miles, eh?"

"Not more than three miles," answered Miss Pink. "We consider him quite a near neighbour of ours."

Renewed anxiety showed itself in Lady Lydiard. She looked round sharply at Isabel. The girl's head was bent so low over the rough head of the dog that her face was almost entirely concealed from view. So far as appearances went, she seemed to be entirely absorbed in fondling Tommie. Lady Lydiard roused her with a tap of the green fan.

"Take Tommie out, Isabel, for a run in the garden," she said. "He won't sit still much longer—and he may annoy Miss Pink. Mr. Troy, will you kindly help Isabel to keep my ill-trained dog in order?"

Mr. Troy got on his feet, and, not very willingly, followed Isabel out of the room. "They will quarrel now, to a dead certainty!" he thought to himself, as he closed the door. "Have you any idea of what this means?" he said to his companion, as he joined her in the hall. "What has Mr. Hardyman done to excite all this interest in him?"

Isabel's guilty colour rose. She knew perfectly well that Hardyman's unconfessed admiration of her was the guiding motive of Lady Lydiard's inquiries. If she had told the truth, Mr. Troy would have unquestionably returned to the drawing-room, with or without an acceptable excuse for intruding himself. But Isabel was a woman; and her answer, it is needless to say, was, "I don't know, I'm sure."

In the mean time, the interview between the two ladies began in a manner which would have astonished Mr. Troy—they were both silent. For once in her life Lady Lydiard was considering what she should say, before she said it. Miss Pink, on her side, naturally waited to hear what object her Ladyship had in view—waited, until her small reserve of patience gave way. Urged by irresistible curiosity, she spoke first.

"Have you anything to say to me in private?" she asked.

Lady Lydiard had not got to the end of her reflections. She said, "Yes!"—and she said no more.

"Is it anything relating to my niece?" persisted Miss Pink.

Still immersed in her reflections, Lady Lydiard suddenly rose to the surface, and spoke her mind, as usual.

"About your niece, Ma'am. The other day Mr. Hardyman called at my house, and saw Isabel."

"Yes," said Miss Pink, politely attentive, but not in the least interested, so far.

"That's not all, Ma'am. Mr. Hardyman admires Isabel; he owned it to me himself in so many words."

Miss Pink listened, with a courteous inclination of her head. She looked mildly gratified, nothing more. Lady Lydiard proceeded—

"You and I think differently on many matters," she said. "But we are both agreed, I am sure, in feeling the sincerest interest in Isabel's welfare. I beg to suggest to you, Miss Pink, that Mr. Hardyman, as a near neighbour of yours, is a very undesirable neighbour while Isabel remains in your house."

Saying those words, under a strong conviction of the serious importance of the subject, Lady Lydiard insensibly recovered the manner and resumed the language which befitted a lady of her rank. Miss Pink, noticing the change, set it down to an expression of pride on the part of her visitor which, in referring to Isabel, assailed indirectly the social position of Isabel's aunt.

"I fail entirely to understand what your Ladyship means," she said, coldly.

Lady Lydiard, on her side, looked in undisguised amazement at Miss Pink.

"Haven't I told you already that Mr. Hardyman admires your niece?" she asked.

"Naturally," said Miss Pink. "Isabel inherits her lamented mother's personal advantages. If Mr. Hardyman admires her, Mr. Hardyman shows his good taste."

Lady Lydiard's eyes opened wider and wider in wonder. "My good lady!" she exclaimed, "is it possible you don't know that when a man admires a woman he doesn't stop there? He falls in love with her (as the saying is) next."

"So I have heard," said Miss Pink.

"So you have heard?" repeated Lady Lydiard. "If Mr. Hardyman finds his way to Isabel I can tell you what you will see. Catch the two together Ma'am—and you will see Mr. Hardyman making love to your niece."

"Under due restrictions, Lady Lydiard, and with my permission first obtained, of course, I see no objection to Mr. Hardyman paying his addresses to Isabel."

"The woman is mad!" cried Lady Lydiard. "Do you actually suppose, Miss Pink, that Alfred Hardyman could, by any earthly possibility, marry your niece?"

"Not even Miss Pink's politeness could submit to such a question as this. She rose indignantly from her chair. "Are you aware, Lady Lydiard, that the doubt you have just expressed is an insult to my niece, and an insult to me?"

"Are you aware of who Mr. Hardyman really is?" retorted her Ladyship. "Or do you judge of his position by the vocation in life which he has perversely chosen to adopt? I can tell you, if you do, that Alfred Hardyman is the younger son of one of the oldest Barons in the English Peerage, and that his mother is related by marriage to the Royal family of Wurtemberg."

Miss Pink received the full shock of this information without receding from her position by a hair's breadth.

"An English gentleman offers a fit alliance to any man living who seeks her hand in marriage," said Miss Pink. "Isabel's mother (you may not be aware of it) was the daughter of an English clergyman."

"And Isabel's father was a chemist in a country town," added Lady Lydiard.

"Isabel's father," rejoined Miss Pink, "was attached in a most responsible capacity to the useful and honourable profession of Medicine. Isabel is, in the strictest sense of the word, a young gentleman. If you contradict that for a single instant, Lady Lydiard, you will oblige me to leave the room."

Those last words produced a result which Miss Pink had not anticipated—they roused Lady Lydiard to assert herself. As usual in such cases, she rose superior to her own eccentricity. Confronting Miss Pink, she now spoke and looked with the gracious courtesy and the unassuming self-confidence of the order to which she belonged.

"For Isabel's own sake, and for the quieting of my conscience," she answered, "I will say one word more, Miss Pink, before I relieve you of my presence. Considering my age and my opportunities, I may claim to know quite as much as you do of the laws and customs which regulate society in our time. Without contesting your niece's social position—and without the slightest intention of insulting you—I repeat that the rank which Mr. Hardyman inherits makes it simply impossible for him even to think of marrying Isabel. You will do well not to give him any opportunities of meeting with her alone. And you will do better still (seeing that he is so near a neighbour of yours) if you permit Isabel to return to my protection, for a time at least. I will wait to hear from you when you have thought the matter over at your leisure. In the meantime, if I have inadvertently offended you, I ask your pardon—and I wish you good evening."

She bowed, and walked to the door. Miss Pink, as resolute as ever in maintaining her pretensions, made an effort to match the great lady on her own ground.

"Before you go, Lady Lydiard, I beg to apologise if I have spoken too warmly on my side," she said. "Permit me to send for your carriage."

"Thank you, Miss Pink. My carriage is only at the village inn. I shall enjoy a little walk in the cool evening air. Mr. Troy, I have

TESTIMONIALS.

CH. GOUNOD.

"Allow me, in thanking you for the organ which you have placed at my disposal for my series of concerts, to express my very favourable opinion on the charm of this instrument, the tones of which, both delicate and full, combine so well with the voice. "CH. GOUNOD."

SIR JULIUS BENEDICT.

"I entertain the highest opinion of the MASON AND HAMLIN CABINET ORGANS. The tone is mellow and free from reediness, the touch excellent; and altogether I believe these instruments are destined to be very popular in this country. "JULIUS BENEDICT."

DR. STAINER.

"I have been very much pleased with your Organs on all occasions on which I have had to play upon them. Their tone is remarkably pure and free from reediness, and their touch all that could be desired. "J. STAINER, Mus. Doc."

EDWARD J. HOPKINS.

"I have just tried and examined several of MASON AND HAMLIN'S ORGANS, at Messrs. METZLER and Co.'s, and I find the tone to be unusually mellow, sweet, and equal. The touch of the instruments is also light, elastic, and free from lumpiness. "E. J. HOPKINS."

These Instruments are thoroughly well made, of seasoned material, and do not get out of order.

no doubt, will give me his arm." She bowed once more, and quietly left the room.

Reaching the little back garden of the villa, through an open door at the further end of the hall, Lady Lydiard found Tommie rolling luxuriously on Miss Pink's flower-beds, and Isabel and Mr. Troy in close consultation on the gravel-walk. She spoke to the lawyer first.

"They are baiting the horses at the inn," she said. "I want your arm, Mr. Troy, as far as the village—and, in return, I will take you back to London with me. I have to ask your advice about one or two little matters, and this is a good opportunity."

"With the greatest pleasure, Lady Lydiard. I suppose I must say good-by to Miss Pink?"

"A word of advice to you, Mr. Troy. Take care how you ruffle Miss Pink's sense of her own importance. Another word for your private ear. Miss Pink is a fool?"

On the lawyer's withdrawal, Lady Lydiard put her arm fondly round Isabel's waist. "What were you and Mr. Troy so busy in talking about?" she asked.

"We were talking, my Lady, about tracing the persons who stole the money," Isabel answered, rather sadly. "It seems a far more difficult matter than I supposed it to be. I try not to lose patience and hope—but it is a little hard to feel that the appearances are against me, and to wait day after day in vain for the discovery that is to set me right."

"You are a dear good child," said Lady Lydiard; "and you are more precious to me than ever. Don't despair, Isabel. With Mr. Troy's means of inquiring, and with my means of paying, the discovery of the thief cannot be much longer delayed. If you don't return to me soon, I shall come back and see you again. Your aunt hates the sight of me—but I don't care two straws for that," remarked her Ladyship, showing the undignified side of her character once more. "Listen to me, Isabel! I have no wish to lower your aunt in your estimation, but I feel far more confidence in your good sense than in hers. Mr. Hardyman's business has taken him to France for the present. It is at least possible that you may meet with him on his return. If you do, keep him at a distance, my dear—politely, of course. There! there! you needn't turn red; I am not blaming you; I am only giving you a little good advice. In your position you cannot possibly be too careful. Here is Mr. Troy! You must come to the gate with us, Isabel, or we shall never get Tommie away from you; I am only his second favourite; you have the first place in his affections. God bless and prosper you, my child—I wish to Heaven you were going back to London with me! Well, Mr. Troy, how have you done with Miss Pink? Have you offended that terrible 'gentlewoman' (hateful word!); or has it been all the other way, and has she given you a kiss at parting?"

Mr. Troy smiled mysteriously, and changed the subject. His brief parting interview with the lady of the house was not of a nature to be rashly related. Miss Pink had not only positively assured him that her visitor was the most ill-bred woman she had ever met with, but had further accused Lady Lydiard of shaking her confidence in the aristocracy of her native country. "For the first time in my life," said Miss Pink, "I feel that something is to be said for the Republican point of view; and I am not indisposed to admit that the constitution of the United States has its advantages!"

CHAPTER XII.

The conference between Lady Lydiard and Mr. Troy, on the way back to London, led to some practical results.

Hearing from her legal adviser that the inquiry after the missing money was for the moment at a standstill, Lady Lydiard made one of those bold suggestions with which she was accustomed to startle her friends in cases of emergency. She had heard favourable reports of the extraordinary ingenuity of the French police; and she now proposed sending to Paris for assistance, after first consulting her nephew, Mr. Felix Sweetser. "Felix knows Paris as well as he knows London," she remarked. "He is an idle man, and it is quite likely that he will relieve us of all trouble by taking the matter into his own hands. In any case, he is sure to know who are the right people to address in our present necessity. What do you say?"

Mr. Troy, in reply, expressed his doubts as to the wisdom of employing foreigners in a delicate investigation which required an accurate knowledge of English customs and English character. Waiving this objection, he approved of the idea of consulting her Ladyship's nephew. "Mr. Sweetser is a man of the world," he said. "In putting the case before him, we are sure to have it presented to us from a new point of view." Acting on this favourable expression of opinion, Lady Lydiard wrote to her nephew. On the day after the visit to Miss Pink, the proposed council of three was held at Lady Lydiard's house.

Felix, never punctual at keeping an appointment, was even later than usual on this occasion. He made his apologies with his hand pressed upon his forehead, and his voice expressive of the languor and discouragement of a suffering man.

"The beastly English climate is telling on my nerves," said Mr. Sweetser—"the horrid weight of the atmosphere, after the exhilarating air of Paris; the intolerable dirt and dulness of London, you know. I was in bed, my dear aunt, when I received your letter. You may imagine the completely demoralised state I was in, when I tell you of the effect which the news of the robbery produced on me. I fell back on my pillow, as if I had been shot. Your Ladyship should really be a little more careful in communicating these disagreeable surprises to a sensitively-organised man. Never mind—my valet is a perfect treasure; he brought me some drops of ether on a lump of sugar. I said, 'Alfred' (his name is Alfred), 'put me into my clothes!' Alfred put me in. I assure you it reminded me of my young days, when I was put into my first pair of trousers. Has Alfred forgotten anything? Have I got my braces on? Have I come out in my shirt-sleeves? Well, dear aunt;—well, Mr. Troy!—what can I say? What can I do?"

Lady Lydiard, entirely without sympathy for nervous suffering, nodded to the lawyer. "You tell him," she said.

"I believe I speak for her Ladyship," Mr. Troy began, "when I say that we should like to hear, in the first place, how the whole case strikes you, Mr. Sweetser?"

"Tell it me all over again," said Felix.

Patient Mr. Troy told it all over again—and waited for the result.

"Well?" said Felix.

"Well?" said Mr. Troy. "Where does the suspicion of robbery rest in your opinion? You look at the theft of the bank-note with a fresh eye."

"You mentioned a clergyman just now," said Felix. "The man, you know, to whom the money was sent. What was his name?"

"The Reverend Samuel Bradstock."

"You want me to name the person whom I suspect?"

"Yes, if you please," said Mr. Troy.

"I suspect the Reverend Samuel Bradstock," said Felix.

"If you have come here to make stupid jokes," interposed Lady Lydiard, "you had better go back to your bed again. We want a serious opinion."

"You have a serious opinion," Felix coolly rejoined. "I never was more in earnest in my life. Your Ladyship is not aware of the first principle to be adopted in cases of suspicion. One proceeds on what I will call the exhaustive system of reasoning. Thus:—Does suspicion point to the honest servants down stairs? No. To your Ladyship's adopted daughter? Appearances are against the poor girl; but you know her better than to trust to appearances. Are you suspicious of Moody? No. Of Hardyman—who was in the house at the time? Ridiculous! But I was in the house at the time, too. Do you suspect me? Just so! That idea is ridiculous, too. Now let us sum up. Servants, adopted daughter, Moody, Hardyman, Sweetser—all beyond suspicion. Who is left? The Reverend Samuel Bradstock."

This ingenious exposition of "the exhaustive system of reasoning," failed to produce any effect on Lady Lydiard. "You are wasting our time," she said, sharply. "You know as well as I do that you are talking nonsense."

"I don't," said Felix. "Taking the gentlemanly professions all round, I know of no men who are so eager to get money, and who have so few scruples about how they get it, as the parsons. Where is there a man in any other profession who perpetually worries you for money?—who holds the bag under your nose for money?—who sends his clerk round from door to door to beg a few shillings of you, and calls it an 'Easter offering'?" The parson does all this. Bradstock is a parson. I put it logically. Bowl me over, if you can!"

Mr. Troy attempted to "bowl him over," nevertheless. Lady Lydiard wisely interposed.

"When a man persists in talking nonsense," she said, "silence is the best answer; anything else only encourages him." She turned to Felix. "I have a question to ask you," she went on. "You will either give me a serious reply, or wish me good morning." With this brief preface, she made her inquiry as to the wisdom and possibility of engaging the services of the French police.

Felix took exactly the view of the matter which had been already expressed by Mr. Troy. "Superior in intelligence," he said, "but not superior in courage, to the English police. Capable of performing wonders on their own ground and among their own people. But, my dear aunt, the two most dissimilar nations on the face of the earth are the English and the French. The French police may speak our language—but they are incapable of understanding our national character and our national manners. Set them to work on a private inquiry in the city of Pekin—and they would get on in time with the Chinese people. Set them to work in the city of London—and the English people would remain, from first to last, the same impenetrable mystery to them. In my belief the London Sunday would be enough of itself to drive them back to Paris in despair. No balls, no concerts, no theatres, not even a museum or a picture-gallery open; every shop shut up but the gin-shop; and nothing moving but the church bells and the men who sell the penny ices. Hundreds of Frenchmen come to see me on their first arrival in England. Every man of them rushes back to Paris on the second Saturday of his visit, rather than confront the horrors of a second Sunday in London! However, you can try it if you like. Send me a written abstract of the case, and I will forward it to one of the official people in the Rue Jerusalem, who will do anything he can to oblige me. Of course," said Felix, turning to Mr. Troy, "some of you have got the number of the lost bank-note? If the thief has tried to pass it in Paris, my man may be of some use to you."

"Three of us have got the number of the note," answered Mr. Troy. "Miss Isabel Miller, Mr. Moody, and myself."

"Very good," said Felix. "Send me the number, with the abstract of the case. Is there anything else I can do towards recovering the money?" he asked, turning to his aunt. "There is one lucky circumstance in connection with this loss—isn't there? It has fallen on a person who is rich enough to take it easy. Good Heavens! suppose it had been my loss!"

"It has fallen doubly on me," said Lady Lydiard; "and I am certainly not rich enough to take that easy. The money was destined to a charitable purpose; and I have felt it my duty to pay it again."

Felix rose and approached his aunt's chair with faltering steps, as became a suffering man. He took Lady Lydiard's hand and kissed it with enthusiastic admiration.

"You excellent creature!" he said. "You may not think it, but you reconcile me to human nature. How generous! how noble! I think I'll go to bed again, Mr. Troy, if you really don't want any more of me. My head feels giddy and my legs tremble under me. It doesn't matter; I shall feel easier when Alfred has taken me out of my clothes again. God bless you, my dear aunt! I never felt so proud of being related to you as I do to-day. Good morning, Mr. Troy! Don't forget the abstract of the case; and don't trouble yourself to see me to the door. I dare say I shan't tumble down stairs; and, if I do, there's the porter in the hall to pick me up again. Envious porter! as fat as butter and as idle as a pig! Au revoir! au revoir!" He kissed his hand, and drifted feebly out of the room. Sweetser, one might say, in a state of eclipse; but still the servicable Sweetser, who was never consulted in vain by the fortunate people privileged to call him friend!

"Is he really ill, do you think?" Mr. Troy asked.

"My nephew has turned fifty," Lady Lydiard answered, "and he persists in living as if he was a young man. Every now and then Nature says to him, 'Felix, you are old!' And Felix goes to bed, and says it's his nerves."

"I suppose he is to be trusted to keep his word about writing to Paris?" pursued the lawyer.

"Oh, yes! He may delay doing it; but he will do it. In spite of his lackadaisical manner, he has moments of energy that would surprise you. Talking of surprises, I have something to tell you about Moody. Within the last day or two there has been a marked change in him—a change for the worse."

"You astonish me, Lady Lydiard! In what way has Moody deteriorated?"

"You shall hear. Yesterday was Friday. You took him out with you, on business, early in the morning."

Mr. Troy bowed, and said nothing. He had not thought it desirable to mention the interview at which old Sharon had cheated him of his guinea.

"In the course of the afternoon," pursued Lady Lydiard, "I happened to want him, and I was informed that Moody had gone out again. Where had he gone? Nobody knew. Had he left word when he would be back? He had left no message of any sort. Of course, he is not in the position of an ordinary servant. I don't expect him to ask permission to go out. But I do expect him to leave word down stairs of the time at which he is likely to return. When he did come back, after an absence of some hours, I naturally asked for an explanation. Would you believe it? he simply informed me that he had been away on business of his own; expressed no regret, and offered no explanation—in short, spoke as if he was an independent gentleman. You may not think it, but I kept my temper. I merely remarked that I hoped it would not happen again. He made me a bow, and he said, 'My business is not completed yet, my Lady. I cannot guarantee that it may not call me away again at a moment's notice.' What do you think of that? Nine people out of ten would have given him warning to leave their service. I begin to think I am a wonderful woman—I only pointed to the door. One does hear sometimes of men's brains softening in the most unexpected manner. I have my suspicions of Moody's brains, I can tell you."

Mr. Troy's suspicions took a different direction: they pointed along the line of streets which led to old Sharon's lodgings. Discreetly silent as to the turn which his thoughts had taken, he merely expressed himself as feeling too much surprised to offer any opinion at all.

"Wait a little," said Lady Lydiard, "I haven't done surprising you yet. You have seen a boy here in a page's livery, I think? Well, he is a good boy; and he has gone home for a week's holiday with his friends. The proper person to supply his place with the boots and shoes and other small employments, is of course the youngest footman, a lad of only a few years older than himself. What do you think Moody does? Engages a stranger, with the house full of idle men-servants already, to fill the page's place. At intervals this morning I heard them wonderfully merry in the servants' hall—so merry that the noise and laughter found its way up stairs to the breakfast-room. I like my servants to be in good spirits; but it certainly did strike me that they were getting beyond reasonable limits. I questioned my maid, and was informed that the noise was all due to the jokes of the strangest old man that ever was seen. In other words, to the person whom my steward had taken it on himself to engage in the page's absence. I spoke to Moody on the subject. He answered in an odd, confused way, that he had exercised his discretion to the best of his judgment, and that (if I wished it), he would tell the old man to keep his good spirits under better control. I asked him how he came to hear of the man. He only answered, 'By accident, my Lady'—and not one word more could I get out of him, good or bad. Moody engages the servants, as you know; but on every other occasion he has invariably consulted me before an engagement was settled. I really don't feel at all sure about this person who has been so strangely introduced into the house—he may be a drunkard or a thief. I wish you would speak to Moody yourself, Mr. Troy. Do you mind ringing the bell?"

Mr. Troy rose, as a matter of course, and rang the bell.

He was by this time, it is needless to say, convinced that Moody had not only gone back to consult old Sharon on his own responsibility, but, worse still, had taken the unwarrantable liberty of introducing him, as a spy, into the house. To communicate this explanation to Lady Lydiard would, in her present humour, be simply to produce the dismissal of the steward from her service. The only other alternative was to ask leave to interrogate Moody privately, and, after duly reproving him, to insist on the departure of old Sharon as the one condition on which Mr. Troy would consent to keep Lady Lydiard in ignorance of the truth.

"I think I shall manage better with Moody, if your Ladyship will permit me to see him in private," the lawyer said. "Shall I go down stairs and speak to him in his own room?"

"Why should you trouble yourself to do that?" said her Ladyship. "See him here; and I will go into the boudoir."

As she made that reply the footman appeared at the drawing-room door.

"Send Moody here," said Lady Lydiard.

The footman's answer, delivered at that moment, assumed an importance which was not expressed in the footman's words. "My Lady," he said, "Mr. Moody has gone out."

CHAPTER XIII.

While the strange proceedings of the steward were the subject of conversation between Lady Lydiard and Mr. Troy, Moody was alone in his room, occupied in writing to Isabel. Being unwilling that any eyes but his own should see the address, he had himself posted his letter; the time that he had chosen for leaving the house proving, unfortunately, to be also the time proposed by her Ladyship for his interview with the lawyer. In ten minutes after the footman had reported his absence, Moody returned. It was then too late to present himself in the drawing-room. In the interval, Mr. Troy had taken his leave, and Moody's position had dropped a degree lower in Lady Lydiard's estimation.

Isabel received her letter by the next morning's post. If any justification of Mr. Troy's suspicions had been needed, the terms in which Moody wrote would have amply supplied it.

"Dear Isabel (I hope I may call you 'Isabel' without offending you, in your present trouble?)—I have a proposal to make, which, whether you accept it or not, I beg you will keep a secret from every living creature but ourselves. You will understand my request, when I add that these lines relate to the matter of tracing the stolen bank-note."

"I have been privately in communication with a person in London, who is, as I believe, the one person competent to help us in gaining our end. He has already made many inquiries in private. With some of them I am acquainted; the rest he has thus far kept to himself. The person to whom I allude particularly wishes to have half an hour's private conversation with you—in my presence. I am bound to warn you that he is a very strange and very ugly old man; and I can only hope that you will look over his personal appearance in consideration of what he is likely to do for you."

"Can you conveniently meet us at the further end of the row of villas in which your aunt lives the day after to-morrow, at four o'clock? Let me have one line to say, if you will keep the appointment, and if the hour named will suit you. And believe me your devoted friend and servant,"

"ROBERT MOODY."

The lawyer's warning to her to be careful how she yielded too readily to any proposal of Moody's recurred to Isabel's mind while she read those lines. Being pledged to secrecy, she could not consult Mr. Troy—she was left to decide for herself.

No obstacle stood in the way of her free choice of alternatives. After their early dinner at three o'clock, Miss Pink habitually retired to her own room "to meditate," as she expressed it. Her "meditations" invariably ended in a sound sleep of some hours; and during that interval Isabel was at liberty to do as she pleased. After considerable hesitation, her implicit belief in Moody's truth and devotion, assisted by a strong feeling of curiosity to see the companion with whom the steward had associated himself, decided Isabel on consenting to keep the appointment.

Taking up her position beyond the houses, on the day and at the hour mentioned by Moody, she believed herself to be fully prepared for the most unfavourable impression which the most disagreeable of all possible strangers could produce.

But the first appearance of old Sharon—as dirty as ever, clothed in a long, frowsy, grey overcoat, with his pug-dog at his heels, and his smoke-blackened pipe in his mouth; with a tall white hat on his head, which looked as if it had been picked up in a gutter, a hideous leer in his eyes, and a jaunty trip in his walk—took her so completely by surprise that she could only return Moody's friendly greeting by silently pressing his hand. As for Moody's companion, to look at him for a second time was more than she had resolution to do. She kept her eyes fixed on the pug-dog, and with good reason: as far as appearances went, he was indisputably the nobler animal of the two.

Under the circumstances, the interview threatened to begin in a very embarrassing manner. Moody, disheartened by Isabel's silence, made no attempt to set the conversation going; he looked as if he meditated a hasty retreat to the railway station which he had just left. Fortunately, he had at his side the right man (for once) in the right place. Old Sharon's effrontery was equal to any emergency.

"I am not a nice-looking old man, my dear, am I?" he said, leering at Isabel with cunning, half-closed eyes. "Bless your heart! you'll soon get used to me! You see, I am the sort of colour, as they say at the linen-draper's, that doesn't wash well. It's all through love; upon my life it is! Early in this present century I had my young affections blighted; and I've neglected myself ever since. Disappointment takes different forms, Miss, in different men. I don't think I have had heart enough to brush my hair for the last fifty years. She was a magnificent woman, Mr. Moody, and she dropped me like a hot potato. Dreadful! dreadful! Let us pursue this painful subject no further. Ha! here's a pretty country! Here's a nice blue sky! I admire the country, Miss; I see so little of it, you know. Have you any objection to walk along into the fields? The fields, my dear, bring out all the poetry of my nature. Where's the dog? Here, Puggy! Puggy! hunt about, my man, and find some dog-grass. Does his inside good, you know, after a meat diet in London. Lord! how I feel my spirits rising in this fine air! Does my complexion look any brighter, Miss? Will you run a race with me, Mr. Moody, or will you oblige me with a back at leap-frog? I'm not mad, my dear young lady; I'm only merry. I live, you see, in the London stink; and the smell of the hedges and the wild flowers is too much for me at first. It gets into my head, it does. I'm drunk! As I live by bread, I'm drunk on fresh air! Oh! what a jolly day! Oh! how young and innocent I do feel!" Here his innocence got the better of him, and he began to sing, "I wish I was a little fly, in my love's bosom for to lie!" Hullo! here we are on the nice soft grass! and, oh, my gracious! there's a bank running down into a hollow! I can't stand that, you know. Mr. Moody, hold my hat, and take the greatest care of it. Here goes for a roll down the bank!"

He handed his horrible hat to the astonished Moody, laid himself flat on the top of the bank, and deliberately rolled down it, exactly as he might have done when he was a boy. The tails of his long grey coat flew madly in the wind; the dog pursued him, jumping over him, and barking with delight; he shouted and screamed in answer to the dog, as he rolled over and over faster and faster; and, when he got up, on the level ground, and called out cheerfully to his companions standing above him, "I say, you two, I feel twenty years younger already!"—human gravity could hold out no longer. The sad and silent Moody smiled, and Isabel burst into fits of laughter.

"There," he said, "didn't I tell you you would get used to me, Miss? There's a deal of life left in the old man yet—isn't there? Shy me down, my hat, Mr. Moody. And now we'll get to business!" He turned round to the dog still barking at his heels. "Business, Puggy!" he called out sharply, and Puggy instantly shut up his mouth, and said no more.

"Well, now," old Sharon resumed, when he had joined his friends and had got his breath again, "let's have a little talk about yourself, Miss. Has Mr. Moody told you who I am, and what I want with you? Very good. May I offer you my arm? No! You like to be independent, don't you? All right—I don't object. I am an amiable old man, I am. About this Lady Lydiard, now? Suppose you tell me how you first got acquainted with her?"

In some surprise at this question, Isabel told her little story. Observing Sharon's face while she was speaking, Moody saw that he was not paying the smallest attention to the narrative. His

"He jumped off her lap and tore round and round the room at the top of his speed; and every time he passed Miss Fink he showed the whole range of his teeth and snarled ferociously at her ankles."

sharp, shameless black eyes watched the girl's face absently; his gross lips curled upwards in a sardonic and self-satisfied smile. He was evidently setting a trap for her some kind. Without a word of warning—while Isabel was in the middle of a sentence—the trap opened, with the opening of old Sharon's lips.

"I say," he burst out. "How came you to seal her Ladyship's letter—eh?"

The question bore no sort of relation, direct or indirect, to what Isabel happened to be saying at the moment. In the sudden surprise of hearing it, she started and fixed her eyes in astonishment on Sharon's face. The old vagabond chuckled to himself. "Did you see that?" he whispered to Moody. "I beg your pardon, Miss," he went on; "I won't interrupt you again. Lord! how interesting it is!—aint it, Mr. Moody? Please to go on, Miss."

But Isabel, though she spoke with perfect sweetness and temper, declined to go on. "I had better tell you, Sir, how I came to seal her Ladyship's letter," she said. "If I may venture on giving my opinion, that part of my story seems to be the only part of it which relates to your business with me to-day."

Without further preface she described the circumstances which had led to her assuming the perilous responsibility of sealing the letter. Old Sharon's wandering attention began to wander again: he was evidently occupied in setting another trap. For the second time he interrupted Isabel in the middle of a sentence. Suddenly stopping short, he pointed to some sheep, at the farther end of the field through which they happened to be passing at the moment.

"There's a pretty sight," he said. "There are the innocent sheep a-feeding—all following each other as usual. And there's the sly dog waiting behind the gate till the sheep want his services. Reminds me of old Sharon and the public!" He chuckled over his discovery of the remarkable similarity between the sheep-dog and himself, and the sheep and the public—and then burst upon Isabel with a second question. "I say! didn't you look at the letter before you sealed it?"

"Certainly not!" Isabel answered.

"Not even at the address?"

"No!"

"Thinking of something else—eh?"

"Very likely," said Isabel.

"Was it your new bonnet, my dear?"

Isabel laughed. "Women are not always thinking of their new bonnets," she answered.

Old Sharon, to all appearance, dropped the subject there. He lifted his lean brown forefinger and pointed again—this time to a house at a short distance from them. "That's a farm-house, surely?" he said. "I'm thirsty, after my roll down the hill. Do you think, Miss, they would give me a drink of milk?"

"I am sure they would," said Isabel. "I know the people. Shall I go and ask them?"

"Thank you, my dear. One word more before you go. About the sealing of that letter? What could you have been thinking of while you were doing it?" He looked hard at her, and took her suddenly by the arm. "Was it your sweetheart?" he asked, in a whisper.

The question instantly reminded Isabel that she had been thinking of Hardyman while she sealed the letter. She blushed as the remembrance crossed her mind. Robert, noticing her embarrassment, spoke sharply to old Sharon. "You have no right to put such a question to a young lady," he said. "Be a little more careful for the future."

"There! there! don't be hard on me," pleaded the old rogue. "An ugly old man like me may make his innocent little joke—eh, Miss? I'm sure you're too sweet-tempered to be angry when I meant no offence. Show me that you bear no malice. Go, like a forgiving young angel, and ask for the milk."

Nobody appealed to Isabel's sweetness of temper in vain. "I will do it with pleasure," she said—and hastened away to the farm-house.

CHAPTER XIV.

The instant Isabel was out of hearing, old Sharon slapped Moody on the shoulder to rouse his attention. "I've got her out of the way," he said, "now listen to me. My business with the young angel is done—I may go back to London."

Moody looked at him in astonishment.

"Lord! how little you know of thieves!" exclaimed old Sharon. "Why, man alive, I have tried her with two plain tests! If you wanted a proof of her innocence, there it was, as plain as the nose in your face. Did you hear me ask her how she came to seal the letter—just when her mind was running on something else?"

"I heard you," said Moody.

"Did you see how she started and stared at me?"

"I did."

"Well, I can tell you this—if she had stolen the money she would neither have started nor stared. She would have had her answer ready beforehand in her own mind, in case of accidents. There's only one thing in my experience that you can never do with a thief, when the thief happens to be a woman—you can never take her by surprise. Put that remark by in your mind: one day you may find a use for remembering it. Did you see her blush, and look quite hurt in her feelings, pretty dear, when I asked about her sweetheart? Do you think a thief, in her place, would have shown such a face as that? Not she! The thief would have been relieved. The thief would have said to herself, 'All right! the more the old fool talks about sweethearts the further he is from tracing the robbery to me!' Yes! yes! the ground's cleared now, Master Moody. I've reckoned up the servants; I've questioned Miss Isabel; I've made my inquiries in all the other quarters that may be useful to us—and what's the result? The advice I gave, when you and the lawyer first came to me—I hate that fellow!—remains as sound and good advice as ever. I have got the thief in my mind," said old Sharon, closing his cunning eyes and then opening them again, "as plain as I've got you in my eye at this minute. No more of that now," he went on, looking round sharply at the path that led to the farm-house. "I've something particular to say to you—and there's barely time to say it before that nice girl comes back. Look here! Do you happen to be acquainted with Mr.—Honourable—Hardyman's valet?"

Moody's eyes rested on old Sharon with a searching and doubtful look.

"Mr. Hardyman's valet?" he repeated. "I wasn't prepared to hear Mr. Hardyman's name."

Old Sharon looked at Moody, in his turn, with a flash of sardonic triumph.

"Oho!" he said. "Has my good boy learnt his lesson? Do you see the thief through my spectacles, already?"

"I began to see him," Moody answered, "when you gave us the guinea opinion at your lodgings."

"Will you whisper his name?" asked Old Sharon.

"Not yet. I distrust my own judgment. I'll wait till time proves that you are right."

Old Sharon knitted his shaggy brows and shook his head. "If you had only a little more dash and go in you," he said, "you would be a clever fellow. As it is—!" He finished the sentence by snapping his fingers with a grin of contempt. Let's get to business. Are you going back by the next train along with me? or are you going to stop with the young lady?"

"I will follow you by a later train," Moody answered.

"Then I must give you your instructions at once," Sharon continued. "You get better acquainted with Hardyman's valet. Lend him money, if he wants it—stick at nothing to make a bosom friend of him. I can't do that part of it; my appearance would be against me. You are the man—you are respectable from the top of your hat to the tips of your boots; nobody would suspect you. Don't make objections! Can you fix the valet? Or can't you?"

"I can try," said Moody. "And what then?"

Old Sharon put his gross lips disagreeably close to Moody's ear. "Your friend the valet can tell you who his master's bankers are," he said; "and he can supply you with a specimen of his master's handwriting."

Moody drew back, as suddenly as if his vagabond companion had put a knife at his throat. "You old villain!" he said. "Are you tempting me to forgery?"

"You infernal fool!" retorted old Sharon. "If you hold that long tongue of yours, and hear what I have to say? You go to Hardyman's bankers, with a note in Hardyman's handwriting (exactly imitated by me) to this effect:—'Mr. H. presents his compliments to Messrs. So-and-So, and is not quite certain whether a payment of five hundred pounds has been made within the last week to his account. He will be much obliged if Messrs. So-and-So will inform him by a line in reply, whether there is such an entry to his credit in their books, and by whom the payment has been made. You wait for the bankers' answer, and bring it to me. It's just possible that the name you're afraid to whisper may appear in the letter. If it does, we've caught our man. Is that forgery, Mr. Muddlehead Moody? I'll tell you what—if I had lived to be your age, and knew no more of the world than you do, I'd go and hang myself. Steady! here's our charming friend with the milk. Remember your instructions, and don't lose heart if my notion of the payment to the bankers comes to nothing. I know what to do next, in that case—and, what's more, I'll take all the risk and trouble on my own shoulders. Oh, Lord! I'm afraid I shall be obliged to drink the milk, now it's come!'"

With this apprehension in his mind, he advanced to relieve Isabel of the jug that she carried.

"Here's a treat!" he burst out, with an affectation of joy, which was completely belied by the expression of his dirty face. "Here's a kind and dear young lady, to help an old man to a drink with her own pretty hands." He paused, and looked at the milk very much as he might have looked at a dose of physic. "Will anyone take a drink first?" he asked, offering the jug piteously to Isabel and Moody. "You see, I'm not used to genuine milk; I'm used to chalk and water. I don't know what effect the unadulterated cow might have on my poor old inside." He tasted the milk with the greatest caution. "Upon my soul, this is too rich for me! The unadulterated cow is a deal too strong to be drunk alone. If you'll allow me, I'll qualify it with a drop of gin. Here, Puggy, Puggy!" He set the milk down before the dog; and, taking a flask out of his pocket, emptied it at a draught. "That's something like!" he said, smacking his lips with an air of infinite relief. "So sorry, Miss, to have given you all your trouble for nothing; it's my ignorance that's to blame, not me. I couldn't know I was unworthy of genuine milk till I tried—could I? And do you know," he proceeded, with his eye directed slyly on the way back to the station, "I begin to think I'm not worthy of the fresh air, either. A kind of a longing seems to come over me for the London stink. I'm home-sick already for the soot of my happy childhood and my own dear native mud. The air here is too thin for me, and the sky's too clean; and—oh, Lord!—when you're used to the roar of the traffic—the busses and the cabs and what not—the silence in these parts is downright awful. I'll wish you good evening, Miss; and get back to London."

Isabel turned to Moody with disappointment plainly expressed in her face and manner.

"Is that all he has to say?" she asked. "You told me he could help us. You led me to suppose he could find the guilty person?"

Sharon heard her. "I could name the guilty person," he answered, "as easily, Miss, as I could name you."

"Why don't you do it, then?" Isabel inquired, not very patiently.

Because the time's not ripe for it yet, Miss—that's one reason. Because, if I mentioned the thief's name, as things are now, you, Miss Isabel, would think me mad; and you would tell Mr. Moody I had cheated him out of his money—that's another reason. The matter's in train, if you will only wait a little longer."

"So you say," Isabel rejoined. "If you really could name the thief, I believe you would do it now."

She turned away with a frown on her pretty face. Old Sharon followed her. Even his coarse sensibilities appeared to feel the irresistible ascendancy of beauty and youth.

"I say!" he began, "we must part friends, you know—or I shall break my heart over it. They have got milk at the farm-house. Do you think they have got pen, ink, and paper too?"

Isabel answered, without turning to look at him, "Of course they have!"

"And a bit of sealing-wax?"

"I dare say!"

Old Sharon laid his dirty claws on her shoulder and forced her to face him as the best means of shaking them off.

"Come along!" he said. "I am going to pacify you with some information in writing."

"Why should you write it?" Isabel asked suspiciously.

"Because I mean to make my own conditions, my dear, before I let you into the secret."

In ten minutes more they were all three in the farm-house parlour. Nobody but the farmer's wife was at home. The good woman trembled from head to foot at the sight of old Sharon. In all her harmless life she had never yet seen humanity under the aspect in which it was now presented to her. "Mercy preserve us, Miss!" she whispered to Isabel, "how come you to be in such company as that?" Instructed by Isabel, she produced the necessary materials for writing and sealing—and, that done, she shrank away to the door. "Please to excuse me, Miss," she said, with a last horrified look at her venerable visitor; "I really can't stand the sight of such a blot of dirt as that in my nice clean parlour." With these words she disappeared, and was seen no more.

Perfectly indifferent to his reception, old Sharon wrote; inclosed what he had written in an envelope; and sealed it (in the absence of anything better fitted for his purpose) with the mouth-piece of his pipe.

"Now, Miss," he said, "you give me your word of honour"—he stopped and looked round at Moody with a grin—"and you give me yours, that you won't either of you break the seal on this envelope till the expiration of one week from the present day. There are the conditions, Miss Isabel, on which I'll give you your information. If you stop to dispute with me, the candle's alight, and I'll burn the letter!"

It was useless to contend with him. Isabel and Moody gave him the promise that he required. He handed the sealed envelope to Isabel with a low bow. "When the week's out," he said, "you will own I'm a cleverer fellow than you think me now. Wish you good evening, Miss. Come, along, Puggy! Farewell to the horrid clean country, and back again to the nice London stink!"

He nodded to Moody—he leered at Isabel—he chuckled to himself—he left the farm-house.

CHAPTER XV.

Isabel looked down at the letter in her hand—considered it in silence—and turned to Moody. "I feel tempted to open it already," she said.

"After giving your promise?" Moody gently remonstrated.

Isabel met that objection with a woman's logic.

"Does a promise matter?" she asked, when one gives it to a dirty, disreputable, presuming old wretch like Mr. Sharon? It's a wonder to me that you trust such a creature. I wouldn't!"

"I doubted him just as you do," Moody answered, "when I first saw him in company with Mr. Troy. But there was something in the advice he gave us at that first consultation which altered my opinion of him for the better. I dislike his appearance and his manners as much as you do—I may even say I felt ashamed of bringing such a person to see you. And yet I can't think that I have acted unwisely in employing Mr. Sharon."

Isabel listened absently. She had something more to say, and she was considering how she should say it. "May I ask you a bold question?" she began.

"Any question you like."

"Have you —" she hesitated and looked embarrassed. "Have you paid Mr. Sharon much money?" she resumed, suddenly rallying her courage. Instead of answering, Moody suggested that it was time to think of returning to Miss Pink's villa. "Your aunt may be getting anxious about you," he said.

Isabel led the way out of the farm-house in silence. She reverted to Mr. Sharon and the money, however, as they returned by the path across the fields.

"I am sure you will not be offended with me," she said gently, "if I own that I am uneasy about the expenses. I am allowing you to use your purse as if it was mine—and I have hardly any savings of my own."

Moody entreated her not to speak of it. "How can I put my money to a better use than in serving your interests?" he asked.

"My one object in life is to relieve you of your present anxieties. I shall be the happiest man living if you only owe a moment's happiness to my exertions!"

Isabel took his hand, and looked at him with grateful tears in her eyes.

"How good you are to me, Mr. Moody!" she said. "I wish I could tell you how deeply I feel your kindness."

"You can do it easily," he answered, with a smile. "Call me 'Robert'—don't call me 'Mr. Moody.'"

She took his arm with a sudden familiarity that charmed him. "If you had been my brother I should have called you 'Robert,'" she said; "and no brother could have been more devoted to me than you are."

He looked eagerly at her bright face turned up to his. "May I never hope to be something nearer and dearer to you than a brother?" he asked timidly.

She hung her head, and said nothing. Moody's memory recalled Sharon's coarse reference to her "sweetheart." She had blushed when he put the question. What had she done when Moody put his question? Her face answered for her—she had turned pale; she was looking more serious than usual. Ignorant as he was of the ways of women, his instinct told him that this was a bad sign. Surely her rising colour would have confessed it, if time and gratitude together were teaching her to love him? He sighed at the inevitable conclusion forced itself on his mind.

"I hope I have not offended you?" he said, sadly.

"Oh, no."

"I wish I had not spoken. Pray don't think that I am serving you with any selfish motive."

"I don't think that, Robert. I never could think it of you."

He was not quite satisfied yet. "Even if you were to marry some other man," he went on, earnestly, "it would make no difference in what I am trying to do for you. No matter what I might suffer, I should still go on—for your sake."

"Why do you talk so?" she burst out, passionately. "No other man has such a claim as yours to my gratitude and regard. How can you let such thoughts come to you? I have done nothing in secret. I have no friends who are not known to you. Be satisfied with that, Robert—and let us drop the subject."

"Never to take it up again?" he asked, with the infatuated pertinacity of a man clinging to his last hope.

At other times and under other circumstances Isabel might have answered him sharply. She spoke with perfect gentleness now.

"Not for the present," she said. "I don't know my own heart. Give me time."

His gratitude caught at those words, as the drowning man is said to catch at the proverbial straw. He lifted her hand, and suddenly and fondly pressed his lips on it. She showed no confusion. Was she sorry for him, poor wretch!—and was that all?

They walked on, arm-in-arm, in silence.

Crossing the last field, they entered again on the high road leading to the row of villas in which Miss Pink lived. The minds of both were preoccupied. Neither of them noticed a gentleman approaching on horseback, followed by a mounted groom. He was advancing slowly, at the walking-pace of his horse, and he only observed the two foot-passengers when he was close to them.

"Miss Isabel!"

She started, looked up, and discovered—Alfred Hardyman.

He was dressed in a perfectly-made travelling suit of light brown, with a peaked felt hat of a darker shade of the same colour, which, in a picturesque sense, greatly improved his personal appearance. His pleasure at discovering Isabel gave the animation to his features which they wanted on ordinary occasions. He sat his horse, a superb hunter, easily and gracefully. His light amber-coloured gloves fitted him perfectly. His obedient servant, on another magnificent horse, waited behind him. He looked the impersonation of rank and breeding—of wealth and prosperity. What a contrast, in a woman's eyes, to the shy, pale, melancholy man, in the ill-fitting black clothes, with the wandering uneasy glances, who stood beneath him, and felt, and showed that he felt, his inferior position keenly! In spite of herself, the treacherous blush flew over Isabel's face, in Moody's presence, and with Moody's eyes distrustfully watching her.

"This is a piece of good fortune that I hardly hoped for," said Hardyman, his cool, quiet, dreary way of speaking quickened, as usual, in Isabel's presence. "I only got back from France this morning, and I called on Lady Lydiard in the hope of seeing you. She was not at home—and you were in the country—and the servants didn't know the address. I could get nothing out of them, except that you were on a visit to a relation." He looked at Moody while he was speaking. Haven't I seen you before?" he said, carelessly. "Yes; at Lady Lydiard's. You're her steward, are you not? How d'ye do?" Moody, with his eyes on the ground, answered silently by a bow. Hardyman, perfectly indifferent whether Lady Lydiard's steward spoke or not, turned on his saddle and looked admiringly at Isabel. "I begin to think my luck has turned at last," he went on, with a smile. "I was jogging along to my farm, and despairing of ever seeing Miss Isabel again—and Miss Isabel herself meets me at the roadside! I wonder whether you are as glad to see me as I am to see you? You won't tell me—eh? May I ask you something else? Are you staying in our neighbourhood?"

There was no alternative before Isabel but to answer this last question. Hardyman had met her out walking, and had no doubt drawn the inevitable inference—although he was too polite to say in plain words.

"Yes, Sir," she answered shyly, "I am staying in this neighbourhood."

"And who is your relation?" Hardyman proceeded, in his easy, matter-of-course way. "Lady Lydiard told me, when I had the pleasure of meeting you at her house, that you had an aunt living in the country. I have a good memory, Miss Isabel, for anything that I hear about you! It's your aunt, isn't it? Yes? I know everybody about here. What is your aunt's name?"

Isabel, still resting her hand on Robert's arm, felt it tremble a little as Hardyman made this last inquiry. If she had been speaking to one of her equals she would have known how to dispose of the question without directly answering it. But what could she say to the magnificent gentleman on the stately horse? He had only to send his servant into the village to ask who the young lady from London was staying with, and the answer, in a dozen mouths at least, would direct him to her aunt. She cast one appealing look at Moody and pronounced the distinguished name of Miss Pink.

"Miss Pink?" Hardyman repeated. "Surely I know Miss Pink?" (He had not the faintest remembrance of her.) "Where did I meet her last?" He ran over in his memory the different local festivals at which strangers had been introduced to him.) "Was it at the archery meeting? or at the grammar-school when the prizes were given? No? It must have been at the flower show, then, surely?"

It had been at the flower show. Isabel had heard it from Miss Pink fifty times at least, and was obliged to admit it now.

"I am quite ashamed of never having called," Hardyman proceeded. "The fact is, I have so much to do. I am a bad one at paying visits. Are you on your way home? Let me follow you and make my apologies personally to Miss Pink."

Moody looked at Isabel. It was only a momentary glance, but she perfectly understood it.

"I am afraid, Sir, my aunt cannot have the honour of seeing you to-day," she said.

Hardyman was all complaisance. He smiled, and patted his horse's neck. "To-morrow, then," he said. "My compliments, and I will call in the afternoon. Let me see; Miss Pink lives at —?" He waited, as if he expected Isabel to assist his treacherous memory once more. She hesitated again. Hardyman looked round at his groom. The groom could find out the address, even if he did not happen to know it already. Besides, there was the little row of houses visible at the farther end of the road. Isabel pointed to the villas, as a necessary concession to good manners, before the groom could anticipate her. "My aunt lives there, Sir; at the house called 'The Lawn.'"

"Ah! to be sure!" said Hardyman. "I oughtn't to have wanted reminding; but I have so many things to think of at the farm. And I am afraid I must be getting old—my memory isn't as good as it was. I am so glad to have seen you, Miss Isabel. You and your aunt must come and look at my horses. Do you like horses? Are you fond of riding? I have a quiet roan mare that is used to carrying ladies; she would be just the thing for you. Did I beg you to give my best compliments to your aunt? Yes? How well you are looking! our air here agrees with you. I hope I haven't kept you standing too long? I didn't think of it in the pleasure of meeting you. Good-by, Miss Isabel; good-by, till to-morrow!"

He took off his hat to Isabel, nodded to Moody, and pursued his way to the farm.

Isabel looked at her companion. His eyes were still on the ground. Pale, silent, motionless, he waited by her like a dog, until she gave the signal of walking on again towards the house.

"You are not angry with me for speaking to Mr. Hardyman?" she asked anxiously.

He lifted his head at the sound of her voice. "Angry with you, my dear! Why should I be angry?"

"You seem so changed, Robert, since we met Mr. Hardyman. I couldn't help speaking to him—could I?"

"Certainly not."

They moved on towards the villa. Isabel was still uneasy. There was something in Moody's silent submission to all that she said and all that she did which pained and humiliated her. "You're not jealous?" she said, smiling timidly.

He tried to speak lightly on his side. "I have no time to be jealous while I have your affairs to look after," he answered.

She pressed his arm tenderly. "Never fear, Robert, that new friends will make me forget the best and dearest friend who is now at my side." She paused, and looked up at him with a compassionate fondness that was very pretty to see. "I can keep out of the way to-morrow, when Mr. Hardyman calls," she said. "It is my aunt he is coming to see—not me."

It was generously meant. But, while her mind was only occupied with the present time, Moody's mind was looking into the future. He was learning the hard lesson of self-sacrifice already. "Do what you think right," he said, quietly; "don't think of me."

They reached the gate of the villa. He held out his hand to say good-by.

"Won't you come in?" she asked. "Do come in!"

"Not now, my dear. I must get back to London as soon as I can. There is some more work to be done for you, and the sooner I do it the better."

She heard his excuse without heeding it.

"You are not like yourself, Robert," she said. "Why is it? What are you thinking of?"

He was thinking of the bright blush that overspread her face when Hardyman first spoke to her; he was thinking of the invitation to her to see the stud-farm, and to ride the roan mare; he was thinking of the utterly powerless position in which he stood towards Isabel and towards the highly-born gentleman who admired her. But he kept his doubts and fears to himself. "The train won't wait for me," he said, and held out his hand once more.

She was not only perplexed; she was really distressed. "Don't take leave of me in that cold way!" she pleaded. Her eyes dropped before his, and her lips trembled a little. "Give me a kiss, Robert, at parting." She said those bold words softly and sadly, out of the depth of her pity for him. He started; his face brightened suddenly; his sinking hope rose again. In another moment the change came; in another moment he understood her. As he touched her cheek with his lips, he turned pale again. "Don't quite forget me," he said, in low faltering tones—and left her.

Miss Pink met Isabel in the hall. Refreshed by unbroken repose the ex-schoolmistress was in the happiest frame of mind for the reception of her niece's news.

Informed that Moody had travelled to South Morden to personally report the progress of the inquiries, Miss Pink highly approved of him as a substitute for Mr. Troy. "Mr. Moody, as a banker's son, is a gentleman by birth," she remarked; "he has condescended, in becoming Lady Lydiard's steward. What I saw of him, when he came here with you, prepossessed me in his favour. He has my confidence, Isabel, as well as yours—he is in every respect a superior person to Mr. Troy. Did you meet any friends, my dear, when you were out walking?"

The answer to this question produced a species of transformation in Miss Pink. The rapturous rank-worship of her nation feasted, so to speak, on Hardyman's message. She looked taller and younger than usual—she was all smiles and sweetness. "At last, Isabel, you have seen birth and breeding under their right aspect," she said. "In the society of Lady Lydiard, you cannot possibly have formed correct ideas of the English aristocracy. Observe Mr. Hardyman when he does me the honour to call to-morrow—and you will see the difference."

"Mr. Hardyman is your visitor, aunt—not mine. I was going to ask you to let me remain up stairs in my room."

Miss Pink was unaffectedly shocked. "This is what you learn at Lady Lydiard's!" she observed. "No, Isabel, your absence would be a breach of good manners—I cannot possibly permit it. You will be present to receive our distinguished friend with me. And mind this!" added Miss Pink, in her most impressive manner, "If Mr. Hardyman should by any chance ask why you have left Lady Lydiard, not one word about those disgraceful circumstances which connect you with the loss of the bank-note! I should sink into the earth if the smallest hint of what has really happened should reach Mr. Hardyman's ears. My child, I stand towards you in the place of your lamented mother; I have the right to command your silence on this horrible subject, and I do imperatively command it."

In these words foolish Miss Pink sowed the seed for the harvest of trouble that was soon to come.

CHAPTER XVI.

Paying his court to the ex-schoolmistress on the next day, Hardyman made such excellent use of his opportunities that the visit to the stud-farm took place on the day after. His own carriage was placed at the disposal of Isabel and her aunt; and his own sister was present to confer special distinction on the reception of Miss Pink.

In a country like England, which annually suspends the sitting of its Legislature in honour of a horse-race, it is only natural and proper that the comfort of the horses should be the first object of consideration at a stud-farm. Nine tenths of the land at Hardyman's farm was devoted, in one way or another, to the noble quadruped with the low forehead and the long nose. Poor humanity was satisfied with second-rate and third-rate accommodation. The ornamental grounds, very poorly laid out, were also very limited in extent—and, as for the dwelling-house, it was literally a cottage. A parlour and a kitchen, a smoking-room, a bed-room, and a spare chamber for a friend, all scantily furnished, sufficed for the modest wants of the owner of the property. If you wished to feast your eyes on luxury you went to the stables.

The stud-farm being described, the introduction to Hardyman's sister follows in due course.

The Honourable Lavinia Hardyman was, as all persons in society know, married rather late in life to General Drumblade. It is saying a great deal, but it is not saying too much, to describe Mrs. Drumblade as the most mischievous woman of her age in all England. Scandal was the breath of her life: to place people in false positions, to divulge secrets and destroy characters, to undermine friendships, and aggravate enmities—these were the sources of enjoyment from which this dangerous woman drew the inexhaustible fund of good spirits that made her a brilliant light in the social sphere. She was one of the privileged sinners of modern society. The worst mischief that she could work was ascribed to her "exuberant vitality." She had that ready familiarity of manner which is (in her class) so rarely discovered to be insolence in disguise. Her power of easy self-assertion found people ready to accept her on her own terms wherever she went. She was one of those big, overpowering women, with blunt manners, voluble tongues, and goggle eyes, who carry everything before them. The highest society modestly considered itself in danger of being dull in the absence of Mrs. Drumblade. Even Hardyman himself—who saw as little of her as possible, whose frankly straightforward nature recoiled by instinct from contact with his sister—could think of no fitter person to make Miss Pink's reception agreeable to her, while he was devoting his own attentions to her niece. Mrs. Drumblade accepted the position thus offered with the most amiable readiness. In her own private mind she placed an interpretation on her brother's motives which did him the grossest injustice. She believed that Hardyman's designs on Isabel contemplated the most profligate result. To assist this purpose, while the girl's nearest relative was supposed to be taking care of her, was Mrs. Drumblade's idea of "fun." Her worst enemies admitted that the honourable Lavinia had redeeming qualities, and owned that a keen sense of humour was one of her merits.

Was Miss Pink a likely person to resist the fascinations of Mrs. Drumblade? Alas! for the ex-schoolmistress! before she had been five minutes at the farm, Hardyman's sister had fished for her, caught her, landed her. Poor Miss Pink!

Mrs. Drumblade could assume a grave dignity of manner when the occasion called for it. She was grave, she was dignified, when Hardyman performed the ceremonies of introduction. She would not say she was charmed to meet Miss Pink—the ordinary slang of society was not for Miss Pink's ears—she would say she felt this introduction as a privilege. It was so seldom one met with persons of trained intellect in society. Mrs. Drumblade was already informed of Miss Pink's earlier triumphs in the instruction of youth. Mrs. Drumblade had not been blessed with children herself; but she had nephews and nieces, and she was anxious about their education, especially the nieces. What a sweet, modest girl Miss Isabel was! The fondest wish she could form for her nieces would be that they should resemble Miss Isabel when they grew up. The question was, as to the best method of education. She would own that she had selfish motives in becoming acquainted with Miss Pink. They were at the farm, no doubt, to see Alfred's horses. Mrs. Drumblade did not understand horses; her interest was in the question of education. She might even confess that she had accepted Alfred's invitation in the hope of hearing Miss Pink's views. There would be opportunities, she trusted, for a little instructive conversation on that subject. It was, perhaps, ridiculous to talk, at her age, of feeling as if she was Miss Pink's pupil; and yet it exactly expressed the nature of the aspiration which was then in her mind. In these terms, feeling her way with the utmost nicety, Mrs. Drumblade wound the net of flattery round and round Miss Pink until her hold on that innocent lady was, in every sense of the word, secure. Before half the horses had been passed under review, Hardyman and Isabel were out of sight, and Mrs. Drumblade and Miss Pink were lost in the intricacies of the stables. "Excessively stupid of me! We had better go back, and establish ourselves comfortably in the parlour. When my brother misses us, he and your charming niece will return to look for us in the cottage." Under cover of this arrangement the separation became complete. Miss Pink held forth on education to Mrs. Drumblade in the parlour; while Hardyman and Isabel were on their way to a paddock at the farthest limits of the property.

"I am afraid you are getting a little tired," said Hardyman. "Won't you take my arm?"

Isabel was on her guard; she had not forgotten what Lady Lydiard had said to her. "No, thank you, Mr. Hardyman; I am a better walker than you think."

Hardyman continued the conversation in his blunt, resolute way. "I wonder whether you will believe me," he asked, "if I tell you that this is one of the happiest days of my life."

"I should think you were always happy," Isabel cautiously replied, "having such a pretty place to live in as this."

Hardyman met that answer with one of his quietly-positive denials. "A man is never happy by himself," he said. "He is happy with a companion. For instance, I am happy with you."

Isabel stopped and looked back. Hardyman's language was becoming a little too explicit. "Surely we have lost Mrs. Drumblade and my aunt," she said. "I don't see them anywhere."

"You will see them directly; they are only a long way behind." With this assurance, he returned, in his own obstinate way, to his one object in view. "Miss Isabel, I want to ask you a question. I'm not a ladies' man. I speak my mind plainly to everybody—women included. Do you like being here to-day?"

Isabel's gravity was not proof against this very downright question. "I should be hard to please," she said, laughing, "if I didn't enjoy my visit to the farm."

Hardyman pushed steadily forward through the obstacle of the farm to the question of the farm's master. "You like being here," he repeated. "Do you like me?"

This was serious. Isabel drew back a little, and looked at him. He waited with the most impenetrable gravity for her reply.

"I think you can hardly expect me to answer that question," she said.

"Why not?"

"Our acquaintance has been a very short one, Mr. Hardyman. And, if you are so good as to forget the difference between us, I think I ought to remember it."

"What difference?"

"The difference in rank."

Hardyman suddenly stood still, and emphasised his next words by digging his stick into the grass.

"If anything I have said has vexed you," he began, "tell me so plainly, Miss Isabel, and I'll ask your pardon. But don't throw my rank in my face. I cut adrift from all that nonsense when I took this farm and got my living out of the horses. What has a man's rank to do with a man's feelings?" he went on, with another emphatic dig of his stick. "I am quite serious in asking if you like me—for this good reason, that I like you. Yes, I do. You remember that day when I bled the old lady's dog—well, I have found out since then that there's a sort of incompleteness in my life which I never suspected before. It's you who have put that idea into my head. You didn't mean it, I dare say, but you have done it all the same. I sat alone here yesterday evening smoking my pipe—and I didn't enjoy it. I breakfasted alone this morning—and I didn't enjoy that. I said to myself, 'She's coming to lunch, that's one comfort—I shall enjoy lunch. That's what I feel, roughly described. I don't suppose I've been five minutes together without thinking of you, now in one way and now in another, since the day when I first saw you. When a man comes to my time of life, and has had my experience, he knows what that means. It means, in plain English, that his heart is set on a woman. You're the woman.'"

Isabel had thus far made several attempts to interrupt him, without success. But, when Hardyman's confession attained its culminating point, she insisted on being heard.

"If you will excuse me, Sir," she interposed, gravely, "I think I had better go back to the cottage. My aunt is a stranger here, and she doesn't know where to look for us."

"We don't want your aunt," Hardyman remarked, in his most positive manner.

"We do want her," Isabel rejoined. "I won't venture to say it's wrong in you, Mr. Hardyman, to talk to me as you have just done, but I am quite sure it's very wrong in me to listen."

He looked at her with such unaffected surprise and distress that she stopped, on the point of leaving him, and tried to make herself better understood.

"I had no intention of offending you, Sir," she said, a little confusedly. "I only wanted to remind you that there are some things which a gentleman in your position—." She stopped, tried to finish the sentence, failed, and began another. "If I had been a young lady in your own rank of life," she went on, "I might have thanked you for paying me a compliment, and have given you a serious answer. As it is, I am afraid I must say that you have surprised and disappointed me. I can claim very little for myself, I know. But I did imagine—so long as there was nothing unbecoming in my conduct—that I had some right to your respect."

Listening more and more impatiently, Hardyman took her by the hand, and burst out with another of his abrupt questions.

"What can you possibly be thinking of?" he asked.

She gave him no answer; she only looked at him reproachfully, and tried to release herself.

Hardyman held her hand faster than ever.

"I believe you think me an infernal scoundrel!" he said. "I can stand a good deal, Miss Isabel, but I can't stand that. How have I failed in respect towards you, if you please? I have told you you're the woman my heart is set on. Well? Isn't it plain what I want of you, when I say that? Isabel Miller, I want you to be my wife!"

Isabel's only reply to this extraordinary proposal of marriage was a faint cry of astonishment, followed by a sudden trembling that shook her from head to foot.

Hardyman put his arm round her with a gentleness which his oldest friend would have been surprised to see in him.

"Take your time to think of it," he said, dropping back again into his usual quiet tone. "If you had known me a little better you wouldn't have mistaken me, and you wouldn't be looking at me now as if you were afraid to believe your own ears. What is there so very wonderful in my wanting to marry you? I don't set up for being a saint. When I was a young man I was no better (and no worse) than other young men. I'm getting on now to middle life. I don't want romances and adventures—I want an easy existence with a nice lovable woman who will make me a good wife. You're the woman, I tell you again. I know it by what I've seen of you myself, and by what I have heard of you from Lady Lydiard. She said you were prudent, and sweet-tempered, and affectionate; to which I wish to add that you have just the face and figure that I like, and the modest manners and the blessed absence of all slang in your talk, which I don't find in the young women I meet with in the present day. That's my view of it: I think for myself. What does it matter to me whether you're the daughter of a Duke or the daughter of a Dairyman? It isn't your father I want to marry—it's you. Listen to reason, there's dear! We have only one question to settle before we go back to your aunt. You wouldn't answer me when I asked it a little while since. Will you answer now? Do you like me?"

Isabel looked up at him, timidly.

"In my position, Sir," she asked, "have I any right to like you? What would your relations and friends think, if I said Yes?"

Hardyman gave her waist a little admonitory squeeze with his arm.

"What! You're at it again? A nice way to answer a man, to call him 'Sir,' and to get behind his rank as if it was a place of refuge from him! I hate talking of myself, but you force me to it. Here is my position in the world—I have got an elder brother; he is married, and he has a son to succeed him in the title and the property. You understand, so far? Very well! Years ago I shifted my share of the rank (whatever it may be) on to my brother's shoulders. He's a thorough good fellow, and he has carried my dignity for me, without once dropping it, ever since. As for what people may say, they have said it already, from my father and mother downwards, in the time when I took to the horses and the farm. If they're the wise people I take them for, they won't be at the trouble of saying it all over again. No, no. Twist it how you may, Miss Isabel, whether I'm single or whether I'm married, I'm plain Alfred Hardyman; and everybody who knows me knows that I go on my way, and please myself. I you don't like me, it will be the bitterest disappointment I ever had in my life; but say so honestly, all the same."

Where is the woman in Isabel's place whose capacity for resistance would not have yielded a little to such an appeal as this?

"I should be an insensible wretch," she replied warmly, "if I didn't feel the honour you have done me, and feel it gratefully."

"Does that mean you will have me for a husband?" asked downright Hardyman.

She was fairly driven into a corner; but (being a woman) she tried to slip through his fingers at the last moment.

"Will you forgive me," she said, "if I ask for a little more time? I am so bewildered, I hardly know what to say or to do for the best. You see, Mr. Hardyman, it would be a dreadful thing for me to be the cause of your giving offence to your family. I am obliged to think of that. It would be so distressing for you (I will say nothing of myself) if your friends closed their doors on me. They might say I was a designing girl, who had taken advantage of your good opinion to raise herself in the world. Lady Lydiard warned me long since not to be ambitious about myself and not to forget my station in life, because she treated me like her adopted daughter. Indeed—indeed, I can't tell you how I feel your goodness, and the compliment—the very great compliment, you pay me! My heart is free; and if I followed my own inclinations—." She checked herself, conscious that she was on the brink of saying too much. "Will you give a few days," she pleaded, "to try if I can think composedly of all this? I am only a girl, and I feel quite dazzled by the prospect that you set before me."

Hardyman seized on those words as offering all the encouragement that he desired to his suit.

"Have your own way in this thing and in everything!" he said, with an unaccustomed fervour of language and manner. "I am so glad to hear that your heart is open to me, and that all your inclinations take my part."

Isabel instantly protested against this misrepresentation of what she had really said. "Oh, Mr. Hardyman, you quite mistake me!"

He answered her very much as he had answered Lady Lydiard, when she had tried to make him understand his proper relations towards Isabel.

"No, no; I don't mistake you. I agree to every word you say. How can I expect you to marry me, as you very properly remark, unless I give you a day or two to make up your mind? It's quite enough for me that you like the prospect. If Lady Lydiard treats you as her daughter, why shouldn't you be my wife? It stands to reason that you're quite right to marry a man who can raise you in the world. I like you to be ambitious—though Heaven knows it isn't much I can do for you, except to love you with all my heart. Still, it's a great encouragement to hear that her Ladyship's views agree with mine—"

"They don't agree, Mr. Hardyman!" protested poor Isabel. "You are entirely misrepresenting—"

Hardyman cordially concurred in this view of the matter. "Yes! yes! I can't pretend to represent her Ladyship's language, or yours either; I am obliged to take my words as they come to me. Don't disturb yourself: it's all right—I understand. You have made me the happiest man living. I shall ride over to-morrow to your aunt's house, and hear what you have to say to me? Mind you're at home! Not a day must pass now without my seeing you. I do love you, Isabel—I do indeed!" He stooped, and kissed her heartily. "Only to reward me," he explained, "for giving you time to think."

She drew herself away from him—resolutely, not angrily. Before she could make a third attempt to place the subject in its right light before him, the luncheon bell rang at the cottage—and a servant appeared, evidently sent to look for them.

"Don't forget to-morrow," Hardyman whispered confidentially. "I'll call early—and then go on to London, and get the ring."

CHAPTER XVII.

Events succeeded each other rapidly, after the memorable day to Isabel of the luncheon at the farm.

On the next day (the ninth of the month) Lady Lydiard sent for her steward, and requested him to explain his conduct in repeatedly leaving the house without assigning any reason for his absence. She did not dispute his claims to a freedom of action which would not be permitted to an ordinary servant. Her objection to his present course of proceeding related entirely to the mystery in which it was involved, and to the uncertainty in which the household was left as to the hour of his return. On those grounds, she thought herself entitled to an explanation. Moody's habitual reserve—strengthened, on this occasion, by his dread of ridicule, if his efforts to serve Isabel ended in failure—disinclined him to take Lady Lydiard into his confidence, while his inquiries were still beset with obstacles and doubts. He respectfully entreated her Ladyship to grant him a delay of a few weeks before he entered on his explanation. Lady Lydiard's quick temper resented this request. She told Moody plainly that he was guilty of an act of presumption in making his own conditions with his employer. He received the reproof with exemplary resignation; but he held to his conditions nevertheless. From that moment the result of the interview was no longer in doubt. Moody was directed to send in his accounts. The accounts having been examined, and found to be scrupulously correct, he declined accepting the balance of salary that was offered to him. The next day he left Lady Lydiard's service.

On the tenth of the month her Ladyship received a letter from her nephew.

The health of Felix had not improved. He had made up his mind to go abroad again towards the end of the month. In the meantime, he had written to his friend at Paris, and he had the pleasure of forwarding an answer. The letter inclosed announced that the lost five-hundred-pound note had been made the subject of careful inquiry in Paris. It had not been traced. The French police offered to send to London one of their best men, well acquainted with the English language, if Lady Lydiard was desirous of employing him. He would be perfectly willing to act with an English officer in conducting the investigation, should it be thought necessary. Mr. Troy being consulted as to the expediency of accepting this proposal, objected to the pecuniary terms demanded as being extravagantly high. He suggested waiting a little before any reply was sent to Paris; and he engaged meanwhile to consult a London solicitor who had great experience in cases of theft, and whose advice might enable them to dispense entirely with the services of the French police.

Being now a free man again, Moody was able to follow his own inclinations in regard to the instructions which he had received from old Sharon.

The course that had been recommended to him was repellent to the self-respect and the sense of delicacy which were among the inbred virtues of Moody's character. He shrank from forcing himself as a friend on Hardyman's valet; he recoiled from the idea of tempting the man to steal a specimen of his master's handwriting. After some consideration, he decided on applying to the agent who collected the rents at Hardyman's London chambers. Being an old acquaintance of Moody's, this person would certainly not hesitate to communicate the address of Hardyman's bankers, if he knew it. The experiment, tried under these favouring circumstances, proved perfectly successful. Moody proceeded to Sharon's lodgings the same day, with the address of the bankers in his pocket-book. The old vagabond, greatly amused by Moody's scruples, saw plainly enough that, so long as he wrote the supposed letter from Hardyman in the third person, it mattered little what handwriting was employed, seeing that no signature would be necessary. The letter was at once composed, on the model which Sharon had already suggested to Moody, and a respectable messenger (so far as outward appearance went) was employed to take it to the bank. In half an hour the answer came back. It added one more to the difficulties which beset the inquiry after the lost money. No such sum as five hundred pounds had been paid, within the dates mentioned, to the credit of Hardyman's account.

Old Sharon was not in the least discomposed by this fresh check. "Give my love to the dear young lady," he said, with his customary impudence; "and tell her we are one degree nearer to finding the thief."

Moody looked at him, doubting whether he was in jest or in earnest.

"Must I squeeze a little more information into that thick head of yours?" asked Sharon. With this question he produced a weekly newspaper, and pointed to a paragraph which reported, among the items of sporting news, Hardyman's recent visit to a sale of horses at a town in the north of France. "We know he didn't pay the bank-note in to his account," Sharon remarked. "What else did he do with it? Took it to pay for the horses that he bought in France! Do you see your way a little plainer now? Very good. Let's try next if the money holds out. Somebody must cross the Channel in search of the note. Which of us two is to sit in the steam-boat with a white basin on his lap? Old Sharon, of course!" He stopped to count the money still left, out of the sum deposited by Moody to defray the cost of the inquiry. "All right!" he went on. "I've got enough to defray my expenses there and back. Don't stir out of London till you hear from me. I can't tell how soon I may not want you. If there's any difficulty in tracing the note, your hand will have to go into your pocket again. Can't you get the lawyer to join you? Lord! how I should enjoy squandering his money! It's a downright disgrace to me to have only got one guinea out of him. I could tear my flesh off my bones when I think of it."

The same night old Sharon started for France, by way of Dover and Calais.

Two days elapsed, and brought no news from Moody's agent. On the third day, he received some information relating to Sharon—not from the man himself, but in a letter from Isabel Miller.

"For once, dear Robert," she wrote, "my judgment has turned out to be sounder than yours. That hateful old man has confirmed my worst opinion of him. Pray have him punished. Take him before a magistrate and charge him with cheating you out of your money. I inclose the sealed letter which he gave me at the farmhouse. The week's time before I was to open it expired yesterday. Was there ever anything so impudent and so inhuman? I am too vexed and angry about the money you have wasted on this old wretch to write more. Yours, gratefully and affectionately, Isabel."

The letter in which old Sharon had undertaken (by way of pacifying Isabel) to write the name of the thief, contained these lines:—

"You are a charming girl, my dear; but you still want one thing to make you perfect—and that is a lesson in patience. I am proud and happy to teach you. The name of the thief remains, for the present, Mr. — (Blank)."

From Moody's point of view, there was but one thing to be said of this: it was just like old Sharon! Isabel's letter was of infinitely greater interest to him. He feasted his eyes on the words above the signature: she signed herself, "Yours gratefully and affectionately." Did the last word mean that she was really beginning to be fond of him? After kissing the word, he wrote a comforting letter to her, in which he pledged himself to keep a watchful eye on Sharon, and to trust him with no more money until he had honestly earned it first.

A week passed. Moody (longing to see Isabel) still waited in vain for news from France. He had just decided to delay his visit to South Morden no longer, when the errand-boy employed by Sharon brought him this message:—"The old 'un's at home, and waitin' to see yer."

CHAPTER XVIII.

Sharon's news was not of an encouraging character. He had met with serious difficulties, and had spent the last farthing of Moody's money in attempting to overcome them.

One discovery of importance he had certainly made. A horse withdrawn from the sale was the only horse that had met with Hardyman's approval. He had secured the animal at the high reserved price of twelve thousand francs—being four hundred and eighty pounds in English money; and he had paid with an English bank-note. The seller (a French horse-dealer resident in Brussels) had returned to Belgium immediately on completing the negotiations. Sharon had ascertained his address, and had written to him at Brussels, inclosing the number of the lost bank-note. In two days he had received an answer, informing him that the horse-dealer had been called to England by the illness of a relative, and that he had hitherto failed to send any address to which his letters could be forwarded. Hearing this, and having exhausted his funds, Sharon had returned to London. It now rested with Moody to decide whether the course of the inquiry should follow the horse-dealer next. There was the cash account, showing how the money had been spent. And there was Sharon, with his pipe in his mouth and his dog on his lap, waiting for orders.

Moody wisely took time to consider before he committed himself to a decision. In the meanwhile, he ventured to recommend a new course of proceeding which Sharon's report had suggested to his mind.

"It seems to me," he said, "that we have taken the roundabout way of getting to our end in view, when the straight road lay before us. If Mr. Hardyman has passed the stolen note, you know, as well as I do, that he has passed it innocently. Instead of wasting time and money in trying to trace a stranger, why not tell Mr. Hardyman what has happened, and ask him to give us the number of the note? You can't think of everything, I know; but it does seem strange that this idea didn't occur to you before you went to France."

"Mr. Moody," said old Sharon, "I shall have to cut your acquaintance. You are a man without faith; I don't like you. As if I hadn't thought of Hardyman weeks since!" he exclaimed, contemptuously. "Are you really soft enough to suppose that a gentleman in his position would talk about his money affairs to me? You know mighty little of him if you do. A fortnight since I sent one of my men (most respectably dressed) to hang about his farm, and see what information he could pick up. My man became painfully acquainted with the toe of a boot. It was thick, Sir; and it was Hardyman's."

"I will run the risk of the boot," Moody replied, in his quiet way.

"And put the question to Hardyman?"

"Yes."

"Very good," said Sharon. "If you get your answer from his tongue, instead of his boot, the case is at an end—unless I have made a complete mess of it. Look here, Moody! If you want to do me a good turn, tell the lawyer that the guinea-opinion was the right one. Let him know that he was the fool, not you, when he buttoned up his pockets and refused to trust me. And, I say!" pursued old Sharon, relapsing into his customary impudence, "you're in love, you know, with that nice girl. I like her myself. When you marry her invite me to the wedding. I'll make a sacrifice: I'll brush my hair and wash my face in honour of the occasion."

Returning to his lodgings, Moody found two letters waiting on the table. One of them bore the South Morden postmark. He opened that letter first.

It was written by Miss Pink. The first lines contained an urgent entreaty to keep the circumstances connected with the loss of the five hundred pounds the strictest secret from everyone in general, and from Hardyman in particular. The reasons assigned for making the strange request were next expressed in these terms:—"My niece Isabel is, I am happy to inform you, engaged to be married to Mr. Hardyman. If the slightest hint reached him of her having been associated, no matter how cruelly and unjustly, with a suspicion of theft, the marriage would be broken off, and the result to herself and to everybody connected with her, would be disgrace for the rest of our lives."

On the blank space at the foot of the page a few words were added, in Isabel's writing:—"Whatever changes there may be in my life, your place in my heart is one that no other person can fill: it is the place of my dearest friend. Pray write and tell me that you are not distressed and not angry. My one anxiety is that you should remember what I have always told you about the state of my own feelings. My one wish is that you will still let me love you and value you, as I might have loved and valued a brother."

The letter dropped from Moody's hand. Not a word—not even a sigh—passed his lips. In tearless silence he submitted to the pang that wrung him. In tearless silence he contemplated the wreck of his life.

CHAPTER XIX.

The narrative returns to South Morden, and follows the events which attended Isabel's marriage engagement.

To say that Miss Pink, inflated by triumph, rose, morally speaking, from the earth and floated among the clouds, is to indicate faintly the effect produced on the ex-schoolmistress when her niece first informed her of what had happened at the farm. Attacked on one side by her aunt, and on the other by Hardyman, and feebly defended, at the best, by her own doubts and misgivings, Isabel ended by surrendering at discretion. Like thousands of other women in a similar position, she was in the last degree uncertain as to the state of her own heart. To what extent she was insensibly influenced by Hardyman's commanding position in believing herself to be sincerely attached to him, it was beyond her power of self-examination to discover. He doubly dazzled her by his birth and by his celebrity. Not in England only, but throughout Europe, he was a recognised authority on his own subject. How could she—how could any woman—resist the influence of his steady mind, his firmness of purpose, his manly resolution to owe everything to himself and nothing to his rank, set off as these attractive qualities were by the outward and personal advantages which exercise an ascendancy of their own? Isabel was fascinated, and yet Isabel was not at ease. In her lonely moments she was troubled by regretful thoughts of Moody, which perplexed and irritated her. She had always behaved honestly to him; she had never encouraged him to hope that his love for her had the faintest prospect of being returned. Yet, knowing, as she did, that her conduct was blameless so far, there were nevertheless perverse sympathies in her which took his part. In the wakeful hours of the night there were whispering voices in her which said, Think of Moody! Had there been a growing kindness towards this good friend in her heart, of which she herself was not aware? She tried to detect it—to weigh it for what it was really worth. But it lay too deep to be discovered and estimated, if it did really exist—if it had any sounder origin than her own morbid fancy. In the broad light of day, in the little bustling duties of life, she forgot it again. She could think of what she ought to wear on the wedding day; she could even try privately how her new signature, "Isabel Hardyman," would look when she had the right to use it. On the whole, it may be said that the time passed smoothly—with some occasional checks and drawbacks, which were the more easily endured seeing that they took their rise in Isabel's own conduct. Complacent as she was in general, there were two instances, among others, in which her resolution to take her own way was not to be overcome. She refused to write either to Moody or to Lady Lydiard informing them of her engagement; and she steadily disapproved of Miss Pink's policy of concealment, in the matter of the robbery at Lady Lydiard's house. Her aunt could only secure her as a passive accomplice by stating family considerations in the strongest possible terms. "If the disgrace was confined to you, my dear, I might leave you to decide. But I am involved in it, as your nearest relative; and, what is more, even the sacred memories of your father and mother might feel the slur cast on them." This exaggerated language—like all exaggerated language, a mischievous weapon in the arsenal of weakness and prejudice—had its effect on Isabel. Reluctantly and sadly, she consented to be silent.

Miss Pink wrote word of the engagement to Moody first; reserving to a later day the superior pleasure of informing Lady Lydiard of the very event which that audacious woman had declared to be impossible. To her aunt's surprise, just as she was about to close the envelope Isabel stepped forward, and inconsistently requested leave to add a postscript to the very letter which she had refused to write! Miss Pink was not even permitted to see the postscript. Isabel secured the envelope the moment she laid down her pen, and retired to her room with a headache (which was heartache in disguise) for the rest of the day.

While the question of the marriage was still in debate, an event occurred which exercised a serious influence on Hardyman's future plans.

He received a letter from the Continent which claimed his immediate attention. One of the sovereigns of Europe had decided on making some radical changes in the mounting and equipment of a cavalry regiment; and he required the assistance of Hardyman in that important part of the contemplated reform which was connected with the choice and purchase of horses. Setting his own interests out of the question, Hardyman owed obligations to the kindness of his illustrious correspondent which made it impossible for him to send an excuse. In a fortnight's time, at the latest, it would be necessary for him to leave England; and a month or more might elapse before it would be possible for him to return.

Under these circumstances, he proposed, in his own precipitate way, to hasten the date of the marriage. The necessary legal delay would permit the ceremony to be performed on that day fortnight. Isabel might then accompany him on his journey, and spend a brilliant honeymoon at the foreign Court. She at once refused, not only to accept this proposal, but even to take it into consideration. While Miss Pink dwelt eloquently on the shortness of the notice, Miss Pink's niece based her resolution on far more important grounds. Hardyman had not yet announced the contemplated marriage to his parents and friends; and Isabel was determined not to become his wife until she could be first assured of a courteous and tolerant reception by the family—if she could hope for no warmer welcome at their hands.

Hardyman was not a man who yielded easily, even in trifles.

In the present case, his dearest interests were concerned in inducing Isabel to reconsider her decision. He was still vainly trying to shake her resolution when the afternoon post brought a letter for Miss Pink, which introduced a new element of disturbance into the discussion. The letter was nothing less than Lady Lydiard's reply to the written announcement of Isabel's engagement, dispatched on the previous day by Miss Pink.

Her Ladyship's answer was a surprisingly short one. It only contained these lines:—

"Lady Lydiard begs to acknowledge the receipt of Miss Pink's letter requesting that she will say nothing to Mr. Hardyman of the loss of a bank-note in her house, and assigning as a reason that Miss Isabel Miller is engaged to be married to Mr. Hardyman, and might be prejudiced in his estimation if the facts were made known. Miss Pink may make her mind easy. Lady Lydiard has not the slightest intention of taking Mr. Hardyman into her confidence on the subject of her domestic affairs. With regard to the proposed marriage, Lady Lydiard casts no doubt on Miss Pink's perfect sincerity and good faith; but, at the same time, she positively declines to believe that Mr. Hardyman means to make Miss Isabel Miller his wife. Lady L. will yield to the evidence of a properly-attested certificate—and to nothing else."

A folded piece of paper, directed to Isabel, dropped out of this characteristic letter as Miss Pink turned from the first page to the second. Lady Lydiard addressed her adopted daughter in these words:—

"I was on the point of leaving home to visit you again, when I received your aunt's letter. My poor deluded child, no words can tell how distressed I am about you. You are already sacrificed to the folly of the most foolish woman living. For God's sake, take care you do not fall a victim next to the designs of a profligate man. Come to me, instantly, Isabel, and I promise to take care of you."

Fortified by these letters, and aided by Miss Pink's indignation, Hardyman pressed his proposal on Isabel with renewed resolution. She made no attempt to combat his arguments—she only held firmly by her decision. Without some encouragement from Hardyman's father and mother, she still steadily refused to become his wife. Irritated already by Lady Lydiard's letters, he lost the self-command which so eminently distinguished him in the ordinary affairs of life, and showed the domineering and despotic temper which was an inbred part of his disposition. Isabel's high spirit at once resented the harsh terms in which he spoke to her. In the plainest words, she released him from his engagement, and, without waiting for his excuses, quitted the room.

Left together, Hardyman and Miss Pink devised an arrangement which paid due respect to Isabel's scruples, and at the same time met Lady Lydiard's insulting assertion of disbelief in Hardyman's honour, by a formal and public announcement of the marriage.

It was proposed to give a garden party at the farm in a week's time, for the express purpose of introducing Isabel to Hardyman's family and friends in the character of his betrothed wife. If his father and mother accepted the invitation, Isabel's only objection to hastening their union would fall to the ground. Hardyman might, in that case, plead with his Imperial correspondent for a delay in his departure of a few days more; and the marriage might still take place before he left England. Isabel, at Miss Pink's intercession, was induced to accept her lover's excuses, and, in the event of her favourable reception by Hardyman's parents at the farm, to give her consent (not very willingly even yet) to hastening the ceremony which was to make her Hardyman's wife.

On the next morning the whole of the invitations were sent out, excepting the invitation to Hardyman's father and mother. Without mentioning it to Isabel, Hardyman decided on personally appealing to his mother before he ventured on taking the head of the family into his confidence.

The result of the interview was partially successful—and no more. Lord Rotherfield declined to see his youngest son; and he had engagements which would, under any circumstances, prevent his being present at the garden party. But, at the express request of Lady Rotherfield, he was willing to make certain concessions.

"I have always regarded Alfred as a barely sane person," said his Lordship, "since he turned his back on his prospects to become a horse-dealer. If we decline altogether to sanction this new act—I won't say, of insanity, I will say, of absurdity—on his part, it is impossible to predict to what discreditable extremities he may not proceed. We must temporise with Alfred. In the meantime I shall endeavour to obtain some information respecting this young person—named Miller, I think you said, and now resident at South Morden. If I am satisfied that she is a woman of reputable character, possessing an average education, and presentable manners, we may as well let Alfred take his own way. He is out of the pale of Society, as it is; and Miss Miller has no father and mother to complicate matters, which is distinctly a merit on her part—and, in short, if the marriage is not absolutely disgraceful, the wisest way (as we have no power to prevent it) will be to submit. You will say nothing to Alfred about what I propose to do. I tell you plainly I don't trust him. You will simply inform him from me that I want time to consider, and that, unless he hears to the contrary in the interval, he may expect to have the sanction of your presence at his breakfast, or luncheon, or whatever it is. I must go to town in a day or two, and I shall ascertain what Alfred's friends know about this last of his many follies, if I meet any of them at the club."

Returning to South Morden in no serene frame of mind, Hardyman found Isabel in a state of depression which perplexed and alarmed him.

The news that his mother might be expected to be present at the garden party failed entirely to raise her spirits. The only explanation she gave of the change in her was, that the dull, heavy weather of the last few days made her feel a little languid and nervous. Naturally dissatisfied with this reply to his inquiries, Hardyman asked for Miss Pink. He was informed that Miss Pink could not see him. She was constitutionally subject to asthma, and, having warnings of a return of the malady, she was (by the doctor's advice) keeping her room. Hardyman returned to the farm in a temper which was felt by everybody in his employment, from the trainer to the stable-boys.

While the apology made for Miss Pink stated no more than the plain truth, it must be confessed that Hardyman was right in declining to be satisfied with Isabel's excuse for the melancholy that oppressed her. She had that morning received Moody's answer to the lines which she had addressed to him at the end of her aunt's letter; and she had not yet recovered from the effect which it had produced on her spirits.

"It is impossible for me to say honestly that I am not distressed (Moody wrote) by the news of your marriage engagement. The blow has fallen very heavily on me. When I look at the future now, I see only a dreary blank. This is not your fault—you are in no way to blame. I remember the time when I should have been too angry to own this—when I might have said or done things which I should have bitterly repented afterwards. That time is past. My temper has been softened, since I have befriended you in your troubles. That good at least has come out of my foolish hopes, and perhaps also out of the true sympathy which I have felt for you. I can honestly ask you to accept my heart's dearest wishes for your happiness—and I can keep the rest to myself."

"Let me say a word now relating to the efforts that I have made to help you, since that sad day when you left Lady Lydiard's house."

"I had hoped (for reasons which it is needless to mention here) to interest Mr. Hardyman himself in aiding our inquiry. But your aunt's wishes, as expressed in her letter to me, close my lips. I will only ask you, at some convenient time, to let me mention the last discoveries that we have made; leaving it to your discretion, when Mr. Hardyman has become your husband, to ask him the questions which, under other circumstances, I should have put to him myself."

"It is, of course, possible that the view I take of Mr. Hardyman's capacity to help us may be a mistaken one. In this case, if you still wish the investigation to be privately carried on, I beg of you to let me continue to direct it, as the greatest favour you can confer on your devoted old friend."

"PATIENTS are unanimous in their statement that the appetite is much increased by taking 'Hydrated Oil'; and that, so far from possessing the unpleasant taste of ordinary Cod-Liver Oil, the taste of 'Hydrated Oil' is agreeable rather than the reverse, and is described by some as resembling Devonshire cream. These, I submit, are very important points in cases usually attended by great irritability of stomach. The general improvement in strength shown within a fortnight was in many instances surprising, even to myself, who had seen already in private practice many startling results from its use. My experience, however, shows that in cases where Cod-Liver Oil or an emulsion of it has been depended upon increase of weight is rarely obtained."—Page 26.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil).

Economical in Use; Certain in Result.

THE agreeable character of HYDRATED OIL is conclusively shown by the fact that Delicate Women and Young Children take it with avidity; and in the case of Infants who do not thrive upon the food given, the nourished and well-conditioned appearance of the child after this treatment is most marked.

THE CHEMICAL PRINCIPLES upon which Hydrated Oil is prepared were first described

IN a "TREATISE on the ASSIMILATION and DIGESTION of FATS in the HUMAN BODY, by H. C. BARTLETT, Ph.D., F.C.S. Published by Messrs. J. and A. Churchill, New Burlington-street.

"FAT IN THE HUMAN BODY." Page 41.

"NOTHING appears to restore the healthy functions of the liver and pancreas in these cases except the frequent ingestion of a richly fat, so treated artificial fat that it is already partially transformed by fermentation and the reaction of bile. Seized on with avidity by the absorbents, it is insensitively assimilated by the digestive organs until they gradually become strengthened, not only to provide their own nourishment, but to transform a sufficient quantity of fat to supply the inevitable waste throughout the body."

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil).

From its valuable tonic effect on the nervous system, in addition to its special stimulating action on the organs concerned in the production of fat in the body, it also causes marked increase in weight in persons of naturally thin habit who do not present any evidences of disease.

THE permanence and perfection of the HYDRATED OIL is shown by its retaining its cream-like condition as long as the purest cod-liver oil will retain its sweetness. Unlike the preparations mentioned, or simple cod-liver oil, it produces no unpleasant eructation or sense of nausea, and should be taken in such very much smaller doses, according to the directions, as will ensure its complete assimilation; this at the same time renders its use economical in the highest degree.

ANALYTICAL REPORTS.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil).

Laboratory, 39, Duke-street, Grosvenor-square, W., July 31, 1877.

Messrs. J. M. Richards and Co. Gentlemen,—In compliance with your instructions I have to report that the samples of Hydrated Oil (Hydroleine) taken by me from bulk before bottling during the last nine months have in every instance been composed in accordance with the formula given on the labels. The necessary conditions of transformation of the oil have always been attained in the manufacture, and by means of the artificial digestion so produced this preparation is far more easy of assimilation than ordinary cod-liver oil, or any emulsion of fat or oil which I have analysed.—I am, faithfully yours, H. C. Bartlett, Ph.D., F.C.S.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil) is immediately assimilated. Unlike ordinary Cod-Liver Oil, it does not purge, does not produce sickness, or what is so well known as biliousness, nor does it pass through the body unchanged, as it is already partially digested, and suitable for immediate absorption and assimilation. Hence its economical value, none being wasted.

WEAKLY INFANTS THRIVE ON IT.

Appetite is improved, digestion assisted, and strength increased by HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil). A true Nerve Tonic, a REAL DIGESTIVE, and POWERFUL NUTRITIVE.

ALL Persons taking HYDROLEINE are particularly urged to keep an ACCOUNT FROM WEEK TO WEEK OF THEIR WEIGHT, that the gain and improvement may be known.

MESSRS. J. M. RICHARDS and CO. having devoted special attention to perfecting a process by means of which uniformity in the production of HYDRATED OIL is secured, desire to direct the attention of the medical profession and the public to this preparation, to distinguish which the name of HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil) has been registered under the Trade Marks Act by them.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil), in Half-pound Bottles, price 4s. 6d. Sold by all Chemists. Manufactured by J. M. RICHARDS and Co., Office and Warehouse, Great Russell-street-buildings, Great Russell-street (corner of Charlotte-street), Bloomsbury, London.

VALUABLE DISCOVERY for the HAIR.

If your hair is turning grey or white, or falling off, use THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER; for it will positively restore, in ever white hair to its original colour, without leaving the disagreeable smell of most "Restorers." It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots, where the glands are not decayed.

This preparation has never been known to fail in restoring the hair to its natural colour and gloss in from eight to twelve days. It promotes growth, and prevents the hair falling out, eradicating dandruff, and leaving the scalp in a clean healthy condition.

It imparts peculiar vitality to the roots of the hair, restoring it to its youthful freshness and vigour. Daily applications of this preparation for a week or two will surely restore faded, grey, or white hair to its natural colour and richness.

It is not a dye, nor does it contain any colouring matter or offensive substance whatever. Hence it does not soil the hands the scalp, or even white linen, but procures the colour within the substance of the hair.

It may be had of any respectable Chemist, Perfumer, or Dealer in Toilet Articles in the Kingdom, at 3s. 6d. per bottle. In case the dealer has not "The Mexican Hair Renewer" in stock and will not procure it for you, it will be sent direct by rail, carriage paid, on receipt of 4s. in stamps to any part of England.

Prepared by HENRY C. GALLUP, 443, Oxford-street, London.

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER.

WHAT BEAUTIFIES THE HAIR?

What gives luxuriance to each tress,
And pleases each one's fancies?
What adds a charm of perfect grace,
And Nature's gift enhances?
What gives a wondrous gleam,
And what says each reviewer?
"That quite successful is the use OF 'THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER!'"

What gives luxuriance to each tress,
And makes it bright and glowing?
And keeps it free from dandruff, too,
And healthy in its growing?
What does such wonders? Ask the press,
And what says each reviewer?
"That none can equal or approach
'THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER!'"

What gives luxuriance to each tress,
Like some bright hair beaming?
What makes the hair a perfect mass
Of splendid ringlets teeming?
What gives profusion in excess?
What, when the hair is thinning?
"The choicest preparation is
'THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER!'"

What gives luxuriance to each tress,
And makes it so delightful?
Like some bright hair beaming?
What makes the hair a perfect mass
Of splendid ringlets teeming?
What gives profusion in excess?
What, when the hair is thinning?
"The choicest preparation is
'THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER!'"

has gained for itself the highest reputation, and a decided preference over all other "hair dressings," as evinced from certificates and testimonials from the most respectable sources. Being compounded with the greatest care—combining, as it does, all the most delicate qualities of the best hair preparations of the day, without the objectionable ones—it may be relied on as the very best known to chemistry for restoring the natural colour to the hair, and causing new hair to grow on bald spots, unless the hair-glands are decayed; for if the glands are decayed and gone no stimulant can restore them, but if, as is often the case, the glands are only torpid, THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER will renew their vitality, and a new growth of hair will follow. Read the following Testimonial:—

From Messrs. Wm. Hayes and Co., Chemists, 12, Grafton-street, Dublin:—"We are recommending 'THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER' to all our customers as the best of the kind, as we have been told by several of our friends who tried it that it has a wonderful effect in restoring and strengthening their hair."

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION FOR LADIES.

Would you have luxuriant hair,
Beautiful, and rich, and rare;
Would you have it soft and bright,
And attractive to the sight?
This you really can produce,
If you put in constant use
THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER

The hair it strengthens and preserves,
And thus a double purpose serves;
It beautifies—improves it, too,
And gives it a most charming hue,
And thus in each essential way,
It public favour gains each day—
THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER

If a single thread of hair
Of a greyish tint is there,
This "Renewer" will restore
All its colour as before;
And thus it is that vast renown
Does daily now its virtues crown—
THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER!

No matter whether faded grey,
Or falling like the leaves of May,
It will renew the human hair,
And make it like itself appear:
It will revive it, beautify,
And give it—truly—
THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER!

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER.

The constitution of the person and the condition of the scalp have much to do with the length of time it requires for new hair to grow; also thin or thick hair will depend much upon the vital force remaining in the hair-glands. New hairs are first seen to start around the margin of the bald spots near the permanent hair, and extend upwards until the spots are covered more or less thickly with fine short hair. Excessive brushing should be guarded against as soon as the small hairs make their appearance; but the scalp may be sponged with rain water to advantage occasionally. The scalp may be pressed and moved on the bone by the finger and which quickens the circulation and softens the spots which have remained long bald. On applying the hair-dressing it enlivens the scalp, and in cases where the hair begins to fall a few applications will arrest it, and the new growth will be evident. It is the very best in use. It may be relied on as the best hair-dressing known for restoring grey or faded hair to its original colour without dyeing it, producing the colour within the substance of the hair, imparting a peculiar vitality to the roots, preventing the hair from falling, keeping the head cool, clean, and free from dandruff, causing new hairs to grow, unless the hair-glands are entirely decayed. THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER makes the hair soft, glossy, and luxuriant. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers, at 3s. 6d.; or sent to any address free on receipt of 4s. in stamps. HENRY C. GALLUP, Proprietor, 443, Oxford-street, London.

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER.

When the hair is weak and faded,
Like the autumn leaves that fall,
There is felt that saddest ailment,
Which does every heart enthrall,
Then we look for some specific
To arrest it on its way,
And THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER
Bids it like enchantment stay.

It arrests decaying progress,
Though the hair is thin and grey
It will strengthen and improve it,
And work wonders day by day.
It restores the colour,
And brings back its beauty, too;
For THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER
Makes it look both fresh and new.

What's the greatest hair restorer,
That the present age can show,
What produces wonders daily,
Which the world at large should know?
Why, THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER
Eminently stands the first.
Thus its fame by countless thousands
Day by day is now rehearsed.

What beautifies, improves, and strengthens
Human hair of every age?
Why, this famous hair restorer,
With the ladies in the rage,
And THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER
Is the very best in use.
For luxuriant tresses always Does its magic powers produce.

"You need be under no apprehension about the expense to which you are likely to put me. I have unexpectedly inherited what is to me a handsome fortune."

"The same post which brought your aunt's letter brought a line from a lawyer asking me to see him on the subject of my late father's affairs. I waited a day or two before I could summon heart enough to see him, or to see anybody; and then I went to his office. You have heard that my father's bank stopped payment, at a time of commercial panic. His failure was mainly attributable to the treachery of a friend to whom he had lent a large sum of money, and who paid him the yearly interest, without acknowledging that every farthing of it had been lost in unsuccessful speculations. The son of this man has prospered in business, and he has honourably devoted a part of his wealth to the payment of his father's creditors. Half the sum due to my father has thus passed into my hands as his next of kin; and the other half is to follow in course of time. If my hopes had been fulfilled, how gladly I should have shared my prosperity with you! As it is, I have far more than enough for my wants as a lonely man, and plenty left to spend in your service."

"God bless and prosper you, my dear. I shall ask you to accept a little present from me, among the other offerings that are made to you before the wedding day.—R. M."

The studiously considerate and delicate tone in which these lines were written had an effect on Isabel which was exactly the opposite of the effect intended by the writer. She burst into a passionate fit of tears; and in the safe solitude of her own room, the despairing words escaped her, "I wish I had died before I met with Alfred Hardyman!"

As the days wore on, disappointments and difficulties seemed by a kind of fatality to beset the contemplated announcement of the marriage.

Miss Pink's asthma, developed by the unfavourable weather, set the doctor's art at defiance, and threatened to keep that unfortunate lady a prisoner in her room on the day of the party. Hardyman's invitations were in some cases refused; and in others accepted by husbands with excuses for the absence of their wives. His elder brother made an apology for himself as well as for his wife. Felix Sweetair wrote, "With pleasure, dear Alfred, if my health permits me to leave the house." Lady Lydiard, invited at Miss Pink's special request, sent no reply. The one encouraging circumstance was the silence of Lady Rotherfield. So long as her son received no intimation to the contrary, it was a sign that Lord Rotherfield permitted his wife to sanction the marriage by her presence.

Hardyman wrote to his Imperial correspondent, engaging to leave England on the earliest possible day, and asking to be pardoned if he failed to express himself more definitely, in consideration of domestic affairs which it was necessary to settle before he started for the Continent. If there should not be time enough to write again, he promised to send a telegraphic announcement of his departure. Long afterwards, Hardyman remembered the misgivings that had troubled him when he wrote that letter. In the rough draught of it, he had mentioned, as his excuse for not being yet certain of his own movements, that he expected to be immediately married. In the fair copy, the vague foreboding of some accident to come was so painfully present to his mind, that he struck out the words which referred to his marriage and substituted the designedly indefinite phrase, "domestic affairs."

CHAPTER XX.

The day of the garden party arrived. There was no rain; but the air was heavy, and the sky was overcast by lowering clouds.

Some hours before the guests were expected, Isabel arrived alone at the farm, bearing the apologies of unfortunate Miss Pink, still kept a prisoner in her bed-chamber by the asthma. In the confusion produced at the cottage by the preparations for entertaining the company, the one room in which Hardyman could receive Isabel with the certainty of not being interrupted was the smoking-room. To this haven of refuge he led her—still reserved and silent, still not restored to her customary spirits. "If any visitors come before the time," Hardyman said to his servant, "tell them I am engaged at the stables. I must have an hour's quiet talk with you," he continued, turning to Isabel, "or I shall be in too bad a temper to receive my guests with common politeness. The worry of giving this party is not to be told in words. I almost wish I had been content with presenting you to my mother, and had let the rest of my acquaintance go to the devil."

A quiet half hour passed; and the first visitor, a stranger to the servants, appeared at the cottage-gate. He was a middle-aged man, and he had no wish to disturb Mr. Hardyman. "I will wait in the grounds," he said, "and trouble nobody." The middle-aged man, who expressed himself in these modest terms, was Robert Moody.

Five minutes later, a carriage drove up to the gate. An elderly lady got out of it, followed by a fat white Scotch terrier, who growled at every stranger within his reach. It is needless to introduce Lady Lydiard and Tommie.

Informed that Mr. Hardyman was at the stables, Lady Lydiard gave the servant her card. "Take that to your master, and say I won't detain him five minutes." With these words, her Ladyship sauntered into the grounds. She looked about her with observant eyes; not only noticing the tent which had been set up on the grass to accommodate the expected guests, but entering it, and looking at the waiters who were engaged in placing the luncheon on the table. Returning to the outer world, she next remarked that Mr. Hardyman's lawn was in very bad order. Barren sun-dried patches, and little holes and crevices opened here and there by the action of the summer heat, announced that the lawn, like everything else at the farm, had been neglected in the exclusive attention paid to the claims of the horses. Reaching a shrubbery which bounded one side of the grounds next, her Ladyship became aware of a man slowly approaching her, to all appearance absorbed in thought. The man drew a little nearer. She lifted her glasses to her eyes and recognised—Moody.

No embarrassment was produced on either side by this unexpected meeting. Lady Lydiard had, not long since, sent to ask her former steward to visit her; regretting, in her warm-hearted way, the terms on which they had separated, and wishing to atone for the harsh language that had escaped her at their parting interview. In the friendly talk which followed the reconciliation, Lady Lydiard not only heard the news of Moody's pecuniary inheritance—but, noticing the change in his appearance for the worse, contrived to extract from him the confession of his ill-starred passion for Isabel. To discover him now, after all that he had acknowledged, walking about the grounds at Hardyman's farm, took her Ladyship completely by surprise. "Good Heavens!" she exclaimed, in her loudest tones, "what are you doing here?"

"You mentioned Mr. Hardyman's garden party, my Lady, when I had the honour of waiting on you," Moody answered. "Thinking over it afterwards, it seemed the fittest occasion I could find for making a little wedding present to Miss Isabel. Is there any harm in my asking Mr. Hardyman to let me put the present on her plate, so that she may see it when she sits down to luncheon? If your Ladyship thinks so, I will go away directly, and send the gift by post."

Lady Lydiard looked at him attentively. "You don't despise the girl," she asked, "for selling herself for rank and money? I do—I can tell you!"

Moody's worn white face flushed a little. "No, my Lady," he answered, "I can't hear you say that! Isabel would not have engaged herself to Mr. Hardyman unless she had been fond of him—as fond, I dare say, as I once hoped she might be of me. It's a hard thing to confess that; but I do confess it, in justice to her—God bless her!"

The generosity that spoke in those simple words touched the finest sympathies in Lady Lydiard's nature. "Give me your hand," she said, with her own generous spirit kindling in her eyes. "You have a great heart, Moody. Isabel Miller is a fool for not marrying you—and one day she will know it!"

Before a word more could pass between them, Hardyman's voice was audible on the other side of the shrubbery, calling irritably to his servant to find Lady Lydiard.

Moody retired to the farther end of the walk, while Lady Lydiard advanced in the opposite direction, so as to meet Hardyman at the entrance to the shrubbery. He bowed stiffly, and begged to know why her Ladyship had honoured him with a visit.

Lady Lydiard replied without noticing the coldness of her reception.

"I have not been very well, Mr. Hardyman, or you would have seen me before this. My only object in presenting myself here is to make my excuses personally for having written of you in terms which expressed a doubt of your honour. I have done you an injustice, and I beg you to forgive me."

Hardyman acknowledged this frank apology as unreservedly as it had been offered to him. "Say no more, Lady Lydiard. And let me hope, now you are here, that you will honour my little party with your presence."

Lady Lydiard gravely stated her reasons for not accepting the invitation.

"I disapprove so strongly of unequal marriages," she said, walking on slowly towards the cottage, "that I cannot, in common consistency, become one of your guests. I shall always feel interested in Isabel Miller's welfare; and I can honestly say I shall be glad if your married life proves that my old-fashioned prejudices are without justification in your case. Accept my thanks for your invitation; and let me hope that my plain-speaking has not offended you."

She bowed, and looked about her for Tommie before she advanced to the carriage waiting for her at the gate. In the surprise of seeing Moody she had forgotten to look back for the dog when she entered the shrubbery. She now called to him, and blew the whistle at her watch-chain. Not a sign of Tommie was to be seen. Hardyman instantly directed the servants to search in the cottage and out of the cottage for the dog. The order was obeyed with all needful activity and intelligence, and entirely without success. For the time being, at any rate, Tommie was lost.

Hardyman promised to have the dog looked for in every part of the farm, and to send him back in the care of one of his own men. With these polite assurances Lady Lydiard was obliged to be satisfied. She drove away in a very despondent frame of mind. "First Isabel, and now Tommie," thought her Ladyship. "I am losing the only companions who made life tolerable to me."

Returning from the garden gate, after taking leave of his visitor, Hardyman received from his servant a handful of letters which had just arrived for him. Walking slowly over the lawn as he opened them, he found nothing but excuses for the absence of guests who had already accepted their invitations. He had just thrust the letters into his pocket, when he heard footsteps behind him, and, looking round, found himself confronted by Moody.

"Hullo! have you come here to lunch?" Hardyman asked, roughly.

"I have come here, Sir, with a little gift for Miss Isabel, in honour of her marriage," Moody answered quietly. "And I ask your permission to put it on the table, so that she may see it when your guests sit down to luncheon."

He opened a jeweller's case as he spoke, containing a plain gold bracelet with an inscription engraved on the inner side:—"To Miss Isabel Miller, with the sincere good wishes of Robert Moody."

Plain as it was, the design of the bracelet was unusually beautiful. Hardyman had noticed Moody's agitation on the day when he had met Isabel near her aunt's house, and had drawn his own conclusions from it. His face darkened with a momentary jealousy as he looked at the bracelet. "All right, old fellow!" he said, with contemptuous familiarity. "Don't be modest. Wait and give it to her with your own hand."

"No, Sir," said Moody. "I would rather leave it, if you please, to speak for itself."

Hardyman understood the delicacy of feeling which dictated those words, and, without well knowing why, resented it. He was on the point of speaking, under the influence of this unworthy feeling, when Isabel's voice reached his ears, calling to him from the cottage.

Moody's face contracted with a sudden expression of pain as he too recognised the voice. "Don't let me detain you, Sir," he said, sadly. "Good morning!"

Hardyman left him without ceremony. Moody, slowly following, entered the tent. All the preparations for the luncheon had been completed; nobody was there. The places to be occupied by the guests were indicated by cards bearing their names. Moody found Isabel's card, and put his bracelet inside the folded napkin on her plate. For a while he stood with his hand on the table, thinking. The temptation to communicate once more with Isabel before he lost her for ever, was fast getting the better of his powers of resistance. "If I could persuade her to write a word to say she liked her bracelet," he thought, "it would be a comfort when I go back to my solitary life." He tore a leaf out of his pocket-book and wrote on it, "One line to say you accept my gift and my good wishes. Put it under the cushion of your chair, and I shall find it when the company have left the tent." He slipped the paper into the case which held the bracelet, and instead of leaving the farm as he had intended, turned back to the shelter of the shrubbery.

CHAPTER XXI.

Hardyman went on to the cottage. He found Isabel in some agitation. And there, by her side, with his tail wagging slowly, and his eye on Hardyman in expectation of a possible kick—there was the lost Tommie!

"Has Lady Lydiard gone?" Isabel asked, eagerly.

"Yes," said Hardyman. "Where did you find the dog?"

As events had ordered it, the dog had found Isabel, under these circumstances.

The appearance of Lady Lydiard's card in the smoking-room had been an alarming event for Lady Lydiard's adopted daughter. She was guiltily conscious of not having answered her Ladyship's note, inclosed in Miss Pink's letter, and of not having taken her Ladyship's advice of resisting the advances of Hardyman. As he rose to leave the room and receive his visitor in the grounds, Isabel intreated him to say nothing of her presence at the farm, unless Lady Lydiard exhibited a forgiving turn of mind by asking to see her. Left by herself in the smoking-room, she suddenly heard a bark in the passage which had a familiar sound in her ears. She opened the door—and in rushed Tommie, with one of his shrieks of delight! Curiosity had taken him into the house. He had heard the voices in the smoking-room; had recognised Isabel's voice; and had waited, with his customary cunning and his customary distrust of strangers, until Hardyman was out of the way. Isabel kissed and caressed him, and then drove him out again to the lawn, fearing that Lady Lydiard might return to look for him. Going back to the smoking-room, she stood at the window watching for Hardyman's return. When the servants came in to look for the dog, she could only tell them that she had last seen him in the grounds, not far from the cottage. The useless search being abandoned, and the carriage having left the gate, who should crawl out from the back of a cupboard in which some empty hampers were placed but Tommie himself! How he had contrived to get back to the smoking-room (unless she had omitted to completely close the door on her return) it was impossible to say. But there he was, determined this time to stay with Isabel, and keeping in his hiding-place until he heard the movement of the carriage-wheels, which informed him that his lawful mistress had left the cottage! Isabel had at once called to Hardyman, on the chance that the carriage might yet be stopped. It was already out of sight, and nobody knew which of the two roads it had taken, both leading to London. In this emergency, Isabel could only look at Hardyman and ask what was to be done.

"I can't spare a servant till after the party," he answered. "The dog must be tied up in the stables."

Isabel shook her head. Tommie was not accustomed to be tied up. He would make a disturbance, and he would be beaten by the grooms. "I will take care of him," she said. "He won't leave me."

"There's something else to think of besides the dog," Hardyman rejoined, irritably. "Look at these letters!" He pulled them out of his pocket as he spoke. "Here are no less than seven men, all calling themselves my friends, who accepted my invitation, and who write to excuse themselves on the very day of the party! Do you know why? They're all afraid of my father—I forgot to tell you he's a Cabinet Minister as well as a Lord. Cowards and eels. They have heard he isn't coming, and they think to curry favour with the great man by stopping away. Come along, Isabel!"

Let's take their names off the luncheon-table. Not a man of them shall ever darken my doors again!"

"I am to blame for what has happened," Isabel answered, sadly. "I am estranging you from your friends. There is still time, Alfred, to alter your mind and let me go."

He put his arm round her with rough fondness. "I would sacrifice every friend I have in the world rather than lose you. Come along!"

They left the cottage. At the entrance to the tent Hardyman noticed the dog at Isabel's heels, and vented his ill-temper, as usual with male humanity, on the nearest unoffending creature that he could find. "Be off, you mongrel brute!" he shouted. The tail of Tommie relaxed from its customary tight curve over the small of his back; and the legs of Tommie (with his tail between them) took him at full gallop to the friendly shelter of the cupboard in the smoking-room. It was one of those trifling circumstances which women notice seriously. Isabel said nothing; she only thought to herself, "I wish he had shown his temper when I first knew him!"

They entered the tent.

"I'll read the names," said Hardyman, "and you find the cards and tear them up. Stop! I'll keep the cards. You're just the sort of woman my father likes. He'll be reconciled to me when he sees you, after we are married. If one of those men ever asks him for a place, I'll take care, if it's years hence, to put an obstacle in his way! Here, take my pencil, and make a mark on the cards to remind me;—the same mark I set against a horse in my book when I don't like him—a cross, inclosed in a circle." He produced his pocket-book. His hands trembled with anger as he gave the pencil to Isabel and laid the book on the table. He had just read the name of the first false friend, and Isabel had just found the card, when a servant appeared with a message. "Mrs. Drumblade has arrived, Sir, and wishes to see you on a matter of the greatest importance."

Hardyman left the tent, not very willingly. "Wait here," he said to Isabel; "I'll be back directly."

She was standing near her own place at the table. Moody had left one end of the jeweller's case visible above the napkin, to attract her attention. In a minute more the bracelet and the note were in her hands. She dropped on her chair, overwhelmed by the conflicting emotions that rose in her at the sight of the bracelet. At the reading of the note. Her head drooped, and the tears filled her eyes. "Are all women as blind as I have been to what is good and noble in the men who love them?" she wondered, sadly. "Better as it is," she thought, with a bitter sigh; "I am not worthy of him."

As she took up the pencil to write her answer to Moody on the back of her dinner-card, the servant appeared again at the door of the tent.

"My master wants you at the cottage, Miss, immediately."

Isabel rose, putting the bracelet and the note in the silver-mounted leather pocket (a present from Hardyman) which hung at her belt. In the hurry of passing round the table to get out, she never noticed that her dress touched Hardyman's pocket-book, placed close to the edge, and threw it down on the grass below. The book fell into one of the heat-cracks which Lady Lydiard had noticed as evidence of the neglected condition of the cottage lawn.

"You ought to hear the pleasant news my sister has just brought me," said Hardyman, when Isabel joined him in the parlour. "Mrs. Drumblade has been told, on the best authority, that my mother is not coming to the party."

"There must be some reason, of course, dear Isabel," added Mrs. Drumblade. "Have you any idea of what it can be? I haven't seen my mother myself; and all my inquiries have failed to find it out."

She looked searchingly at Isabel as she spoke. The mask of sympathy on her face was admirably worn. Nobody who possessed only a superficial acquaintance with Mrs. Drumblade's character would have suspected how thoroughly she was enjoying in secret the position of embarrassment in which her news had placed her brother. Instinctively doubting whether Mrs. Drumblade's friendly behaviour was quite so sincere as it appeared to be, Isabel answered that she was a stranger to Lady Rotherfield, and was therefore quite at a loss to explain the cause of her Ladyship's absence. As she spoke, the guests began to arrive in quick succession, and the subject was dropped, as a matter of course.

It was not a merry party. Hardyman's approaching marriage had been made the topic of much malicious gossip; and Isabel's character had, as usual in such cases, become the object of all the false reports that scandal could invent. Lady Rotherfield's absence confirmed the general conviction that Hardyman was disgracing himself. The men were all more or less uneasy. The women resented the discovery that Isabel was, personally speaking, at least, beyond the reach of hostile criticism. Her beauty was viewed as a downright offence; her refined and modest manners were set down as perfect acting; "really disgusting, my dear, in so young a girl." General Drumblade, a large and mouldy veteran, in a state of chronic astonishment (after his own matrimonial experience) at Hardyman's folly in marrying at all, diffused a wide circle of gloom, wherever he went and whatever he did. His accomplished wife, forcing her high spirits on everybody's attention with a sort of kittenish playfulness, intensified the depressing effect of the general dullness by all the force of the strongest contrast. After waiting half an hour for his mother, and waiting in vain, Hardyman led the way to the tent in despair. "The sooner I fill their stomachs and get of them," he thought, savagely, "the better I shall be pleased!"

The luncheon was attacked by the company with a certain silent ferocity, which the waiters noticed as remarkable, even in their large experience. The men drank deeply, but with wonderfully little effect in raising their spirits; the women, with the exception of amiable Mrs. Drumblade, kept Isabel deliberately out of the conversation that went on among them. General Drumblade, sitting next to her in one of the places of honour, discoursed to Isabel privately on "my brother-in-law Hardyman's infernal temper." A young Marquis, on her other side—a mere lad, chosen to make the necessary speech in acknowledgment of his superior rank—rose, in a state of nervous trepidation, to propose Isabel's health as the chosen bride of their host. Pale and trembling, conscious of having forgotten the words which he had learnt beforehand, this unhappy young nobleman began, "Ladies and gentlemen, I haven't an idea —" He stopped, put his hand to his head, stared wildly, and sat down again; having contrived to state his own case with masterly brevity and perfect truth, in a speech of seven words.

While the dismay, in some cases, and the amusement in others, was still at its height, Hardyman's valet made his appearance, and, approaching his master, said in a whisper, "Could I speak to you, Sir, for a moment outside?"

"What the devil do you want?" Hardyman asked, irritably. "Is that a letter in your hand? Give it to me."

The Valet was a Frenchman. In other words, he had a sense of what was due to himself. His master had forgotten this. He gave up the letter with a certain dignity of manner, and left the tent. Hardyman opened the letter. He turned pale as he read it; crumpled it in his hand, and threw it down on the table. "By G—d! it's a lie!" he exclaimed, furiously.

The guests rose in confusion. Mrs. Drumblade, finding the letter within her reach, coolly possessed herself of it; recognised her mother's handwriting; and read these lines:—

"I have only now succeeded in persuading your father to let me write to you. For God's sake, break off your marriage at any sacrifice. Your father has heard, on unanswerable authority, that Miss Isabel Miller left her situation in Lady Lydiard's house on suspicion of theft."

While his sister was reading this letter, Hardyman had made his way to Isabel's chair. "I must speak to you, directly," he whispered. "Come away with me!" He turned, as he took her arm, and looked at the table. "Where is my letter?" he asked. Mrs. Drumblade handed it to him, dexterously crumpled up again as she had found it. "No bad news, dear Alfred, I hope?" she said, in her most affectionate manner. Hardyman snatched the letter from her, without answering, and led Isabel out of the tent.

"Read that!" he said, when they were alone. "And tell me at once whether it's true or false."

A NEW ERA.

HOW TO PREVENT DISEASE AND PREMATURE DEATH BY NATURAL MEANS.

LORD BEACONSFIELD justly stated the foundation upon which all their happiness and power as a state depend. "For the most practical mode of preventing disease and premature death see a large illustrated sheet given with each bottle of ENO'S FRUIT SALT. The information is invaluable. As a HEALTH-GIVING, REFRESHING, COOLING, and INVIGORATING BEVERAGE, or as a gentle laxative and tonic in the various forms of indigestion, ENO'S FRUIT SALT (prepared from solid fruit) is the best preventive and cure for Biliousness, Sick Headache, Skin Eruptions, Impure Blood, Pimples on the Face, Giddiness, Fevers, Feverishness, Feverish Colds, Measles, Depression, Want of Appetite, Sourness of the Stomach, Constipation, Vomiting, Thirst, &c., and to remove the effects of errors of eating and drinking.

ENO'S FRUIT SALT.—"Amongst the many and varied medicinal discoveries of the nineteenth century, none, perhaps, has advanced so rapidly into public notice as ENO'S FRUIT SALT. Comparatively unknown some years ago, this preparation, which is made from pure solid fruit, is now with in every household of the world. The great merit which is claimed for it is that it keeps the blood pure and the system perfectly clear, and thus takes away the groundwork of malarious diseases, so common to towns and districts which are malarial. There is little doubt but that the time will eventually come when fevers and diseases resulting from poisoned blood will be considered as offences against the well-being of communities at large; but it will, in all probability, be some while yet before we shall have arrived at such a pitch of sanitary perfection. Meanwhile, we cannot withhold a welcome to any specific which may prove a means of preserving or restoring health. The simpler the better, so long only as it is effectual. ENO'S FRUIT SALT has been found an excellent corrective to the digestive organs, and in the colonies, in India, and in South America has a largely increasing sale. It is better by far than 'nips,' and amongst the Good Templars—a numerous community all over the world—it is recognised not only as a refreshing but also as a stimulating drink."—European Mail, Nov. 1, 1877.

WHAT EVERYBODY WANTS TO KNOW.

ENO'S FRUIT SALT.—A gentleman writes:—"Since I have used ENO'S FRUIT SALT night and morning, my headaches, &c., have left me, and this after suffering for above twenty years. You should make this fact well known."

ENO'S FRUIT SALT.—A lady writes:—"Everything, medicine or food, ceased to act properly for at least three months before I commenced taking it; the little food I could take generally punished me or returned. My life was one of great suffering, so that I must have succumbed before long."

WHAT EVERY TRAVELLING TRUNK AND HOUSEHOLD IN THE WORLD OUGHT TO CONTAIN—A BOTTLE OF

ENO'S FRUIT SALT, AS A GENTLE LAXATIVE AND TONIC IN THE VARIOUS FORMS OF INDIGESTION. GUARANTEED TO BE PREPARED FROM SOUND RIPE FRUIT.

The Fruit Salt is one of Nature's own products. It contains all the valuable saline constituents of Ripe Fruit in a portable, agreeable, and simple form, and is in every respect as harmless as the juices of the fruit from which it is obtained.

In Pimples and Blisters on the Face, biliousness of the Skin, and Depression of Spirits, it is most useful, for not the least of its recommendations is its resemblance to fruit in the natural way in which it relieves the system of effete or poisonous matter, which, if retained, poisons the blood; and its advantage over fruit is that it can be always at hand when required. Its preparation has been truly styled one of the triumphs of modern chemistry. In hot or foreign climates it is of inestimable value, as it relieves the system of the nervous system to its proper condition (by natural means). In the Nursery it is beyond praise.

IMPORTANT TO ALL, ESPECIALLY TO CONSULS, SHIP CAPTAINS, EMIGRANTS, and EUROPEAN GENERALLY who are visiting or residing in HOT or FOREIGN CLIMATES, a most valuable mode of keeping the system healthy and taking away the groundwork of malarious diseases and all liver complaints.

ENO'S FRUIT SALT is particularly valuable. No traveller should leave home without a supply, for by its use the most dangerous forms of Fever, Blood-Poisons, &c., are prevented and cured. It is, in truth, a Family Medicine Chest in the simplest yet most potent form. Instead of being lowering to the system, this preparation is, in the highest degree, invigorating. It is effectual in relieving third, giving tone to the system, and aiding digestion is most striking.

ENO'S FRUIT SALT (one of Nature's own products) keeps the blood pure, and is thus of itself one of the most valuable means of keeping the blood free from fevers and blood poisons, liver complaints, &c., ever discovered. As a means of preserving and restoring health it is unequalled; and it is, moreover, a pleasant, refreshing, and invigorating beverage. After a patient and careful observation of its effects when used, I have no hesitation in stating that if its great value in keeping the system of effete or poisonous matter, which is not a household in the land would be without it, nor a single travelling trunk or portmanteau but would contain it.—J. C. ENO.

ENO'S FRUIT SALT.—"I am very much pleased with your FRUIT SALT. I have fully proved its great efficacy by its having entirely cured me of indigestion.—F. Woods, Jun., 1, Tudor-road, Canterbury."

TO EUROPEANS WHO PROPOSE RESIDING IN OR VISITING HOT CLIMATES I consider the FRUIT SALT to be an indispensable necessity, for by its use the system is relieved of poisonous matter, the result of eating to nearly the same extent, and of too rich food, as they do in a colder country, while so much heat-making food is not required in the warmer climate. By keeping the system clear, the FRUIT SALT takes away the groundwork of malarious diseases, and neutralises the poisonous matter.

ENO'S FRUIT SALT.—A gentleman writes:—"I feel quite certain if your FRUIT SALT were known in India and the colonies that the sale would not be limited to thousands of bottles per annum, but many millions. India alone would use more than all England."

ENO'S FRUIT SALT.—M.D. (Edin.) and M.R.C.S., L.A.C. (London), writes:—"I am much pleased with your FRUIT SALT, having tried it on myself. Your theory and remarks are most reasonable. Having nearly died of typhoid when studying at college, being only one out of sixteen who recovered, I used to go in well for purifying the blood. Though I am sixty-three, I have not the least doubt it will be very serviceable to me."

ENO'S FRUIT SALT.—"14, Rue de la Paix, Paris, Jan. 16, 1877.—A gentleman called in yesterday. He is a constant sufferer from chronic dyspepsia, and has taken all sorts of mineral waters, and received great benefit. He says he never knew what it was to be without pain until he tried your Salt, and for the future shall never be without it in the house."—M. HERAL.

WORTHY OF NOTICE.—PALPITATION OF THE HEART caused by Liver Derangement and Indigestion, frequently called (or mistaken for) Heart Disease.

"On April 1 I purchased a bottle of your FRUIT SALT, not feeling very well at the time, and it had an effect that I never anticipated. When I bought it I had suffered more or less, since the year 1861, from palpitation of the heart, but very badly during the last few years. The least thing would produce it during the day, and at night my sleep was very much disturbed. After the first dose of FRUIT SALT, the dangerous, annoying, and truly disagreeable symptoms of palpitation suddenly ceased, and have not since returned. Out of gratitude for the benefit which I have received I have recommended it to all my friends both in London and Yarmouth. At the same time, I feel it a duty to state the above facts, of which you can make whatever use you please.—I am, dear Sir, yours respectfully, 'W. B. BECKETT.'"

"Aug. 30, 1877.—10, York-square, Commercial-road, London, E." CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without it you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation. TRADE MARK—ENO'S FRUIT SALT, FRUIT SALTINE, OR FRUIT POWDER. Sold by all Chemists. Price 2s. 6d. and 4s. 6d.

THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTE.

THE GREATEST OF ALL PIANOFORTES.

THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTES. STEINWAY HALL, NEW YORK.

THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTES. STEINWAY HALL, LOWER SEYMOUR-STREET, PORTMAN-SQUARE, LONDON, W.

THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTES. Attention is directed to the CHANGE in the LONDON ADDRESS of Messrs. Steinway and Sons, their new and enlarged premises, like the recent addition of 400 acres to their business territory in New York, having been rendered necessary by the pressure of the world-wide demand for their instruments.

THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTES. Grand, Upright, and Square.

THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTES. The supremacy of the Steinway Pianofortes in relation to all Pianofortes throughout the world is a fact which has long since been removed from the arena of discussion, it being certified by every possible form of appropriate evidence.

THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTES have been supplied to almost every Royal Family in Europe; have received the unqualified eulogium of every contemporary Pianist, Composer, and other Musician of world-wide fame; the eulogium of the leading authorities in the science of Acoustics; the Academic Honours of the Art Corporations of Paris, Berlin, Stockholm, &c.; the Highest Awards of the four representative International Exhibitions—London (1862), Paris (1867), Vienna (1874), and Philadelphia (1876); are copied by every maker throughout Europe and America who has made any improvement in his pianofortes within the past quarter of a century; and enjoy both the widest distribution and by far the largest annual sale of any pianofortes throughout the world.

THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTES. Merely comparative superiority, however, does not convey an adequate conception of the merits of the Steinway Pianofortes, nor of the complete revolution in pianoforte construction throughout Europe and America which the creative genius of Messrs. Steinway and Sons has enabled them to accomplish. Every improvement in the pianoforte made within the past quarter of a century—the most fertile period in its history—has been the creation of Messrs. Steinway and Sons; and, conversely, every maker, without exception, who has not empirically copied the Steinway Pianofortes has made no improvement in his instruments, but remains a mere reproducer of the primitive and imperfect types of the pianofortes belonging to a past generation.

THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTES.—It should also be understood that no one can form a true conception of the scientific, artistic, and structural perfection to which the pianoforte has now attained who has not seen and heard a Steinway Pianoforte; and, in the words of one of the most accomplished of modern pianists—"In them is found the Ideal Instrument."

THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTES. Typical Extracts from recognized Authorities in Science and Art.

HIS MAJESTY THE KING OF SWEDEN.—"Your beautiful instrument, by its noble tones, excited general admiration at the solemn yearly meeting of December last, when it was heard for the first time; and I will, I am sure, in a very effective way, benefit the pianoforte instruction at our Conservatoire. The Royal Government has, at my request, been pleased to decree to you the National Gold Medal, bearing the inscription:—'Illustri quorum merita laboribus, et the Royal Academy has, in its first meeting of this year, unanimously called upon Mr. Theodore Steinway to take a place as member of its Honourable Corporation.—Believe me, Sirs, yours most sincerely, OSCAR."

PRESIDENT MUSIC DEPARTMENT, PARIS ACADEMY OF ARTS.—"THE PIANOS of Messrs. STEINWAY appear to me, as well as to all the artists who have tried them, superior to all that have been made to this day in the entire world."

HER MAJESTY'S COMMISSIONERS OF THE EXHIBITION, 1867.—"With regard to the Grand Piano, I can only say that the specimens now placed before the public are, in my opinion, as fine as pianos can be. Every attribute of a splendid instrument is here—strength, depth, sonority, brilliancy, facility of touch, and excellence of construction combine to make the Steinway GRAND PIANO the most perfect piano of the very first excellence. Their other instruments are every bit as remarkable."

LISZT.—"The magnificent STEINWAY GRAND PIANO now stands in my music-room, and presents a harmonious combination of admirable qualities, a detailed examination of which is the more superfluous as this instrument fully justifies the world-wide reputation that for years you have everywhere enjoyed. After so much well-deserved praise, permit me also to add my homage and the expression of my undiminished admiration."

MADAME ESSIPOFF.—"The wonderful beauty and sympathetic quality of the tone of the STEINWAY PIANOFORTE, so delightful, and, so to speak, satisfying to the sense of hearing, arises from the perfect purity of its component parts, hence its richness and gem-like sparkle and brilliancy, which, together with the greatest possible volume, depth, sonority, with unequalled singing and carrying quality, render, to my taste, the Steinway tone the very essence of poetry."

"The action is perfection itself—responding with equal promptitude to the most delicate or the most powerful touch; and under the severest trials its wonderful precision, elasticity, and power remain unchanged, enabling the boundless resources of the Steinway Pianofortes to be fully unlocked, according to the inspiration of the artist."

"No other Pianofortes—European or American—known to me possess such extraordinary durability under the severest usage, nor combine all excellences to such a high degree as yours, and in them I have found my ideal instrument."

THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTES.

RUBINSTEIN.—"On the eve of returning to Europe, I deem it my pleasant duty to express to you my most heartfelt thanks for all the kindness and courtesy you have shown me during my stay in the United States, and for the many UNRIVALLED PIANOFORTES, which once more have done full justice to their world-wide reputation, both for excellence and capacity of enduring the severest trials; for during all my long and difficult journey over America, in a very inclement season, I used your pianos, and have been enabled to use your Pianos exclusively in my 25th concert, and also in private, with the most eminent satisfaction and effect."

MADAME ARABELLA GODDARD.—"Your UNRIVALLED GRAND PIANOS are certainly the most perfect instruments I have met with, especially the latest achievement, the Centennial Grand Piano. Their volume of tone is simply marvellous, and at the same time of truly musical and poetic quality, which never changes its noble character under either the most delicate or the most powerful touch; with the touch of the most unerring precision, power, elasticity, and unequalled durability under the severest trials."

RICHARD WAGNER—"The incomparably magnificent STEINWAY GRAND PIANOFORTES."

MILLE. TITIENS.—"I am deeply impressed and very much pleased with your magnificent PIANOFORTES, and consider they fully deserve their great reputation."

MISS ANNA MEHLIG.—"Your PIANOFORTES—with their sympathetic and poetic tone, their glorious sonority, yet wonderful evenness throughout their scales, their perfect and responsive action, their capacity of remaining in perfect tune and order under the severest trials of travel, changes of atmosphere, and of use—I prefer to all others."

MISS MARIE KREBS.—"Their tone is marvellously grand, of exquisite poetic and sympathetic quality, which was to me a perfect revelation when trying the Steinway Pianofortes for the first time, and it is just this thoroughly musical quality of tone, invariably characterising your pianos, which so grows both upon hearer and player, that a cultivated musical ear will prefer the tone of your America to all others. The touch is simply perfect—elastic, pliable, and promptly responding to every demand made by the pianist."

PIANOFORTES FOR INDIA.—The STEINWAY Instruments are the only Pianofortes in the world which are capable of permanent endurance amid the severities of an Indian climate. Not only is each Model—Grand, Upright, and Square—constructed with a degree of solidity very far beyond that of any European Instrument, but also this solidity is an integral portion of their construction or prime factor in the production of their unrivalled artistic qualities, and not—as in all European Pianofortes—a mere external adjunct imposed upon an inherently inferior and imperfect workmanship.

PAINLESS DENTISTRY.

MR. G. H. JONES,
SURGEON-DENTIST,
57, GREAT RUSSELL-STREET, LONDON,
(Immediately opposite the British Museum).
Has obtained her Majesty's Royal Letters Patent for his perfectly painless system of adapting (Prize Medal, London and Paris)

ARTIFICIAL TEETH BY ATMOSPHERIC PRESSURE.
Pamphlet forwarded gratis and post-free.
The following are selected from numerous Testimonials, and from their high authority further corroboration is deemed unnecessary:—

TESTIMONIALS.
My dear Sir,—Allow me to express my sincere thanks for the skill and attention displayed in the construction of my artificial teeth, which render my mastication and articulation excellent.
I am glad to hear that you have obtained her Majesty's Royal Letters Patent to protect what I consider the perfection of painless dentistry. In recognition of your valuable services, you are at liberty to use my name.
S. G. HITCHINS,
By appointment Surgeon-Dentist to the Queen.

Patron—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES.

SCIENTIFIC DEPARTMENT.

Laboratory of Experimental Science,
July 28, 1877.
This is to certify:—That I have analysed the Prize-Medal Teeth submitted to me, and find them to be composed only of minerals of extreme purity. I have also examined and tested your patented painless system of adjustment: it is quite perfect, and is the most successful application of scientific laws, for securing actual wear and comfort, yet introduced. Both physically and anatomically, they are a beautiful resemblance to the natural teeth.

TRADE-MARK. "ELECTRICITY IS LIFE." PULVERMACH'S PATENT GALVANIC CHAIN-BANDS, BELTS, BATTERIES, &c.

RECENTLY IMPROVED.

Approved by the Academy of Medicine of Paris and other Medical Authorities in England and Abroad.

VITAL ENERGY, it is well known, depends upon the unimpaird functions of the nervo-electric fluid governing the whole economy; any deficiency thereof in the system manifests itself, according to the local parts of the body, by a variety of troublesome ailments, such as

Indigestion, Liver Complaints, Neuralgia, Sciatica, Deafness, Writer's Cramp, Loss of Voice,	Asthma, Bronchitis, Paralysis, Epilepsy, Rheumatism, Gout, Constipation,	Local Debility, General Debility, Female Complaints, Mental and Physical Weakness, Functional Disorders, &c., &c.
--	--	---

This is no conjecture, but an established scientific fact, and it must be admitted that the continuous Volta-electric currents of these Chain-Bands, although applied externally, penetrate to the innermost organs, promoting digestion, circulatory, and nutritive functions, and forming their recuperative and restorative work in a silent, natural way, devoid of the costliness, uncertainty, and inconvenience of ordinary treatment, or of any unpleasant sensation by shocks, counter-irritation, &c.

MR. PULVERMACH refrains from advancing statements of his own in favour of his Medicine, but confines himself mainly to quotations from the opinions of competent medical and scientific authorities, including Sir Charles Locock, Bart.,
M.D., F.R.C.S.; Sir Henry Holland, Bart., M.D.,
F.R.C.S. and F.R.S.; Sir J. R. Martin, Bart., C.B.,
F.R.C.S. and F.R.S.; Sir W. Ferguson, Bart.,

TESTIMONIALS OF RECENT DATE.

GALVANISM v. CRAMP.

"Dear Sir,—I, Silver-street, Maninpham, Sept. 13, 1877.
A great blessing to the patient for whom it was procured, as, previous to wearing it, he suffered greatly from cramp, and could not hold the tools he worked with, and had frequent attacks at night in the legs. Since I commenced after, and ever since the application of the band, the cramp has entirely ceased.—I am, dear Sir, yours truly,
"Mr. Pulvermacher."
"E. SCHOLFIELD."

GALVANISM v. INDIGESTION.

"Dear Sir,—Having derived great benefit from wearing one of your galvanic belts, which I had from you in May last, I feel it my duty and privilege to acknowledge my thanks to you. The complaint was indigestion, from which I suffered very much.—Yours respectfully,
"MR. J. L. PULVERMACH, 194, Regent-street, London."

GALVANISM v. HEADACHE and NUMBNESS IN FEET.

"Dear Sir,—I feel compelled to testify to the high efficiency of your appliances. I have derived very much benefit from using them. I am quite free from pain in the head, and have not had any numbness in my feet for a very long time.
I have also consulted a medical man, since I commenced to wear the combined bands. I have no rheumatic pains, and, although sixty-three years of age, I feel fifteen years younger, as I can now walk seven or eight miles without feeling fatigued, whereas I used to be able to walk one mile.—I am, dear Sir, yours truly,
"MR. J. L. PULVERMACH."
"JAMES DOWSON."

GALVANISM v. HEMIPLEGIA OF FIVE YEARS' DURATION.

"My dear Sir,—I received your Chain-Band last May for my case, which is one of hemiplegia of five years' duration. I put it on according to directions, and I had not been in bed half an hour before I felt the effect of the electric power, which was not at all unpleasant. At the end of a week I could use the affected leg as well as ever, and I am now happy to say the appliance has made a complete cure in my case, and restored me to perfect health and strength.—I am, dear Sir, yours truly,
"MR. J. L. PULVERMACH."
"G. B. BUCKLE."

GALVANISM v. NERVOUS HEADACHE.

"Dear Sir,—It affords me great pleasure to testify to the efficiency of your appliances. I was a great sufferer from nervous headache for over 20 years. I tried no end of remedies, but never found relief until April last, when I purchased one of your Chain-Bands, which I wore for a fortnight continuously, and I have never had an attack since.—I am, dear Sir, yours gratefully,
"MR. PULVERMACH, 194, Regent-street."

GALVANISM v. DEAFNESS and TIC

PAISLEY; AND

23, IRONMONGER-LANE, LONDON (THE OLD HOUSE).

J. and G. JOHNSTON, as Merchants, were the first House in England to advertise and introduce CORN FLOUR for the English and Export Markets. They are not now responsible for the quality of any Corn Flour but that which bears their own name.

WITH STEWED FRUIT OF ALL KINDS ;
FOR PUDDINGS, CUSTARDS, BLANC-MANGE, CAKES ; TO THICKEN SOUPS, SAUCES, BEEF TEA ; FOR ALL THE USES OF THE BEST ARROWROOT, AND WITH MILK FOR CHILDREN'S FOOD, JOHNSTON'S

CORN FLOUR

IS THE BEST.

It is rich in heat-giving and flesh-forming properties ; milk contains the constituents of bone and muscle, and the two in combination afford the most perfect and complete nourishment, closely resembling in nutritive value ordinary beef and bread, and in a form the most palatable and digestible, and therefore especially suitable for Children, and Mothers whilst nursing.

The emphatic and voluntarily declared opinion of The Lancet (Nov. 13, 1875), is that JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR is "quite free from adulteration" and "decidedly superior." The same article on JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR states that CORN FLOUR "itself has become a necessity."

The following are EXTRACTS from the EVIDENCE taken by the COMMITTEE of the HOUSE of COMMONS on the ADULTERATION OF FOOD ACT, returned to the House on July 3, 1874 :—

CHARLES A. CAMERON, M.D., Professor of Political Medicine in the Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland ; Analyst for Dublin, Limerick, Waterford, Kilkenny, Galway, and Sixteen Irish Counties. Examined.

Answer to Question 4655 :—"I am speaking now as a physician ; and I think that a great number of children who could easily digest a delicately prepared Corn Flour could not eat a lump of wheaten flour made into dough, or cooked in any form, or even rice flour."

Answer to Question 4656 :—. . . "All my children—and I have six of them—have used a large quantity of Corn Flour."

Question 4820 :—"Would you state that it (Corn Flour) was a flesh-forming nutriment in a very minimum degree?" Answer : "No ; I consider that it would form a very large portion of flesh."

AUGUSTUS VOELCKER, Ph.D., F.R.S., Chemist of the Royal Agricultural Society. Examined.

Question 5664 :—"We have had evidence that some kinds of arrowroot will command a wholesale price of two shillings per pound ; in your opinion, is there more nutriment in a pound of some of those Corn Flours which you can get at about one fourth the price?" Answer : "No. The two shillings is quite a fancy price for a fancy article, but . . . Corn Flour is just as nutritious as the more expensive arrowroots."

Question 5826 :—"With regard to Corn Flour, you believe that the Corn Flour, if mixed with milk, may be beneficial to children?" Answer : "I know that it is."

Question 5555 :—"Generally in conjunction with milk, is it not?" Answer : "Yes ; in conjunction with milk. Nobody in his senses would think of Corn Flour or any of those preparations by themselves."

The following is the Report of the Committee :—

"The attention of your Committee has been called to the article known as Corn Flour, in reference to which important evidence as to its purity and its useful dietetic qualities has been given by some eminent medical and chemical authorities, which, however, is denied by one witness. Your Committee are fully convinced that the manufacture is quite legitimate, and that, like Arrowroot, Sago, and other starch foods, Corn Flour is perfectly wholesome, but that it should not in any case be given to infants without a considerable admixture of milk."

"I have examined JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR, and find it perfectly pure and most excellent in quality. When boiled with milk, it affords complete nourishment for Children and persons of weak digestion.

CHAS. A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.I.,
Professor of Chemistry, Royal College of Surgeons, Dublin.

JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR, being perfectly pure, is not liable to ferment, and keeps sweet in any climate for years.

To be obtained in all Parts of the World by order through Grocers, &c. For Export it is Packed specially with great care.

Some reasons why

JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR SHOULD ALWAYS BE EXPRESSLY NAMED

When Corn Flour is ordered :—

"It is quite free from adulteration."—The Lancet. "Is decidedly superior."—The Lancet.

It is not Rice Flour ; it is prepared at great expense exclusively from Maize,—Indian Corn. It is rich in heat-giving and flesh-forming properties. In combination with milk, it is the most perfect food for Children. J. and G. JOHNSTON, as Merchants, were the first House in England to advertise and introduce Corn Flour for the English and Export Markets. At their own risk and expense, they have been almost entirely instrumental in introducing it as an invaluable article of nutritious food.

The Name CORN FLOUR is unfairly appropriated to articles that are not CORN FLOUR, but cheap imitations.

OATMEAL,

Superior quality, warranted free from adulteration. Packets, $\frac{1}{4}$ lb., $\frac{1}{2}$ lb., and 1 lb., with plain directions for making Porridge, Brose, and Gruel ; also in 14 lb. bags. To be obtained by order from all Grocers, &c.

JOHNSTON'S PREPARED PEA FLOUR.

Genuine Scotch,—superior quality, with plain directions for making Soup, Pease-Brose, and Pease-Pudding ; Packets, 1d., 2d., 3d., and 6d.

"Isabel Miller, I want you to be my wife."

SCENE FROM "MY LADY'S MONEY." DRAWN BY F. BARNARD.

Isabel read the letter. For a moment the shock of the discovery held her speechless. She recovered herself, and returned the letter.

"It is true," she answered.

Hardyman staggered back as if she had shot him.

"True that you are guilty?" he asked.

"No; I am innocent. Everybody who knows me believes in my innocence. It is true that the appearances were against me. They are against me still." Having said this, she waited, quietly and firmly, for his next words.

He passed his hand over his forehead with a sigh of relief. "It's bad enough as it is," he said, speaking quietly on his side.

"But the remedy for it is plain enough. Come back to the tent."

She never moved. "Why?" she asked.

"Do you suppose I don't believe in your innocence, too?" he answered. "The one way of setting you right with the world now, is for me to make you my wife, in spite of the appearances that point to you. I'm too fond of you, Isabel, to give you up. Come back with me, and I will announce our marriage to my friends."

She took his hand, and kissed it. "It is generous and good of you," she said; "but it must not be."

He took a step nearer to her. "What do you mean?" he asked.

"It was against my will," she pursued, "that my aunt concealed the truth from you. I did wrong to consent to it; I will do wrong no more. Your mother is right, Alfred. After what has happened, I am not fit to be your wife until my innocence is proved. It is not proved yet."

The angry colour began to rise in his face once more. "Take care," he said; "I am not in a humour to be trifled with."

"I am not trifling with you," she answered in low sad tones.

"You really mean what you say?"

"I mean it."

"Don't be obstinate, Isabel. Take time to consider."

"You are very kind, Alfred. My duty is plain to me. I will marry you—if you still wish it—when my good name is restored to me. Not before."

He laid one hand on her arm, and pointed with the other to the guests in the distance, all leaving the tent on the way to their carriages.

"Your good name will be restored to you," he said, "on the day when I make you my wife. The worst enemy you have cannot associate my name with a suspicion of theft. Remember that, and think a little before you decide. You see those people there. If you don't change your mind by the time they have got to the cottage, it's good-bye between us, and good-bye for ever. I refuse to wait for you; I refuse to accept a conditional engagement. Wait, and think. They're walking slowly; you have got some minutes more."

He still held her arm, watching the guests as they gradually receded from view. It was not until they had all collected in a group outside the cottage door that he spoke himself, or that he permitted Isabel to speak again.

"Now," he said; "you have had your time to get cool. Will you take my arm, and join those people with me? or, will you say good-bye for ever?"

"Forgive me, Alfred!" she began, gently. "I cannot consent, in justice to you, to shelter myself behind your name. It is the name of your family; and they have a right to expect that you will not degrade it."

"I want a plain answer," he interposed, sternly. "Which is it? Yes, or No?"

She looked at him with sad compassionate eyes. Her voice was firm as she answered him in the one word that he had desired. The word was—"No!"

Without speaking to her, without even looking at her, he turned and walked back to the cottage.

Making his way silently through the group of visitors—every one of whom had been informed of what had happened by his sister—with his head down and his lips fast closed, he entered the parlour, and rang the bell which communicated with his foreman's room at the stables.

"You know that I am going abroad on business?" he said, when the man appeared.

"Yes, Sir."

"I am going to-day—going by the night train to Dover. Order the horse to be put to instantly in the dog-cart. Is there anything wanted before I am off?"

The inexorable necessities of business asserted their claims through the obedient medium of the foreman. Chafing at the delay, Hardyman was obliged to sit at his desk, signing cheques and passing accounts, with the dog-cart waiting in the stable-yard.

A knock at the door startled him in the middle of his work. "Come in," he called out sharply.

He looked up, expecting to see one of the guests or one of the servants. It was Moody who entered the room. Hardyman laid down his pen, and fixed his eyes sternly on the man who had dared to enter upon him.

"What the devil do you want?" he asked.

"I have seen Miss Isabel, and spoken with her," Moody replied. "Mr. Hardyman, I believe it is in your power to set this matter right. For the young lady's sake, Sir, you must not leave England without doing it."

Hardyman turned to his foreman. "Is this fellow mad or drunk?" he asked.

Moody proceeded as calmly and as resolutely as if those words had not been spoken. "I apologise for my intrusion, Sir. I will trouble you with no explanations. I will only ask one question. Have you a memorandum of the number of that five-hundred pound note which you paid away in France?"

Hardyman lost all control over himself.

"You scoundrel!" he cried, "have you been prying into my private affairs? Is it your business to know what I did in France?"

"Is it your vengeance on a woman to refuse to tell her the number of a bank-note?" Moody rejoined, firmly.

That answer forced its way, through Hardyman's anger, to Hardyman's sense of honour. He rose and advanced to Moody. For a moment the two men faced each other in silence. "You're a bold fellow," said Hardyman, with a sudden change from anger to irony. "I'll do the lady justice. I'll look at my pocket-book."

He put his hand into the breast-pocket of his coat; he searched his other pockets; he turned over the objects on his writing-table. The book was gone.

Moody watched him with a feeling of despair. "Oh! Mr. Hardyman, don't say you have lost your pocket-book!"

He sat down again at his desk, with sullen submission to the new disaster. "All I can say is you're at liberty to look for it," he replied. "I must have dropped it somewhere." He turned impatiently to the foreman. "Now, then! What is the next cheque wanted? I shall go mad if I wait in this damned place much longer!"

Moody left him, and found his way to the servants' offices. "Mr. Hardyman has lost his pocket-book," he said. "Look for it, indoors and out—the lawn and in the tent. Ten pounds reward for the man who finds it!"

Servants and waiters instantly dispersed, eager for the promised reward. The men who pursued the search outside the cottage divided their forces. Some of them examined the lawn and the flower-beds. Others went straight to the empty tent. These last were too completely absorbed in pursuing the object in view to notice that they disturbed a dog, eating a stolen lunch of his own from the morsels left on the plates. The dog slunk away under the canvas when the men came in, waited in hiding until they had gone, then returned to the tent, and went on with his luncheon.

Moody hastened back to the part of the grounds (close to the shrubbery) in which Isabel was waiting his return.

She looked at him, while he was telling her of his interview with Hardyman, with an expression in her eyes which he had never seen in them before—a expression which set his heart beating wildly, and made him back off in his narrative before he had reached the end.

"I understand," she said quietly, as he stopped in confusion. "You have paid one more sacrifice to my welfare. Robert! I have you a noblest man that ever breathed the breath of life!"

His eyes sank before hers; he blushed like a boy. "I have done nothing for you yet," he said. "Don't despair of the future if the pocket-book should not be found. I know who the man is who received the bank-note; and I have only to find him to decide the question whether it is the stolen note or not."

She smiled sadly at his enthusiasm. "Are you going back to Mr. Sharon to help you?" she asked. "That trick he played me has destroyed my belief in him. He no more knows than I do who the thief really is."

"You are mistaken, Isabel. He knows—and I know." He stopped there, and made a sign to her to be silent. One of the servants was approaching them.

"Is the pocket-book found?" Moody asked.

"No, Sir."

"Has Mr. Hardyman left the cottage?"

"He has just gone, Sir. Have you any further instructions to give us?"

"No. There is my address in London, if the pocket-book should be found."

The man took the card that was handed to him and retired. Moody offered his arm to Isabel. "I am at your service," he said, "when you wish to return to your aunt."

They had advanced nearly as far as the tent, on their way out of the grounds, when they were met by a gentleman walking towards them from the cottage. He was a stranger to Isabel. Moody immediately recognised him as Mr. Felix Sweetair.

"Ha! our good Moody!" cried Felix. "Enviably man! you look younger than ever." He took off his hat to Isabel; his bright restless eyes suddenly became quiet as they rested on her. "Have I the honour of addressing the future Mrs. Hardyman? May I offer my best congratulations? What has become of our friend Alfred?"

Moody answered for Isabel. "If you will make inquiries at the cottage, Sir," he said, "you will find that you are mistaken, to say the least of it, in addressing your questions to this young lady."

Felix took off his hat again—with the most becoming appearance of surprise and distress.

"Something wrong, I fear?" he said, addressing Isabel. "I am indeed, ashamed if I have ignorantly given you a moment's pain. Pray accept my most sincere apologies. I have only this instant arrived; my health would not allow me to be present at the luncheon. Permit me to express the earnest hope that matters may be set right to the satisfaction of all parties. Good afternoon!"

He bowed with elaborate courtesy, and turned back to the cottage.

"Who is that?" Isabel asked.

"Lady Lydiard's nephew, Mr. Felix Sweetair," Moody answered, with a sudden sternness of tone, and a sudden coldness of manner, which surprised Isabel.

"You don't like him?" she said.

As she spoke, Felix stopped to give audience to one of the grooms, who had apparently been sent with a message to him. He turned so that his face was once more visible to Isabel. Moody pressed her hand significantly as it rested on his arm.

"Look well at that man," he whispered. "It's time to warn you. Mr. Felix Sweetair is the worst enemy you have!"

Isabel heard him in speechless astonishment. He went on in tones that trembled with suppressed emotion.

"You doubt if Sharon knows the thief. You doubt if I know the thief. Isabel! as certainly as the heaven is above us, there stands the wretch who stole the bank-note!"

She drew her hand out of his arm with a cry of terror. She looked at him as if she doubted whether he was in his right mind.

He took her hand, and waited a moment trying to compose himself.

"Listen to me," he said. "At the first consultation I had with Sharon he gave this advice to Mr. Troy and to me. He said, 'Suspect the very last person on whom suspicion could possibly fall.' Those words, taken with the questions he had asked before he pronounced his opinion, struck through me as if he had struck me with a knife. I instantly suspected Lady Lydiard's nephew. Wait! From that time to this I have said nothing of my suspicion to any living soul. I knew in my own heart that it took its rise in the inveterate dislike that I have always felt for Mr. Sweetair, and I distrusted it accordingly. But I went back to Sharon, for all that, and put the case into his hands. His investigations informed me that Mr. Sweetair owed 'debts of honour' (as gentlemen call them), incurred through lost bets, to a large number of persons, and among them a bet of five hundred pounds lost to Mr. Hardyman. Further inquiries showed that Mr. Hardyman had taken the lead in declaring that he would post Mr. Sweetair as a defaulter, and have him turned out of his clubs, and turned out of the betting-ring. Ruin stared him in the face if he failed to pay his debt to Mr. Hardyman on the last day left to him—the day after the note was lost. On that very morning Lady Lydiard, speaking to me of her nephew's visit to her, said, 'If I had given him an opportunity of speaking, Felix would have borrowed money of me; I saw it in his face.' One moment more, Isabel. I am not only certain that Mr. Sweetair took the five-hundred pound note out of the open letter, I am firmly persuaded that he is the man who told Lord Rotherfield of the circumstances under which you left Lady Lydiard's house. Your marriage to Mr. Hardyman might have put you in a position to detect the theft. You, not I, might, in that case, have discovered from your husband that the stolen note was the note with which Mr. Sweetair paid his debt. He came here, you may depend on it, to make sure that he had succeeded in destroying your prospects. A more depraved villain at heart than that man never swung from a gallows!"

He checked himself at those words. The shock of the disclosure, the passion and vehemence with which he spoke, overwhelmed Isabel. She trembled like a frightened child.

While he was still trying to soothe and reassure her, a low whining made itself heard at their feet. They looked down, and saw Tommie. Finding himself noticed at last, he expressed his sense of relief by a bark. Something dropped out of his mouth. As Moody stooped to pick it up, the dog ran to Isabel and pushed his head against her feet, as his way was when he expected to have the handkerchief thrown over him, preparatory to one of those games at hide and seek which have been already mentioned. Isabel put out her hand to caress him, when she was stopped by a cry from Moody. It was his turn to tremble now. His voice faltered as he said the words, "The dog has found the pocket-book!"

He opened the book with shaking hands. A betting-book was bound up in it, with the customary calendar. He turned to the date of the day after the robbery.

There was the entry—"Felix Sweetair. Paid £500. Note numbered, N 8, 70364; dated 15th May, 1875."

Moody took from his waistcoat-pocket his own memorandum of the number of the lost bank-note. "Read it, Isabel," he said. "I won't trust my memory."

She read it. The number and date of the note entered in the pocket-book exactly corresponded with the number and date of the note that Lady Lydiard had placed in her letter.

Moody handed the pocket-book to Isabel. "There is the proof of your innocence," he said, "thanks to the dog! Will you write and tell Mr. Hardyman what has happened?" he asked, with his head down, and his eyes on the ground.

She answered him, with the bright colour suddenly flowing over her face.

"You shall write to him," she said, "when the time comes."

"What time?" he asked.

She threw her arms round his neck, and hid her face on his bosom.

"The time," she whispered, "when I am your wife."

A low growl from Tommie reminded them that he too had some claim to be noticed.

Isabel dropped on her knees, and saluted her old playfellow with the heartiest kisses she had ever given him since the day when their acquaintance began. "You darling!" she said, as she put him down again, "what can I do to reward you?"

Tommie rolled over on his back—more slowly than usual, in consequence of his luncheon in the tent. He elevated his four paws in the air, and looked lazily at Isabel out of his bright brown eyes. If ever a dog's look spoke yet, Tommie's look said, "I have eaten too much; rub my stomach."

POSTSCRIPT

Persons of a speculative turn of mind, who are interested in the following document is for sale, and are ready to give for it.

"I O U, Lady Lydiard, five hundred pounds (£500), Felix Sweetair."

Her Ladyship became possessed under circumstances which surround interest. It was the last communication from her accomplished nephew; and it, which cannot fail to enhance its value in the estimation of all right-minded persons who assist the cause.

The lines that follow are strictly confidential.

"Note.—Our excellent Moody informed you have decided (against his advice) of have not the slightest idea of what he is obliged to him, nevertheless, for reminding me of some interest to yourself personally."

"I am on the point of retiring to the health. One generally forgets something on a journey. Before Moody called, I mentioned that I had the pleasure of borrowing of you some little time since."

"On the occasion to which I refer, your suggestion that you would not lend me the money, the only course left was to take it without asking. I took it while Moody was gone to get me some Curacao; and I returned to the picture-gallery in time to receive that delicious liqueur from the footman's hands."

"You will naturally ask why I found it necessary to supply myself (if I may borrow an expression from the language of State finance) with this 'forced loan.' I was actuated by motives which I think do me honour. My position at the time was a very extreme. My credit with the money-lenders was at an end; my friends had all turned their backs on me. I must either take the money or disgrace my family. If there is a man living who is sincerely attached to his family, I am that man. I took the money."

"Conceive your position as my aunt (I say nothing of myself, if I had adopted the other alternative. Turned out of the Jockey Club, turned out of Tattersalls, turned out of the betting ring; in short, posted publicly as a defaulter before the noblest institution in England, the Turf—and all for want of five hundred pounds to stop the mouth of the greatest brute I know of, Alfred Hardyman! Let me not harrow your feelings (and mine) by dwelling on it. Dear and admirable woman! To you belongs the honour of saving the credit of the family; I can claim nothing but the inferior merit of having offered you the opportunity."

"My I O U, it is needless to say, accompanies these lines. Can I do anything for you abroad?—F. S."

To this it is only necessary to add (first) that Moody was perfectly right in believing F. S. to be the person who informed Hardyman's father of Isabel's position when she left Lady Lydiard's house; and (secondly) that Felix did really forward Mr. Troy's narrative of the theft to the French police, altering nothing in it but the number of the lost bank-note.

What is there left to write about? Nothing is left—but to say good-bye (very sorrowfully on the writer's part) to the Persons of the Story.

Good-bye to Miss Pink—who will regret to her dying day that Isabel's answer to Hardyman was No.

Good-bye to Lady Lydiard—who differs with Miss Pink, and would have regretted it, to her dying day, if the answer had been Yes.

Good-bye to Moody and Isabel—whose history has closed with the closing of the clergyman's book on their wedding-day.

Good-bye to Hardyman—who has sold his farm and his horses, and has begun a new life among the famous fast trotters of America.

Good-bye to old Sharon—who, a martyr to his promise, brushed his hair and washed his face in honour of Moody's marriage; and catching a severe cold as the necessary consequence, declared, in the intervals of sneezing, that he would "never do it again."

And last, not least, good-bye to Tommie! No. The writer gave Tommie his dinner not half an hour since, and is too fond of him to say good-bye.

THE END.

"FATHER CHRISTMAS: OUR LITTLE ONES' BUDGET."

Here is a new claimant for public favour, and one which, if quality and quantity have their due influence, will hold its own among its numerous competitors. It is edited by Miss D'Anvers, whose contributions to literature, for youth especially, are well known. Austin Dobson has in it a charming piece of verse, entitled "Little Blue Ribbons;" and there are other names of note among its writers. It is a pleasant medley of pictures, fairy tales, acrostics, stories, verses, and all that delights the youthful mind. Given with it are three pictures printed in colours, one of which is a chromolithograph of a fascinating little belle, who has just entered her teens, and who, if alive, would break many a boy's heart. The price of "Father Christmas" is One Shilling; and it is published at the office of the Illustrated London News, 198, Strand, W.C.

MAKING THE CHRISTMAS PUDDING.

A week or two before Christmas is a stirring time for most Christmas literature, generally of the lightest, much unlike in this respect our solid Christmas fare, swarms from the press. Grocers' shops become centres of attraction to longing urchins, whose eyes fasten greedily on piled-up heaps of raisins, currants, French plums, and candied peel—lemon, orange, and citron; and "goose clubs," guaranteeing each subscriber a goose and a bottle of brandy, are in full swing. In the theatres troops of children are in course of training to take their part in the coming Pantomime—no transformation on the stage of Tumbledown Castle into Titania's Palace, being greater than the change of untidy, squalid gutter-children into graceful fairies. In private houses, too, gleesome preparations for Christmas are in progress. Poor or desolate indeed must be the household into which the Coming Event does not shed some warmth. In workhouses and even in goals the spirit of the season is felt.

It is pleasant to watch the excitement among the young folk in most houses as Christmas draws near. Take, as an example, the making of the Christmas Pudding. Look into the kitchen. Spread out on a lily-white board are the delicious ingredients ready to be mixed. What bursts of admiration the sight of these, especially of the candied peel, calls forth in the children, drawn thither by the spicy smell that permeates the house. Indeed, Cook is terribly bothered to keep their fingers off the tempting delicacies: to their importunate petitions and imploring looks for "only a little" she turns a deaf ear and hardens her heart. Sometimes, greatly daring, driven wild by the sight and smell, they make a rush at her, striving to pinion her arms and impeding her motions as best they can, bearing patiently her vigorous cuffs, while one of the urchins, as arranged, bears off in triumph to a safe distance some strips of that delicious citron peel, to be fairly shared by all, amid screams of delight.

Mixing time is a great event, second only to that of the pudding being borne to the table in its blushing, radiant beauty, all ablaze, and crowned with a wreath of holly, King of the Feast. All the family must needs be present on this momentous occasion; and Cook's stalwart arms having wrought the ingredients into a glorious compound, all compact of sweets, the others must have a stir to secure good luck to the pudding and to themselves. Each takes his or her turn, down even to the baby in arms. Yes, Popsy, sweet innocent, must add his share to the luck. His infantile efforts, puny as they are, will do more to give a sweet savour to the pudding than those of all the others; just as some seemingly trifling ingredient added to a drink already pleasant to the palate incorporates contrarieties, resolves every crudeness, and converts it into nectar; or as the addition of a simple flower to a bouquet sometimes adds to it a bewitching grace, by toning down some flowers and increasing the brilliancy of others, at the same time harmonising the fragrance of all.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

THE HAUNTED TOWER.

The tower stands out distinct against the sky,
Which burns, deep yellow, with a solemn glow
Clouds of a nameless colour sleeping lie
Above the sunset; to our feet, below,
The little brook steals shyly. All things grow
Calm, as the twilight lulls them: not a star
Has come to keep its vigil yet. Even so
All simple hearts rest, with all natural things.
Only from yonder casement flashes far
A light, that some weird lamp of magic flings,
Troubling the silent water. None can learn
What shadowy hands outstretched to trim it are,
Nor what sad human heart, in sorrow eternal,
Doth in the Haunted Tower for ever burn.

MR. EVERGREEN'S YULE LOG.

Alexander James Evergreen, Esq., of 63, Prince of Wales's Gardens, Bayswater, senior partner in the well-accredited firm of Evergreens, Prickles, and Drye, 39, Dustbin Lane, Eastcheap, City, was possessed of a generous sentiment in favour of the good old-fashioned English Christmas. He could not, indeed, recollect any experiences of that kind in his own youth which might be desirable to reproduce for the benefit of his children or grandchildren in the year 1876. Mr. Evergreen's boyhood and early manhood, dating at the commencement from half a century before, had been spent in the constant drudgery of an ill-paid commercial clerkship, between his desk in a dreary counting-house and his bed in garret lodgings. It was not till late in life that he had become a prosperous London merchant, had taken to himself a wife, and rejoiced in a cheerful home, surrounded with the luxuries and elegancies of the West-End. There his kindly and sympathetic nature found room to expand. He had a vein of romantic fancy in his mind, which might have led him to compose poetry or novels. Business had instead engrossed his activity; and the only books he was familiar with, except, of course, the Bible and those which lay in his pew at church, were the ledgers and other big volumes, in stout leather bindings, kept for his frequent inspection at 39, Dustbin Lane. Yet he liked his daughter Sophy to read to him between his after-dinner nap and tea-time. It was then, we are told, that Washington Irving's "Bracebridge Hall," with its pleasant description of ancient Christmas festivity, caught Mr. Evergreen's attention. The quaint and picturesque customs of that elaborate jollification of our hospitable forefathers seemed to him capable of being initiated even in this degenerate age. So it came to pass that, leaving the young folk all busy with the garlands of holly and mistletoe that were to adorn the dining-room on Christmas Eve, this respectable elderly gentleman sallied forth alone to procure a genuine Yule Log for the blazing Christmas fire.

He called, by the way, at his club, the Pamphernalian, in Trafalgar-square, and met his friend, Alderman Sir Peter Barnacle, just coming out. To him, as a generally well-informed and judicious adviser, did Mr. Evergreen put the question, where could a Yule log be ordered at the shortest notice? But Sir Peter grimly pursed his lips and raised his eyebrows in disapproving surprise at such an unheard-of suggestion for the entertainment of the domestic circle. He had evidently never seen a Yule log, and did not even know what Yule meant. "Can't say, I'm sure," he said, as he hurried down the stone steps, and Mr. Evergreen did not stay long.

As he passed the Admiralty in Whitehall, a young fellow in naval uniform almost ran against him, who had just delivered some official papers there, sent up by his Captain from Portsmouth. It was Mr. Evergreen's nephew, Bob Sextant, Junior Navigating Sub-Lieutenant of H.M.S. "Telephone," now returned from the China station. Affectionate greetings were exchanged; the uncle presently mentioned his errand in quest of a Yule log. "The Log of the Yule?" replied Bob. "I'll tell you where you'll get it. If you take a cab to the City, and go to Plummer's in Leadenhall-street, ask him for the Log of the Yule; I saw it there in his shop last week." Mr. Evergreen took his nephew's advice. The shop was one for the sale of a variety of brass instruments, used by navigators in their abstruse observations of the sun at noonday, with chronometers, sea-charts, and books of mathematical or nautical science. It was a book, not a block of wood, that was handed to Mr. Evergreen by the shopkeeper, in compliance with his demand. That was the "log"—a record of maritime mileage! "Confound those naval jokes!"

Another cab-drive brought our friend back westward to the Strand, where he now strolled along in a discomfited mood. In a bookseller's window, near St. Clement Dances, he chanced to see the notable photograph on view, representing an eminent Liberal statesman disguised as a woodcutter, seated with his axe in his hand, in an attitude of repose, after the toil of hewing down a tree. Mr. Evergreen was a constant admirer and supporter of Gladstone. He thought, for one moment, whether he might not write a note to the right hon. gentleman at Hawarden Castle, to beg for a consecrated bit of timber shorn from the trunk and shaped for use by those illustrious hands. But Mr. Evergreen was a modest man, and did not like taking such a liberty. Though he had heard of Mr. Gladstone's accepting the gift of a walking-stick, he would not ask Mr. Gladstone for a log.

Turning up Catherine-street or Bow-street, he passed the shops of more than one dealer in curious theatrical "properties," and gazed with wondering eye upon their miscellaneous assortment. The costumes of the stage, tin helmets and corsets, gaudy mantles, tunics, and hose of various colours, plumed caps and glittering sword-belts, wigs, masks, and monstrous false noses for pantomime extravaganza, amused him not a little. Pieces of scenery, too, with portable rocks, trees, lakes, and streams, castles, temples, and cottages, that could be shifted into any perspective combination, were laid up in the store-room above. Amongst this medley of stage-furniture he suddenly perceived, as he thought, the very object of his recent inquiries—"A Log for Sale;" that inscription being loggily affixed to what seemed a pattern article for the genial Christmas hearth in Merry England of the Olden Time. Mr. Evergreen at once determined to purchase the Log at any price, and soon agreed with old Sampson Levi, the proprietor of the shop, who pocketed his £2 10s. with a shrewd grin, as his customer promised to send for the article and fetch it to Bayswater.

Our friend with the story-telling pencil, to whom we owe these particulars of Mr. Evergreen's Christmas adventure, further asserts that the conveyance of the log was supposed to require a carrier's waggon drawn by two strong horses, and that six male domestic servants, including the very small boy, were ordered to be in waiting at the street-door, and to carry it into the dining-room. But this theatrical "property" log, the nature of which Mr. Evergreen did not understand, was so contrived as to enter the festive scene in a far less cumbersome manner. The family and friends were duly assembled in their sociable party on Christmas Eve; the generous host and hostess, radiant with the glow of self-satisfaction, stood beside their ample fireplace, and Mr. Evergreen bade the servants of his mansion to "bring in the Yule log." It was then—to the astonishment of all, the terror of some, the merriment of others, and the special bewilderment of Mr. Evergreen—that a singular apparition stalked into the crowded room. The trunk of a stout forest tree, cut to a length of two yards, with its gnarled and wrinkled bark, of the natural colour, writhing in a variety of grotesque contortions, like the grimaces of a monstrous living face, walked in upon a pair of human legs attired in threadbare cloth trousers and patched shoes, rolling and nodding amidst the dinner-party folk, as though it expected a personal greeting! The children screamed and fled before it; the young men jeered, and maidens stared, while the elders turned to ask each other and their friend, the master of the house, what this unexampled novelty and questionable drollery could mean.

The mystery was, however, soon explained to Mr. Evergreen by his more knowing junior relative, and there is reason to believe that the Yule Log was not put on the fire. But the fun of that Christmas Eve was not less enjoyable for the mistake and the disappointment of Mr. Evergreen's simple little scheme.

THREE HOME RULERS.

In ulsters clad, of Irish frieze,
With rough grey stockings to their knee
Great woollen comforters around
Their sturdy necks securely wound,
Deep in each pocket plunged a hand—
Our troublesome Home Rulers stand.

Eyes of dear Erin's deepest blue,
With little devils laughing through;
Noses turned up to those blue skies
Whose colour cannot match the eyes;
And Irish mouths, that forward press
With such a wealth of wickedness!

Oh Patsy, Hugh, and Brian, still
You rule our household at your will!
No mother's word your hands can stay,
Big sisters helplessly give way,
You push your father from his throne,
You stop all talk, except your own,
You storm and wheedle, tease and fight,
And sometimes keep us up all night!

If we would speak of Eastern things,
The fall of cities—stocks—or kings,
The price of meat, Miss Jones's flirtings,
The liveliness that marks grey shirtings,
How Preference Debentures waver,
Or Ministers lose fame and favour—
Your chatter, chatter, comes to break
The wisest statements one can make.
"I want to this"—"I want to that"—
Ever and ever spoils our chat.
And when your father's making out
Where stood some Ottoman redoubt,
You interrupt him with your shout
"It's snowing, pa! may I go out?"

Oh, children, children, be more sage!
You cannot know the cares of age.
If we can't let you skate to-day,
Or go this evening to the play,
Deep and sincere as is your sorrow
'Twill be forgotten by to-morrow.
The woes with which your father strives
May last for years, and sadden lives.

Be less conceited, little boys!
Though he can't match you at a noise
Papa knows better far than you
What it is wisest you should do.
Do not abuse the power you have,
Nor overdrive a willing slave.
If thus you struggle for Home Rule
Tremble! He'll pack you off to school!

LITTLE LOVES.

If there's an age when love is real,
When men are constant, women true,
When life approaches its ideal—
It is the happy age of two.
Ah! then we do not find the tricks
Of grown-up folk of five or six!

The youth, whom pictured here you see,
That pleasant time has passed long since.
He is as bad as you or me
(Don't at my easy grammar wince).
Already, though he isn't eight,
He's flirting at a reckless rate.

He murmurs tender nothings, picked
From Pinnoke—or it may be Mavor;
Sighs that the damsel is so strict,
Nor deigns to grant the tiniest favour.
And see! The rascal's arm is placed
Quite half-way round her little waist!

His cunning hints sweet fancies weave
Of Gretna's dear impromptu chapel.
Alas! 'tis Adam tempting Eve—
You see, his left hand clasps the apple.
But—oh! the selfish little brute!—
He doesn't offer her the fruit!

WHERE HE FELL.

Pray list a story that befell
Six hundred years ago and more:
A gravestone in a sombre dell
The sole memorial left to tell
Of one dark deed in days of yore.

Penruddon Castle then was gay,
As Pleasure there had raised her throne,
And life was one long holiday;
Where now, all desolate and grey,
Bats flit around and owls make moan.

The fairest maid, where all were fair,
Was Ruth, Penruddon's only child;
And Albert Scrope the manliest there:
In truth they formed a goodly pair
As e'er each other's heart beguiled.

But youth and age view things apart;
Penruddon bade his daughter mate
With one who ne'er could have her heart,
The sullen Lord of Hilderstart,
For whom she felt but loathing hate.

What wonder then her lover's tongue,
Wrought upon Ruth, who knew his worth;
He from her lips a promise wrung
To fly with him when darkness flung
Its welcome mantle o'er the earth.

So the next night she steals away,
Soft gliding through a postern-gate—
A prayer she utters by the way—
One kiss—and then together they Speed swiftly on with hearts elate.

Love may be prompt, but keen of eye
And watchful is the jealous wight;
Full soon is heard pursuers' cry,
On wings of wind the lovers fly,
But vain the swiftness of their flight.

An arrow whizzed—her lover falls,
Fixing on Ruth his dying stare;
The sight her broken heart appals;
On him in frantic tones she calls,
And then her mad shrieks fill the air.

Where he thus fell they dug his grave,
And hoped the deed would be forgot;
But some kind-hearted soul, to save
The memory of the unhappy brave,
Has placed a stone to mark the spot.

And here all tender hearts and true,
Who know the tale, from miles around
Come oft their love-ows to renew,
And tend the grave with homage due,
By Love made consecrated ground.

A LITTLE BAGGAGE.

(Suggested by Anacreon.)

Of heroes I should like to sing
But circumstances hinder
My muse from doing anything
That e'er could rival Pindar.
My lyre is tuned for lofty strains,
But Cupid grins and taunts me—
For, muddling all my foolish brains,
A little baggage haunts me!

Though Wellington and Nelson come
Imploping me to chant them
Until they grow quite troublesome
The boon I cannot grant them.
I'm of the sacred fire bereft,
The mystic inspiration:
By what? A little baggage, left
At the Great Northern station!

Yes; heroes, princes, mighty men,
So proud and so poetic,
Who once made thrill my ardent pen
Now find me apathetic.
Their rivals—(fierce moustaches curl, Grey remnants of the crag-age!)—
Two trunks, a bag, a short-frocked girl:
In fact—a little baggage!

They wait their owner; who he is
I do not know, nor want to.
He'll come to seek his little miss,
Her box, and her portmanteau.
Bright patient face! As thus you watch,
Who'll blame my random dreaming?
What hero of them all could match
Your round eyes' steady gleaming?

She waits—for whom? What happy he Shall come, years hence, to claim her?
I?—What a childish fantasy!
I—who can't even name her!
You little baggage! To bewitch
The fancy-free beholder!
Ah, what might be, were I but rich
And you—a trifle older!

MARS IN THE NURSERY.

The "man-destroying, carnage-delighting, wall-shattering" Deity or Demon of War, as old Homer called him after the Siege of Troy, has got his hands full of bloody work just now in Bulgaria and Armenia; but this cruel "Ares," or "Mars," as his Roman worshippers called him, who was named also "Woden" by our Saxon forefathers, claims the homage even of our dear little innocent children in the private home life of peaceful England. They have, in the last six months, overheard so much talk of military slaughter in the daily conversation of newspaper-reading elders, who ought to know better, that not only young Tom, Dick, and Harry, but Ethel, Minnie, and Kitty, are fired with the ambition of martial exploits. We are heartily sorry for this growing disposition of the juvenile mind to indulge in a sportive mimicry of battle and wholesale murder.

Our friend Colonel Campbell, V.C., late of the Ninetieth (Duke's Own) Regiment of Hussars, with five clasps for brilliant actions in the Punjab, the Crimea, and the Boglewallah campaigns, though he has been praised for skill and valour in many General's despatches, which were printed in the official Gazette, hates war as sincerely as any Quaker ever did; for his faith is that of the New Testament, and he is a benevolent and religious man. Yet he has encouraged his grandson, Tom Leveson, whose father (the late Captain Leveson of the 55th) died in hospital of fever, after distinguished services, on the West Coast of Africa nine years ago, to aspire to a commission in the Queen's Army. When Tom and Ethel, as good a boy and girl as ever played together, approach the old gentleman's library table, bearing a small box from the toy-shop, he is in the mood to smile at their harmless pastime. The box is opened, and forth marches a file of Liputian pewter soldiers, booted, and belted, and cocked-hatted like those of Fontenoy or Culloden, with muskets and bayonets of ancient pattern. A little brass cannon, loaded with powder only, but the shot from which might kill a sparrow, is next pointed at the hostile ranks. Young Tom, performing the part of a field artilleryman, is ready with a lighted wisp of paper to discharge a deadly volley against the tiny foe. The good old Colonel smiles; he will not check the dear boy and girl—for Tom's sister, though she dreads the stunning report, is proud of his brave deeds—in their rehearsal of a warlike operation. Tom shall hereafter become a Woolwich cadet, and in due time command Battery No. 6 of the K Division, where twenty or thirty men shall fall dead or wounded at each discharge of the Armstrong guns. It is just as well that he should get an early taste for his future profession.

Tom and Ethel are invited to a Christmas juvenile party, where Dick and Harry, Minnie and Kitty, and half a dozen more, are invited to meet them. High jinks and noisy romps are freely permitted in several wide rooms of the house. What shall they play at? The boys settle this question, in the spirit of the time, by resolving to enact a bit of the war of Turks and Russians. It shall be the attack and defence of Plevna. Little Dick, with a red smoking-cap not unlike the Mussulman fez, stands for Osman Pasha. He mounts upon the arm-chair, while a breastwork, hastily made of other furniture, shelters the defending party. This is the Gravitza redoubt. They ply their weapons to repulse the Grand Duke Nicholas, our young friend Tom, leading Ethel and General Skobelev to the assault. The Grand Duke is knocked down with a sofa-cushion, but Plevna must be captured at any cost; and Tom will read the next day's Times to learn how it may be done. It is now supper time; Plevna is spared for to-night.

A milder and gentler aspect of childlike sympathy with the elders is exemplified by the pleasant scene in the gardens of Chelsea Hospital. The veteran military pensioner, as he looks down upon the little girl offering him a sprig of mistletoe, is evidently much gratified by her innocent attention. Such a genuine "bit of Old Chelsea," as the china and porcelain collectors say, is worthy of honour from young and old.

THE CAPTAIN'S PUDDING.

Christmas on board ship does not seem, to the landsman, a homely, comfortable, or suitable opportunity of celebrating our happiest domestic festival. But where the captain has a wife and family with him, in his own private cabin, it is likely enough that they will not lack materials for the customary feast. A turkey may be kept ready for killing and roasting; the composition of a plum-pudding and a dozen mince-pies will not be a difficult task. The negro man-cook, sometimes met with aboard the Peninsular and Oriental mail-steamers, is apt to be skilful in doing what is required upon these occasions. We can imagine the pride and pleasure of such an accomplished "darkey," whose name might be Uncle Tom, showing Miss Eva a little of what he knows.

PAINTING THE POKER RED-HOT.

The performance of a Christmas pantomime by a strolling theatrical company in any country town requires some preparation of stage "properties;" and here is the Clown, who will presently divert a rustic audience with his laughable jokes and gambols, making a poker terrible with red paint, as though it were heated in the fire. It is to be applied, with dreadful menaces of vengeance, to the hinder parts of a brother comedian, in full view of several hundred spectators, who are sure to relish this kind of fun. The Clown's little daughter, already dressed for her own part as Queen of the Fairies, sits behind the big drum, and watches her father engaged in the queer operation.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1877.

Within the Turkish lines of Plevna shortly after dawn on Monday a military movement began indicating that Osman Pasha had at length reached the extremity of the resources upon which his army depended for subsistence. For some time past the rations of his troops had rapidly diminished, until at length a few grains of Indian corn, barely sufficient to sustain life, were distributed to each of his patient, much-enduring, and all but famished soldiers. The misery which was daily witnessed by Ghazi Osman had become intolerable. The alternative before him was either to break through the lines of the enemy or to capitulate. He chose the former. Sending a comparatively small force towards Openetz to distract attention, he threw the main force of his army upon the Regiments of the Russian Guard, who were blockading the western bank of the Vid, near Gorny Etrepol. With all the courage of despair, his troops surged over the intrenchments and even into the batteries of the beleaguering foe. In vain, however; for before them, now well-nigh exhausted, was a second line of blockade, equally difficult as that which they had surmounted. Osman Pasha speedily recognised the utter impracticability of bursting through this fresh obstacle in his progress, and determined to go back to Plevna. The Russo-Roumanian troops, however, had meanwhile detected the absence of the Turks from their accustomed lines of defence, had approached them, passed them, and poured into Plevna. The Turkish General found himself not only stopped in front, but attacked in rear and on both flanks. During the carnage which ensued he was himself severely wounded in the foot. Further resistance would only have exposed his troops to massacre, and with infinite reluctance he surrendered his sword to one of the Russian Generals. Forty thousand prisoners, four hundred pieces of artillery—in a word, all that Plevna contained belonging to the Sultan—thereupon fell into the possession of the Russian and Roumanian troops made their triumphant entry into the place.

It is no matter of surprise, albeit it is one which will afford general gratification, that the victors fully appreciated the valorous bearing of the vanquished. The Emperor Alexander forthwith placed his own carriage and escort at the disposal of Ghazi Osman; and the famished troops of the latter, no doubt, found, without unnecessary loss of time, such shelter and rest as the Russians could give them. To take care of such a multitudinous host, adequately to provide for them the subsistence they require, to tend, even in a rough way, upon the sick and wounded, of which, before the sortie, 20,000 were estimated to be within Plevna, and to perform the immediate duties which the occasion has thrown upon their hands, will tax to the utmost not merely the resources but also the capacity of the Russian Staff. This will not probably prevent them from following up, with as little delay as may be, the incalculable military advantage which they have gained. It has been the genius and good fortune of Osman Pasha to detain north of the Balkans the entire forces of the Russians and Roumanians for five months. The more southerly portions of European Turkey owe it to him that they have escaped (at least, with one transient exception) the presence and pressure of the Muscovite invasion. He has drawn upon himself, it may be said, the concentrated fire of the Russo-Roumanian Armies; has repelled every assault upon his lines; and has kept at arm's-length from himself, whilst he has detained almost immediately around him, nearly the whole military force which Russia has been able to conduct south of the Danube. Osman Pasha, in point of fact, who threw himself into Plevna—till then unknown—with some 30,000 men, has succeeded in dominating the campaign in European Turkey, has given to it character and achieved for the Sultan more than all his other Generals together. His obstructive influence is now at an end. But he maintained it until that of winter had succeeded him. It may be said, and is said, that the Russians are now free to go where they list. In one sense, this is true; but in another, it can be accepted only with important limitations of its significance.

For the Turkish Power is not yet wholly broken. The season is so far advanced in Bulgaria as to present formidable difficulties to a military advance upon Adrianople. It has likewise to be borne in mind that none of the strong places of the quadrilateral have been yet reduced, and that the gallantry of Osman Pasha and his army has given to the Turks both time and opportunity for strengthening these Fortresses, and for multiplying the difficulties which the Russians will yet find in their way to complete conquest. Enough, however, has been done to show Turkey, if she will listen to the voice of reason, the utter uselessness of prolonging her resistance. The moment has arrived at which she must choose between the ruin of the Empire within a few months, or acceptance of such terms of peace as may now be obtained for her. She has no remaining chance. She herself may be supposed to see she has none of retaining that status which she proudly assumed at the Conference at Constantinople. By yielding something she may now prevent her loss of everything. She has done quite enough to vindicate what is called her national honour. She will never stand higher in the judgment of the world, in that respect, than she does now. She will never, probably, obtain a fuller suffrage of public opinion for comparatively easy terms than at this moment. Foreign allies she has not the slightest reason to expect. If she elects to go to "the bitter end" there is no Power in Europe that will interpose in her favour.

Now is the time for mediation, or, at any rate, for such an interposition of the neutral Powers as may serve to put a close to one of the most sanguinary wars which have afflicted Europe of late years. England, Austria, Germany—and, it may even be hoped, France—may now, with some prospect of success, tender to the belligerents their good offices. But it behoves them to be quick. Other elements of discord are on the eve of mingling in the contest. Servia is on the tiptoe to step across her frontier. Greece holds herself in readiness to put forward her claims against the Turk. Should there be the smallest hesitation on the part of the Sultan to submit to such demands as Russia (held in moral restraint by the neutral Powers) may now impose upon the Porte, not only the outlying provinces of the Ottoman Empire, but the greater portion of it down to the Ægean Sea, will swarm with insurrectionists, clamorous for deliverance from a Government which they detest. The prospect is a pleasant one for nobody—neither for the parties immediately concerned, nor for the onlooking Powers of Europe. If the swiftly-passing opportunity be not seized and turned to the account of peace, there is no saying what aspect the Eastern Question will assume. In such circumstances, it would be presumptuous folly to forecast, with anything approaching to dogmatism, the remote future. Thus much, however, we are afraid, will be obvious to all. Europe approaches the verge of a chasm down which we have reason devoutly to pray that it may not be precipitated. It devolves upon the statesmen of Europe to save the Nations from that catastrophe. Their responsibility cannot be measured. May their wisdom and promptitude be equal to the occasion which demands them!

THE COURT.

The Queen gave an audience to the Earl of Beaconsfield yesterday week at Windsor Castle. Her Majesty entertained at dinner Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein and General Sir T. M. and the Hon. Lady Biddulph. The Bishop of Sodor and Man (the Rev. Rowley Hill) was introduced to her Majesty's presence by the Right Hon. R. A. Cross on Saturday last, and did homage on his appointment. Mr. Cross had an audience of the Queen. Princess Christian visited her Majesty and remained to luncheon. Princess Beatrice came to London, and was present at the Saturday Popular Concert at St. James's Hall, and visited the Soho Bazaar. Her Royal Highness afterwards called at St. James's Palace to inquire after the Duchess of Cambridge, and then returned to Windsor. The Right Hon. Gathorne Hardy had an audience of the Queen, and afterwards, with Lieutenant-General H. and Mrs. Ponsonby, dined with her Majesty. The Queen and Princess Beatrice attended Divine service on Sunday in the private chapel of the castle. The Rev. James Rowsell officiated. Princess Louise of Lorne and the Marquis of Lorne, and the Crown Prince of Hanover, arrived at the castle on Monday. Her Majesty's dinner party included Prince and Princess Christian, Princess Louise of Lorne, Princess Beatrice, the Crown Prince Ernest of Hanover, the Marquis of Lorne, the Duchess Dowager of Athole, Baron Halkett (in attendance on the Crown Prince of Hanover), General Sir T. M. and the Hon. Lady Biddulph, Lieutenant-General H. Ponsonby and Colonel McNeill. Princess Louise of Lorne and the Marquis of Lorne and the Crown Prince of Hanover left the castle on Tuesday. The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, came to London, and visited the Duchess of Cambridge at St. James's Palace and the Princess of Wales at Clarence House. Her Majesty travelled by a special train on the Great Western Railway to and from Paddington, returning to Windsor in the evening. Lady Frances Baillie and the Very Rev. the Dean of Westminster arrived at the castle in the afternoon, and, with the Dean of Windsor, dined with the Queen. Her Majesty held a Council on Wednesday, at which were present the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, the Earl of Beaconsfield, the Earl of Derby, and the Right Hon. R. A. Cross. At the Council Parliament was further prorogued until Jan. 17 next. Lord Justice Thesiger was introduced and sworn in as Privy Councillor. The Duke of Richmond and Gordon, the Earl of Beaconsfield, and the Earl of Derby had audiences of the Queen. Previously to the Council the Chinese Minister, Kuo-Tajer, was introduced to her Majesty's presence and presented his credentials. The Earl of Derby, Sir Thomas Wade, K.C.B., and Dr. Macartney (interpreter) were present. The Minister for Salvador and the Hon. Henry A. C. Carter, Envoy for the Hawaiian Islands, had audience of the Queen and presented their credentials. The Hon. William Stuart likewise had an audience of her Majesty, and kissed hands on his appointment as Minister at the Hague. The following gentlemen afterwards received the honour of knighthood:—Mr. Bryan Robinson, late Judge of Supreme Court, Newfoundland; Mr. James Bain, late Lord Provost of Glasgow; and Mr. Andrew Barclay Walker, late Mayor of Liverpool. Princess Beatrice was present with her Majesty during the ceremony.

The Queen, with the members of the Royal family, has walked and driven out daily. The Duchess Dowager of Athole has succeeded Lady Churchill as Lady in Waiting. The Hon. Harriet Phipps and the Hon. Ethel Cadogan are the Maids of Honour in Waiting; and Lord Bagot, Mr. J. F. Campbell of Islay, Colonel Du Plat, and Colonel J. C. McNeill, V.C., are the Lord, Groom, and Equerries in Waiting.

The Prince of Wales has had a shooting party during the week at Eastwell Park, Kent.

The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh dined with Sir Charles and Lady van Straubenzee at Valetta, Malta, on the 1st inst., previous to attending the opera that evening. Prince Louis of Battenberg was among the guests.

The Crown Prince of Hanover visited the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, on Wednesday, and lunched at the Royal Artillery mess. The Prince Imperial has visited his Royal Highness.

His Excellency the French Ambassador and the Marchioness d'Harcourt have returned to the French Embassy, Albert-gate, from visiting the Right Hon. Gathorne and Mrs. Hardy at their seat near Staplehurst.

The Hon. John Welsh, the new American Minister, arrived in town on Wednesday. His Excellency was met at St. Pancras station by the retiring Minister, Mr. Pierrepont.

The Church of St. Mary-at-Old, Linsdale, Bucks, long disused since the erection of a new church in another part of the parish, has been partially restored, and reopened by Archdeacon Purcy-Cust.

The Revisers of the Authorised Version of the New Testament met on Tuesday in the Jerusalem Chamber for their seventy-fifth session. The company carried on their second revision to the closing portion of the First Epistle of St. John.

The Bishopric of Waiapu, New Zealand, held since 1859 by Dr. William Williams, one of the oldest missionaries of the Church Missionary Society, has been accepted by the Rev. Edward Craig Stuart, who has laboured for the same society since 1850 in Agra, Calcutta, Jubbulpore, and elsewhere.

The parish church of St. Edward, Knighton, has been reopened by the Bishop of Hereford. The work of restoration began in April, 1876, and was intrusted to Mr. Williams, builder, Mr. Pountney Smith being the architect. The total cost of the work, when completed, will be little short of £4000.

The Bishop of Manchester delivered an address to students and members of the Manchester Mechanics' Institution last Saturday evening. Speaking of athletics, he expressed a strong opinion that this branch of training is lamentably overdone; and he deplored the way in which almost every form of sport is getting more and more contaminated with gambling.

Her Majesty the Queen has sent an autograph letter to the Rev. Canon Beadon, Rector of North Stoneham, Southampton, congratulating him on having attained on Wednesday week one hundred years of age. The Duke and Duchess of Coburg sent similar congratulations to the venerable gentleman. He is in the full enjoyment of his faculties.

The charge of brawling in St. James's Church, Hatcham, was further inquired into on Tuesday at the Greenwich Police Court, and the magistrate, after hearing all the evidence, came to the conclusion that Mr. McClure and Mr. Evenden had taken a leading part in the outrage, and he fined them £5 each. The latter defendant was further fined 40s. for breaking down the gates, and 2s. 6d. the amount of damage.

Lord Shaftesbury presided on Tuesday at the annual meeting of the Wimborne Branch of the Church Pastoral Aid Society. Speaking of the dangers which threatened the Church in the present day, he said there were fightings without and fears within, and he believed the time was coming when the Church must be disestablished, though her downfall could never be accomplished if she were but true to herself.

The chief improvement in Grantchester church, which, as stated last week, was reopened by the Bishop of Ely on the 5th inst., has been the addition of a south aisle by Mr. Blomfield, the five windows of which are adorned with stained glass by Messrs. Heaton, Butler, and Bayne. Four of them are presents from the Rev. F. G. Howard, the Tilley family, the Hawkes family, and Mr. H. J. Banyard, respectively. The special gifts cost the donors £500, and the general outlay, which has been met by private subscription, has been £1740.

Bishop Piers Claughton last Saturday opened a temporary church for the district of Holy Trinity, Shoreditch, where a mission was begun in 1869 by the Rev. H. G. Henderson. The Mission House, being in the line of the new street now in process of formation from Bishopsgate-street Without to Bethnal-green, has been purchased by the Board of Works from the Bishop of London's Fund. The new chapel is situated in the Bethnal-green-road, and was recently a butcher's shop. It has been appropriately fitted and decorated, and was solemnly set apart with special prayers for the worship of the Church. It was well filled on Saturday with poor people at eleven o'clock, when, after morning prayer had been performed chorally, Bishop Claughton preached.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The annual distribution of prizes to the members of the 3rd Middlesex Artillery was made on Tuesday evening at the Freemasons' Tavern, under the presidency of Lieutenant-Colonel Lord Truro. His Lordship briefly congratulated the corps upon its improved state of discipline and general efficiency. In the shooting competitions at Shoeburyness the corps carried off four prizes, amounting to £120, besides having been recognised for its superiority over other corps in handling the new 10-inch gun.

The annual presentation of prizes to those members of the St. George's who have been successful in various competitions throughout the year took place at Willis's Rooms on Wednesday night. Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. C. H. Lindsay, commandant of the corps, who presided, said he was proud of its bearing, both in a civil and in a military capacity. The best shot in the regiment is Private J. Fearnhead; next, Privates Graves and Wenmoth. The prizes were distributed by General MacMurdo, who spoke highly of the tactical efficiency and military spirit of the corps, and of the noble and manly and soldier-like qualities of the commanding officer. After the presentations a ball was given.

The prizes won by the members of the 26th Middlesex for efficiency in shooting and drill during the year were presented on Wednesday evening, at the Cannon-street Hotel, by Colonel Burnaby, of the Grenadier Guards. Lieutenant-Colonel Kennard, M.P., the commanding officer, in comparing the statistics of the present with those of last year, was glad to state that the balance was in favour of the regiment. At the close of the distribution Colonel Burnaby, replying to a vote of thanks, expressed himself as much pleased at having been able to undertake the duty which devolved upon him, and, referring to the general proficiency of the regiment, remarked that the percentage of efficient shots in the three classes would compare most favourably with that of the other seven volunteer regiments which he commanded.

There were three prize distributions to metropolitan volunteer regiments last Saturday.

At Beaufort House, Walham-green, Lord Ranelagh, commanding the South Middlesex Rifles, presided, and said the regiment continued to increase in efficiency and strength, and on no occasion since its formation had it been more fortunate or efficient in shooting, more especially at Wimbledon, where it had three men in the Queen's Sixty, and where also it had won the Battalion Sweepstakes. Having briefly touched on the work of the year, his Lordship presented the prizes—the gold medal and first prize being awarded to Private G. E. Even, the War Office Cup (for military shooting) to No. 1 (Chelsea) company; and the Champion Badge and "Rifle and Three Stars," as best shot in the regiment, to Colour-Sergeant Spottiswoode.

At the Guildhall the Lord Mayor presided, and the prizes were presented by Lady Palliser to the 2nd Middlesex Artillery Volunteers. Colonel Sir W. Palliser stated that the total strength of the regiment was 618, out of which 606 were efficient; and twenty-eight officers and thirty-four sergeants were proficient. The prizes having been distributed, the Lord Mayor congratulated the corps on its efficiency.

Colonel Barber, commanding the 9th (or West Middlesex) Rifles, presented the prizes to that corps at the Eyre Arms, St. John's-wood, and said the enrolled strength was 469, of whom 436 were efficient, and eighteen officers and twenty-four sergeants proficient; 154 men had joined during the year, which had been the most prosperous to them since their formation. After referring to the attendance of the detachment of the regiment at the recent camp of exercise at Aldershot, the gallant Colonel presented the prizes. Corporal W. Dobney is the best shot, and received the badge of "Rifle and Three Stars." As in the case of the South Middlesex Rifles, a dance followed the distribution of the 9th Middlesex.

Colonel Loyd-Lindsay, Financial Secretary to the War Office, presiding at the annual meeting of the 26th Kent Rifle Corps, remarked upon the effect the introduction of the breech-loading rifle has had upon modern warfare, and pointed out that the war in the East had taught England that her volunteer force was of the utmost value.

The Earl of Chichester, Lord Lieutenant of the county, presided at the annual meeting of the Sussex Volunteer Association, held last Saturday at the Townhall, Brighton. The report showed that the society is in a good financial position, notwithstanding a larger number of prizes had been given than in any former year. In the course of the proceedings the noble chairman was elected president of the association for the three ensuing years.

In the City Hall, Dublin, the Elcho Challenge Shield, thrice won by the Irish Eight, was committed to the care of the Lord Mayor and Council on Monday. Major Leech gave an address. The Lord Mayor accepted the trust in the name of the city, with some highly complimentary remarks on the prowess of the Irish Eight. The event was commemorated in the evening by a banquet at the Mansion House.

The Lords of the Admiralty have awarded a good service pension of £200 a year to General G. C. Langley, C.B., Royal Marine Light Infantry.

Mr. Cross opened a new middle-class school for girls at Stamford on the 6th inst., and pointed out the importance of the movement in the direction of improving the secondary education of girls in this country.

It was decided at a special meeting of the Retford Town Council on Monday to apply to Parliament for leave to introduce a bill for including the parishes of Clusboro, West Retford, and Ordsall within the jurisdiction of the borough.

A purse of one hundred guineas and a silver salver have been presented to Mr. Coxhead, on his retirement, after a service of thirty-one years, from the post of district superintendent of the South-Eastern Railway at Ramsgate.

A notice has been issued from the Post Office stating that, as it does not appear to be generally known that books and photographs forwarded to the United States through the post are liable to customs duty in that country, the Postmaster-General thinks it well to make public the following information on the subject which has recently been received from the United States Post Office:—"The only books absolutely free from customs duty under the United States laws are those which have been printed more than twenty years, and pamphlets, periodicals, and other like publications for the personal use of the individual to whom they are addressed. Nevertheless any book valued at not more than 1 dol. is also considered as exempt from customs duty, and so are photographs when sent in limited numbers for the private use of the person to whom they are addressed, or for distribution to relatives or friends." If any books or photographs received in the mails from this country are found to be liable to customs duty they will not be delivered to the addressees, but will be returned to the General Post Office. The public are therefore warned against posting such like articles for transmission to the United States.

THE JOWAKI CAMPAIGN, NORTH-WEST FRONTIER OF INDIA.

ATTACK ON AN AFREEDI TOWN.

SKETCH INSIDE AN AFREEDI FORT.

THE JOWAKI AFREEDIS.

This wild tribe on the Indian North-West Frontier has lately been chastised by a British military force. We give two illustrations of an attack upon one of their forts. They inhabit a small strip of independent territory near the entrance to the Kohat Pass, adjacent to the military road from Rawul Pindia and the Punjab. In July and August they cut the telegraph wires, removed their families and stores to their hill fastnesses, and began hostilities. Villages in British territory were plundered and burnt, bridges on the high road were destroyed, mules and camels were stolen, and convoys and detached parties of our soldiers were intercepted, several of the sepoy and police being killed. The Governor-General therefore issued a proclamation against them, and ordered a force to take possession of the villages of Turki and Bahia, and part of the Jowaki country, and to establish a light blockade of the remaining districts. Sir Richard Pollock and General C. P. Keyes, C.B., arrived at Kohat on Aug. 29, to direct the intended operations. Three columns of troops were formed; the first, commanded by Colonel D. Mecatta, to advance from Kohat by the Tor Tang Pass; the second, to proceed from Gumbut along the Gundiali ravine, and to effect a junction with the first column; the third, under Major R. B. Campbell, to cut off the enemy's retreat along the Tumbal hills, and from the village of Bahia. These forces consisted of the 1st and 3rd Regiments of Sikh Infantry, 4th and 6th Punjab Infantry, 2nd Punjab Cavalry, two hundred of the Guides (Queen's Own), and a battery of mountain guns. The operations have, to the date of our latest news, been performed with complete success, and with very small loss on our side. The Jowaki towns or villages of Jamma, and in the Bori valley, were captured, and the forts were destroyed. It is expected that the enemy will soon be reduced to submission. We are indebted to Captain Gambier, R.N., for lending us the sketches we have engraved, which were sent him by friends among the officers who have been engaged in this frontier warfare.

THE WAR: FALL OF PLEVNA.

After five months of heroic struggle, proving that the Turkish nation, whatever be its defects of civil and political capability, still keeps its old quality of warlike valour, Osman Pasha and his brave army have been forced to surrender, and their fortified position at Plevna is now in possession of the Russians. This great event took place on Monday last.

The circumstances are most exactly related by the Daily News Special Correspondent with the Russian army before Plevna, in a report by telegraph to London. He states that "For three days before Osman Pasha's outbreak it was known at the Russo-Roumanian head-quarters that that officer had exhausted his store of provisions and was preparing for a sortie. On Sunday evening Prince Charles of Roumania received intelligence that Osman Pasha was about concentrating his whole army near the bridge over the Vid. During the night General Skobelev found out that the Turks had abandoned the Krishine redoubt in front of him, and also the positions on the Green Hill, where many struggles had taken place. All these positions Skobelev occupied before Osman Pasha had begun his sortie. Of course, he did not keep his information to himself, and by means of the electric telegraph wire running round the line of investment the whole Russo-Roumanian army was warned of the coming crisis.

"About seven o'clock on Monday morning the Turks crossed the Vid by the old bridge, and by one which they threw over the river, and attacked the positions to the north of the western road, which were defended by the Grenadiers of the Imperial Guard. The line held by the Guards extended from the road to the Roumanian positions. The Turks attacked with such fury that in a few minutes the Russian regiment which bore the first brunt of their assault was almost annihilated. They also captured a battery of eight guns which was placed there. A terrible struggle now ensued. The Turks were under the fire of the second Russian line of investment, and of one hundred cannon. The Grenadiers, resolved to recapture the lost guns, advanced, and a bayonet struggle of deadly character took place, which lasted a quarter of an hour. At the end of this combat the Turks fell back upon the Vid, pursued by the Russian infantry, and suffering from an incessant artillery fire. Having gained the eastern side of the Vid, the Turks found the enemy in their rear, and continued the battle until half-past twelve at noon, when firing ceased on both sides.

"Very soon after the firing had ceased a Turkish parlementaire presented himself at the Russian outposts, and informed the officer sent to meet him that Osman Pasha was disposed to treat for the surrender of the place and of his army. Presently Sefik Bey, Chief of Osman Pasha's staff, arrived, and stated that the General had been wounded. On receiving this information General Granetzky, commanding the Russian Grenadiers, accompanied by about fifty officers, crossed the bridge over the Vid, and proceeded to the house, a hundred yards on the other side, where Osman Pasha was resting for the time. The conditions of the surrender, being of the simplest kind, were arranged in a few minutes. They were the surrender of Plevna and its positions, of the whole army, and of all the material. There was the least possible amount of discussion, for the conditions were really shaped by what had taken place in the preceding six hours. Thus, when the Grand Duke Nicholas arrived on the scene, half an hour afterwards, all was over."

The Russian official account of the action and the surrender says:—

"Osman Pasha's attempt to break through our lines was heroic, and worthy of the whole of his previous defence. The Turks fought like lions, but met with an equal resistance. Throwing themselves with all their force upon the left flank of the Grenadier Corps, composed of the Siberian regiments, they rushed into our intrenchments in spite of a murderous volley of rifle-shot and shells. The Grenadiers defended their position with desperation, and when the Astrachan and Samogitian regiments hastened to the spot they, jointly with the latter, drove the Turks out of the intrenchments and took from them a flag and three guns. Thereupon the whole Corps of Grenadiers assumed the offensive and drove the Turks back across the river Vid; but our other troops and the Roumanian forces here took the Turks in rear and flank, whereupon the valiant defender of Plevna was compelled to lay down his arms and give himself up as a prisoner, with the whole of his army."

We are informed that Osman Pasha is grievously wounded, his leg being shattered. The number of prisoners is estimated at 40,000, that of the sick and wounded at 20,000. The trophies are said to be 70,000 rifles, 24 batteries of field artillery, and many heavy guns.

The Emperor Alexander, it is said, was at Tuchenitza, when an officer of Uhlans brought the news—"Plevna is at your Majesty's feet;" to which his Majesty is said to have replied, "But the war is not yet over, for all that." The Emperor went to the army, greeted the troops, and kissed Prince Charles of Roumania, calling him cousin. He then embraced Todleben, the Chief of the Staff, Imeritinsky, and Granetzky, commanding the 2nd Corps, saying to them, "This is all due to you, above all to thee, Edward Ivanikoff Todleben." On Tuesday a thanksgiving service was held in presence of the Emperor Alexander in the Turkish redoubt No. 5, on the road between Plevna and Gravitz, the spot where Osman Pasha had his head-quarters during the siege. After the ceremony his Majesty took lunch in Plevna, and subsequently had a friendly interview with Osman Pasha, entered into conversation with him, and returned him his sword as a mark of respect. The Grand Duke Nicholas and Prince Charles of Roumania slept in Plevna.

The inhabitants of Plevna had been suffering from cold and hunger for a considerable time previous to the capitulation, and were anxious to surrender. The sortie was decided upon by Osman Pasha as soon as he heard of the failure of Suleiman Pasha to make an effectual diversion in his favour.

The immediate military and political consequences of this great Russian success, which has, indeed, been very dearly purchased, are not to be hastily measured. There were great rejoicings on Wednesday at St. Petersburg, also at Belgrade and at Athens. It is expected that Serbia, and possibly Greece, will soon take part in the war, unless hindered by foreign persuasion. The news has not caused any popular disturbance at Constantinople. The Turkish Government is resolved to carry on the war to the last extremity. Raouf Pasha is appointed Minister of War, having been recalled from his command in the Shipka Pass.

The Emperor Alexander leaves the Russian camp this day (Saturday) and returns to St. Petersburg.

In Asia, the Russian siege of Erzeroum makes little apparent progress, but there has been some indecisive fighting near the fortified seaport of Batoum.

We present several illustrations of the War, from Sketches by two of our Special Artists—Mr. Irving Montagu, with the Russians before Plevna, and Mr. J. Bell, with the Turks in the Shipka Pass—besides two Sketches of Moukhtar Pasha's defence of the redoubts at Erzeroum on the 9th ult., for which we are indebted to Mr. R. J. Hughes, an English surgeon in the Ottoman army.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Yesterday week M. Dufaure continued his negotiations for the formation of a Cabinet. It seems, however, that Marshal MacMahon stipulated that he himself should appoint the Ministers of War, Marine, and Foreign Affairs, in order that they might be independent of Parliamentary fluctuations. On this M. Dufaure drew up a note and sent it to Marshal MacMahon pointing out that the principle of Ministerial responsibility rendered it absolutely necessary that the chief of the Cabinet should select all his colleagues, and that unless this principle were conceded the negotiations must at once come to an end. M. Dufaure having been unable to form a new Ministry on the conditions imposed by Marshal MacMahon, M. Batbie was sent for, and undertook the task. His policy is stated to be that of a second dissolution; and to this one account states the group of Constitutionalists in the Senate agreed. At a meeting which they held on Saturday M. Bocher, the Orleanist agent, spoke strongly against the measure, but the majority were for agreeing to it if the Marshal pressed the point. Other accounts, however, declare that M. Batbie could not succeed in his task, owing to the attitude of the Constitutionalists in the Senate. This appears to be the truth, for on Sunday the Constitutionalists in the Senate requested the Duc d'Audiffret-Pasquier to ascertain from Marshal MacMahon whether he would renew negotiations with M. Dufaure. The Duke first conferred with the latter, who stated that, if the principle of Ministerial responsibility were recognised, he should be prepared to agree to a compromise with regard to the selection of the Ministers of War, Marine, and Foreign Affairs. Afterwards the Duke had an interview with the Marshal, who, however, refused to agree to any compromise. He had not succeeded, he said, in forming a Cabinet to suit the majority in the Chamber; he would now form one to suit the majority in the Senate, and, if that body refused to accept it, he would retire rather than renew negotiations with M. Dufaure. The Duke, in taking leave, said he had made this last appeal at the instance of his friends in order to save the country from the extreme measures by which it was threatened. He was in despair to find that the appeal was of no effect, and trembled to think of the fearful responsibility the Marshal was assuming.

Thursday's Constitutionnel announces that M. Dufaure and the Duc d'Audiffret-Pasquier were again summoned to the Elysée on the previous evening by Marshal MacMahon, as the Marshal refused to accept the programme proposed by M. Batbie. M. Dufaure is stated to have submitted to the Marshal the list of a Parliamentary Cabinet comprising the names of MM. Bardoux, Bethmont, Léon Say, and Waddington. The Gauche published intelligence to the same effect. But the Republican papers, commenting upon these statements, express great distrust, and declare that the Left remains firmly resolved to obtain the execution of its whole programme.

Later advices from Paris state that Marshal MacMahon has given way to the advice of the Conservative Senators, and that M. Dufaure has formed a new Cabinet. All the Ministers, with one exception, belong to the Left Centre.

Marshal MacMahon on Wednesday received two senators of the Vosges and several deputies, who presented petitions to him from manufacturers respecting the distress in trade. M. Bernard, who spoke for the deputation, implored the Marshal to put an end to the present crisis. In reply, the Marshal assured his visitors that he was animated by no personal ambition and belonged to no party, being indifferent alike to the Comte de Chambord, the Comte de Paris, and the Prince Imperial. He moreover declared, with much emotion, that he should maintain the Republican institutions of the country until 1880. The petitions he referred to the Minister of Commerce. Replying to some additional remarks of M. Bernard, the Marshal said, "Be assured I am prompted by the best intentions. I shall do nothing which is not dictated by my conscience and the interests of the country."

The Senate on Tuesday, after a short and unimportant sitting, adjourned till Thursday.

The Chamber, by 318 to 163, annulled the election of M. Rabiers de Villars for Castellane; and, by 249 to 227, it adjourned till after the Electoral Commission Inquiry the consideration of the return of M. Jérôme David for Bazas.

A splendid banquet was given at Paris on Sunday by Victor Hugo to the members of the press and the actors who have played in his "Hernani." It took place in the large room of the Grand Hotel, and at a horseshoe table long enough for 224 persons to dine at. It is said that the poet, who is a man of large hospitality, paid fifty francs a head, wine not included. The dishes were almost the exaggeration of luxury. M. Victor Hugo had on his right Mlle. Sarah Bernhardt, who was sole sovereign for the evening, no other lady being present to dispute her empire. The host had for his vis-à-vis his grandson Georges, a boy of six.

SPAIN.

King Alfonso on the 6th inst. officially informed his Ministers of his intended marriage with the Infanta Mercedes, which they approved. The Grand Chamberlain was directed to start with a Royal autograph letter to the Duc de Montpensier demanding the hand of the Princess in marriage, and, on the arrival of the reply, the Vatican will be asked for the dispensation necessary in the case of cousins.

SWITZERLAND.

The Federal Assembly has elected Mr. Schenk, of Berne, as President of the Confederation for 1878, and Mr. Hammer, of Soleure, as Vice-President.

GERMANY.

In the sitting of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies on the 6th inst. the motion calling for information respecting the disposal of the property of King George of Hanover was rejected. In the course of the debate the Minister of Finance declared that the property had never been touched, and denied that he had ever said anything to the contrary in his capacity as Vice-President of the Ministry. In Monday's sitting the bill for the issue of a loan of 125,000,000 marks for public works came on for discussion. Herr Camphausen, Minister of Finance, stated at the opening of the debate that as the Budget Committee had rejected the loan as a whole, but had included the several items in an extraordinary credit, he had asked and obtained the Imperial consent to withdraw the Loan Bill. This was accordingly done, and the items for Public Works in connection with harbours and canals were subsequently approved.

The Provincial Committee of Alsace-Lorraine was opened last Saturday. Herr von Moeller, the Governor-General, in his opening speech, pointed out that the Provincial Committee had been raised by the law of May 2, 1877, relative to the provincial legislation of Alsace-Lorraine, from the position of a consultative assembly to that of a real factor in legislation.

An official decree has deferred to Jan. 1, 1883, the date at which subordinate officials in certain French-speaking districts of Alsace-Lorraine will be required to use the German language.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

The Emperor Francis Joseph, in receiving the Austrian and Hungarian Delegations on the 7th inst., expressed his regret that his efforts to prevent war had not been successful. He was glad, however, that better success had attended his efforts to keep out of the conflict, while taking due care of the interests of the Monarchy. He hoped that Austro-Hungary would still be able to remain at peace, but if it should be necessary to defend its interests he counted confidently on the patriotism of the people.

The Government submitted bills on the 7th inst. to the Lower House of the Austrian Reichsrath prolonging for two months the laws of 1867 concerning the compromise between Austria and Hungary, and also prolonging the treaties of commerce with Germany, France, and Italy. Bills to the same effect were simultaneously presented to the Lower House of the Hungarian Diet in Pesth.

On Sunday the Budget Committee of the Austrian Delegation, after a long debate, adopted, with some slight modifications in its form, the Bill of Indemnity proposed by the common Ministry for defraying the common expenditure of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy during the first quarter of 1878. In the course of the debate Count Andrássy expressed his regret that it was impossible to suspend the outlay in behalf of the Bosnian refugees, which amounted to about 4,000,000 fl. He declared that the Government had done its utmost to enable the refugees to return to their homes, and thus to relieve the country of this burden; but he could never advocate driving fugitives who had been compelled to seek shelter in Austria back again by force to misery and destruction. The Hungarian Delegation in its sitting of Sunday also adopted, with some modifications, the resolution brought forward by the sub-committees with regard to the Indemnity Bill of the common Government.

Count Andrássy has offered to the Hungarian Delegation some explanations respecting the policy of the Austrian Empire in reference to Eastern affairs. He showed that not only treaties, but also force must be considered, for treaties could only be upheld while they could be energetically maintained. As regarded the Imperial Alliance, he declared that Austro-Hungary was the free arbiter of its own destiny, and he repudiated the idea that the Empire would act under pressure from another Power. He was strongly opposed to the Christian populations of Turkey being any longer abandoned to the injurious effects of prejudice.

In Wednesday's sitting of the Hungarian Delegation, M. Pechy, the President of the Foreign Affairs Committee, stated that the Committee, after minutely considering the explanations given by Count Andrássy, had unanimously resolved that the moment was not suitable for a public discussion of foreign politics.

On the same day the Austrian Delegation adopted the resolutions of the Committee relative to the indemnity to be granted to the Government for the first quarter of 1878.

AMERICA.

President Hayes last week sent to the Senate a large number of nominations of officials, including many which failed of consideration at the last Session because of the opposition by the Senators causing their postponement till the sitting was closed; but the Senate, by 32 votes to 25, has refused to confirm the nominations.

As to the balance of parties in the Senate, a despatch dated Monday says that body has, by 49 to 8, admitted Mr. Eustis (Democrat) to the vacancy from Louisiana, thus making the full Senate to consist of thirty-nine Republicans, thirty-six Democrats, and Mr. Davis, an Independent. The Senate on Monday discussed Mr. Mathews's resolution in favour of allowing the bonds to be paid in silver, at the option of the Government. A motion to adjourn the debate was carried by 30 votes against 28. The Senate has adopted a resolution for the appointment of a committee of seven to inquire what measures can be devised to promote commercial intercourse with Mexico, and establish a just and peaceful condition of affairs on the border between Mexico and the United States.

The House of Representatives was engaged on Monday in discussing the Mexican question. The speeches delivered were almost unanimously peaceful. The Congress adjourns to-day to Jan. 10.

In the South Carolina corruption case Francis Cadogan, State treasurer, has been sentenced to two years' imprisonment and 4000 dols. fine; Robert Smalls, member of Congress, for bribery, is sentenced to three years'; and L. Cass Carpenter, member of Congress, to two years'.

INDIA.

Telegraphing on the 8th inst., the Viceroy of India states that in Madras the general prospects continue good. The number of persons on the relief works was 237,797, and of those receiving relief 365,589. In Bombay the numbers were 14,007 and 22,780; and in Mysore, 73,085 and 21,453.

Lizzaraga, the renowned Carlist General, died in Rome on the 7th inst.

Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. Paul S. Methuen, Scots Guards, has been appointed to the Military Attachéship at Berlin, vice Lieutenant-General C. P. B. Walker, resigned.

Captain Burton has started from Suez for Midian, where he hopes to discover a rich mineral country between two ranges of mountains hitherto unexplored.

A storm raged over the Suez Canal on Saturday and Sunday last, causing a total interruption of the telegraph and mail service between Ismailia and Alexandria. Twenty-five steamers were detained in consequence near the Bitter Lakes.

Mr. Crofts has discovered a new oyster-bed in the neighbourhood of Guernsey, having, he says, an area of about twenty miles, the greater part being within the fishing limits of the island.

Mr. and Mrs. Layard had an audience of the Sultan at Constantinople on Monday, at which his Majesty presented a fannam to Mr. Layard, authorising excavations at Nineveh. Mrs. Layard handed a shawl to the Sultan, the present of Lady Burdett-Coutts, who has also sent presents to various other Turkish ladies.

The Union mail-steamers European, homeward bound from the Cape of Good Hope, was lost off the coast of Ushant on the night of the 5th inst. She struck during heavy weather, and shortly afterwards went down in deep water. All the passengers, crew, and mails were saved.—The Mizpah was struck early on the morning of the 7th inst. off Beachy Head by a vessel, the name of which is not known, and went down, carrying the captain and six of the crew with her. Half a dozen men got into a boat, which, after beating about for some time with one oar, was capsized, and the steward, who was washed ashore upon a life buoy, is the only survivor.

The Gazette announces several appointments to the Order of St. Michael and St. George. Sir Charles Gavan Duffy, Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of the colony of Victoria; General John Jarvis Bisset, C.B.; and Mr. Richard Wood, C.B., I.M.'s Agent and Consul-General in the Regency of Tunis, are appointed Knights Commanders; and Mr. Charles Henry Stewart, Senior Puisne Judge of Ceylon, and Mr. John Thomas Emmerson, Companions of the Order. The Globe states that Mr. Francis Clare Ford has been appointed a Companion of the Third Class of the Order of St. Michael and St. George in recognition of the services he has rendered in connection with the Fisheries' Commission at Halifax.

POLITICS.

About 630 persons were present at the banquet given on the 6th inst., at Exeter, to Sir Stafford Northcote. The Earl of Devon presided; and among those present were Earl Fortescue, the Earl of Portsmouth, Lord Clifford, Lord Blackford, Lord Exmouth, the Bishop of Exeter, and most of the leading men in the county of both sides in politics.

Mr. Puleston and Captain Price, the members for Devonport, addressed a crowded meeting of their constituents on Monday night, and a vote of confidence in both members was passed.

A large Conservative meeting was held at Brighton on Monday night, at which Mr. C. E. Lewis, M.P., General Slute, M.P., Mr. Montagu Scott, M.P., and Mr. G. B. Gregory, M.P., were present.

The Speaker, in responding to the toast of the House of Commons, at the Lewes Fat Stock Show dinner on Tuesday night, said, all Continental nations were looking to the House of Commons for an example, and he trusted it might long maintain the high character for which it had been distinguished as a representative body.

Sir Massey Lopes, M.P., the Civil Lord of the Admiralty, in speaking at an agricultural gathering at Devonport on Tuesday night, briefly referred to the war, which he denounced as most wanton, unnecessary, and uncalled for; and he thought the time had come when the Great Powers should interfere and put an end to it.

A numerous deputation, consisting of delegates from the chief committees of the Women's Suffrage Societies, waited last Tuesday upon Mr. Leonard Courtney, M.P., with a view to requesting him to take charge of the Women's Disabilities Removal Bill in the ensuing Session of Parliament. Mr. Jacob Bright, M.P., having been obliged, in consequence of ill-health, to resign the leadership of the measure. Mr. Courtney acceded to the wish.

A meeting of the committee of National Federations of Liberal Associations was held on Tuesday at Birmingham, and representatives from most of the large towns were present. It was reported that Bolton, Ryde, Reading, and Burnley had joined the federation. Arrangements had been made for issuing pamphlets on political subjects by members of the federation. Resolutions were passed condemning proportional representation. It was decided to hold an annual meeting of the federation at Leeds next Easter.

A Conservative Club was inaugurated at Edinburgh on Tuesday evening by a banquet, which was attended by Mr. Guthrie Hardy. In reply for "Her Majesty's Ministers," the Secretary for War defended the action of the Government in respect to the Regimental Exchanges Bill and the warrant on promotion in the Army, and then replied at some length to the recent speech of the Marquis of Hartington in the same city.—On Wednesday Mr. G. Hardy was waited on by deputations of the Edinburgh and Leith Town Councils, the Merchants' Company, and the Chamber of Commerce, with the object of urging that justice should be done to Scotland in the apportioning of the sum set apart for the coast defences of the country, and pointing out how open Leith, Edinburgh, and other places on the Firth of Forth lay to the assaults of an enemy. In the evening Mr. Hardy was present at a meeting of the Working-Men's Conservative Club, held in the Music-Hall. Sir James Ferguson presided, and a number of members of Parliament and others, prominent members of the Conservative party in Scotland, were present. An address by the club was presented to the right hon. gentleman.

The Solicitor-General, replying to a resolution of confidence in the Government passed on Wednesday night at a crowded meeting at Oldham, reviewed the home and foreign policies of the Ministry, and contended that both were well deserving of public approval.

Lord John Manners, speaking on Wednesday at Grantham, commented upon the disunited and aimless character which the coalition calling itself the Liberal party has borne in this country for some years past. Referring to the Eastern Question, the noble Lord said the Government had explicitly declared its policy of conditional neutrality. They wished and hoped for peace, but they would not hesitate to draw the sword if the interest and honour of our country were involved.

The Marquis of Lorne has issued an address to the electors of Argyllshire denying the report of his intended retirement.

A handsome English Episcopal church is being erected at Wemyss Bay, Scotland, by the family of the late Mrs. George Burns, as a memorial of that well-known lady.

The Extra Supplement.

The figure represented by a French artist in this picture is designed for that of the woman at Timnath, whose story is briefly told in one of the most ancient narrative books of the Hebrew Scriptures. It is merely as a work of art, and by no means on account of the subject, that it has been selected for our Engraving. Eastern nations, and more especially in Syria, present in all ages a great abundance of picturesque material, in the way of female forms, complexions, and costumes, and in characteristic gestures and attitudes, which many painters have studied with notable success. From this point of view, it is presumed, the work represented by our Engraving will bear the test of criticism, and so we leave it to speak for itself.

FINE ARTS.

INSTITUTE OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.

The Winter Exhibition of the Institute opened on Monday, and the collection reaches a total of three hundred and sixty-one. In quality it is certainly above the average, a result due to the extra energy of some of the younger members. Not that we think there is any falling off among the veterans of the Institute. Louis Haghe, W. L. Leitch, and John Absolon, were never better or more fully represented. Their joint contributions number thirty-two, and they are as full of variety and quality as ever.

Foremost among the younger men is E. J. Gregory, who has two studies on the second screen of old women (359 and 361), which tell with what freedom he can use the pencil, and yet with what unerring precision he can seize on character. He has several other studies on the walls; but the work through which he asserts his own individuality best is the lifesized head and bust of St. George fully armed and leaning upon his great two-handed sword. The drawing of the hands and of the armour, the modelling of the head and the pronounced character of the colour are all of the most masterly kind. No body-colour is used, and all the high lights are scratched out of the paper itself. From the opposite side of the gallery the face of the Knight is simply lifelike. In fact, this character of strength is carried almost too far—at least, in the purples of the face. Hubert Herkomer, another of the young Titans of the institute, sins in a similar way, only his flesh tints come out mahogany colour. See his head studies (54), (165), and especially his clever and most recognisable portrait study, No. 225.

Another artist, who disdains the use of body-colour, is William Small, as may be seen in his "Wreck" (47), a finished drawing of the noble picture which the Royal Academy hung out of sight at a recent exhibition. It will be remembered how vividly the artist portrayed the intensely anxious look and action of the fisher folk who crowd the end of the storm-beaten jetty, and we can assure our readers that the dramatic force of the subject loses nothing in being expressed in the medium of water colour.

A little farther on is another subject pertaining to seafaring life; but this time the incident is of a joyous nature, and takes place in-doors. An old fisher couple have just sat down at a quaint little table to take their tea, while their daughter, whose sweet honest face we catch accidentally reflected in the glass on the other side of the room, where she is busying herself with domestic duties, when in at the open door, which commands a view of the village and the fishing-craft, comes the bronzed son, and the little household becomes breathless with delightful emotion. The two old people, in the characterisation both of action and expression, are equal to anything we know of a similar kind either in French or Belgian art; and if the author, T. Walter Wilson, who is quite a young man, will only be true to himself, and bear praise like a man of sense by letting it slip off him as unconcernedly as the duck lets the water drops roll off its back, he will yet make himself a name, and that in the art-world, as he knows, invariably brings fortune.

Close to this picture hangs one of James Orrock's charming studies "On the Ure" (110), showing the sweet foreshore of a river and a stretch of lovely landscape. His "Yorkshire Moor" (143), swelling to the left, and bounded by distant hills, is another transcript of nature which will delight the student, as will his "Bolton Castle" (213), which we see asserting itself among the trees in the glorious upland to the left, while towards us runs the cheery river, making, in the winter months, as we can see, the stability of the wood-crowned bank on our right rather uncertain. Near this is Robert Carrick's "Boy Tending Cattle" (207) on a moorland, over which hangs a rainy-looking sky. The figures blend well with the landscape. A little further on hang a very picturesque view "Near Barmouth" (208), by J. H. Mole; a large and important drawing of "The Hay-Cart" (211) approaching us from under a clump of noble trees, by the late much-lamented J. C. Reed. J. W. Whymper's horse and cart and some people on foot coming across "The Sands at Aber, North Wales" (204), has, on the whole, a fine open-air effect. He has forgotten his aerial perspective a little, we think, when he made the hill in the middle distance so strong. We like better his small picture of "Penmaenmawr" (216), from Lavan Sands.

Hugh Carter's "French Peasant at a Well" (212) and his other contributions have all the tenderness without any of the sadness which characterise Israels. Other members who have worked well up to their reputation are Edwin Hayes, R.H.A., Chas. J. Staniland, F. J. Skill, Thomas Collier, Edward Hargitt, H. G. Hine, J. G. Philip, J. Syer, and John A. Houston.

Female art is well represented by Mrs. Elizabeth Murray, Mrs. Wm. Duffield, Mrs. W. Oliver, Mary Margetts, Marian Chase, and Mary L. Gow. Charles Cattermole's delight in the chivalric comes well out in his body of spearmen crouching "Prepared" (71) to receive the charge of mounted warriors who crest the hill; but one cannot help thinking that there is a little stiffness in the air and attitude of the Cardinal, to whom the mailed messenger has just brought "Tidings from the Camp" (100). James D. Linton's "Flag of Truce" (330), and his "Hesitation" (82), a lady in yellow dress and red sash, are both, it need scarcely be remarked, full of the most flowing and harmonious colour; and H. B. Roberts asserts his claim to the distinction of being the humorist of the Institute by "Companions" (79)—a boy drawing a donkey's face towards him in an affectionate way—and better still by "The Orphans" (197)—two lambs, towards one of which a boy in blue smock holds a great basin of milk, while the other, in a playful, bantering way, holds converse with a garrulous raven, which we see sitting on the edge of an iron pail. The management of light and shade over all the details of the stable is certainly not to be excelled by anything in the gallery. On this occasion, however, Mr. Roberts has a rival in C. Green, so far as the humoristic honours of the Institute are concerned. This artist's decorative design of "The Children's Fancy Ball" (341), representing a long procession of popular characters, has less flatness in it, more drawing, and greater variety than anything of the kind we ever remember having seen. See also Townley Green's charmingly dainty drawing of an "Old Door at Antwerp" (223).

Two drawings we had almost forgotten to name, and yet they belong to those that give character to the exhibition. The one is that of the worthy old tailor who sits cross-legged on his board, busy mending an old coat, which has just been sent for, but which, he tells the unseen messenger, with a cheery smile, is "Not Done Yet" (72). The author is Seymour Lucas, and his subtlety, both as to modelling and colour, is the subtlety of a master. The other significant drawing, about whose all-pervading strength and delicacy there can be no two opinions, whose figures are so Meissonier-like in their power, and whose colouring has all the sweet sobriety and reserve of nature, is Andrew C. Gow's great Jacobean gateway through which a group of villagers is looking curiously, for the grand mansion at the top of the unseen avenue—the home of "The Last of the Old Squires" (238)—with its time-honoured contents, is to be sold.

At a general assembly of the Royal Academy of Art, Burlington House, held on Thursday evening, Messrs. W. Q. Orchardson (painter) and P. Norman Sawar (architect) were elected Royal Academicians.

By the will of the late J. Durham, A.R.A., Mr. Rowntree, of Philico, has been left to complete his unfinished works.

A full-length portrait of Mr. S. S. Bankart, the chairman of the Leicestershire Club, has been subscribed for by the members. The portrait is to be painted by Mr. Sydney Hodges, and is to be placed in the new club-house.

Sir Francis Grant presented, at Burlington House, on Monday evening, the prizes won by the successful students at the Royal Academy of Arts. In his remarks he dwelt upon the importance of obtaining truth in art as well as refinement in taste. He said the Academicians considered that the competition this year was highly satisfactory. Extra medals had been given in two classes, and Mr. Armitage was much gratified at the number of competitors for his prize. He added that it was not improbable that ere long there would be an academy of ladies, of which he hoped Princess Louise would become president. The prizes were awarded as follow:—

Historical Painting, gold medal, £25 scholarship and books, James Elder Christie. Landscape Painting, gold medal (Turner), Allen C. Sealey. Painting of a Figure from the Life, silver medal, H. H. La Thangue. Painting of a Head from the Life, silver medal, Blanche McArthur; extra silver medal, Henry Gibbs. Copy of an Oil Painting, silver medal, William Walker. Drawing of a Figure from the Life, first, silver medal, not awarded; second, silver medal, C. Knighton Warren. Drawing of a Head from the Life, silver medal, Edgar Hanley; extra silver medal, Lewis Will Jackson. Composition in Sculpture, gold medal, £25 scholarship and books, Thomas Stirling Lee. Design for a Medal, silver medal, not awarded. Model of a Figure from the Life, first, silver medal, not awarded; second, silver medal, not awarded. Model of a Statue or Group, first, silver medal, Emmeline Halse; second, silver medal, not awarded. Drawing of a Statue or Group, first, silver medal, Bernard Evans Ward; second, silver medal, Arthur William Hayes. Drawing of a Statue or Group, £10 premium, Richard Alfred Williams. Design in Architecture, gold medal, £25 scholarship and books, Edward Clarke. Design in Architecture, travelling student-ship, Ely Emlyn White. Architectural Drawing, first, silver medal, George H. Bayner; second, silver medal, George E. Langford. Perspective Drawing and Engraving, silver medal, Harriette Edith Grace. Composition and Design of a Figure Picture, first, £30, James Elder Christie; second, £10, Henry Marriott Puget; proxime accessit, Walter Charles Horley. These last-named are the Armitage prizes, Mr. E. Armitage, R.A., having given £100 for the purpose of founding these annual prizes.

The Liverpool Corporation Autumn Exhibition closed last Saturday night with a conversazione, and the rooms of the Walker Art-Gallery were overcrowded. The Exhibition has been a great success, having been visited during the three months by 72,000 persons, besides 2298 season ticket-holders; and pictures to the value of £9267 have been sold.

The Lords Justices have upheld the decision of Vice-Chancellor Malins in respect to the long litigation arising out of the sale of Turner's engravings. They decide that Mr. Jabez Tepper (who bought them from the next of kin for £2500 and had them sold by auction, when they realised £35,000) had known and concealed their value from the relatives. The sale to Mr. Tepper is therefore set aside.

VIEW AT NAGASAKI.

The late Governor-General and Viceroy of India, Lord Northbrook, wishing to encourage the practice of art among officers of the army and navy, offered to purchase a work of this kind that should be deemed worthy of a first-class prize, at an exhibition open to gentlemen amateurs of the pencil. Colonel Walter Fane's picture of a scene in the harbour of Nagasaki has thus come into his Lordship's possession, and we are permitted to make an Engraving of it. Travellers visiting that port, which is on the south-west coast of the island of Kiu-Siu, have often admired the beautiful wooded hills of its shores. Nagasaki was the first port, being nearest to China, which attracted European traders; and here is Desima, the ancient Dutch commercial factory, with an adjacent foreign merchants' quarter, built on a plot of low ground artificially reclaimed from the sea. The native Japanese town rises behind, in the form of an amphitheatre, and is still prosperous, though much of the trade has latterly gone to Hiogo and Osaka and to Yokohama, the port of Yeddo.

On Tuesday the Cardiff Theatre was destroyed by fire.

The Fat Cattle Show at Leeds was opened on Tuesday with 1183 entries. The first prize was carried off by Mr. W. Sadler, of Whitkirk, who exhibited a four-year-old animal which had won prizes at the Hull, Driffield, and Melton shows.

A distinguished service reward of £100 a year has been conferred upon Lieutenant-General H. W. Montagu, C.B., Royal Engineers; and a similar reward on Lieutenant-General Edmund Ogle, Royal Engineers.

Mr. Orr Ewing, M.P., who has offered £1600 to the Senate of the University of Glasgow for the purpose that four of the cleverest lads from the schools in the rural portions of Dumfriesshire might each year be sent up to the art classes of the University of Glasgow, has promised that if the scheme is thoroughly successful he will increase his gift to £10,000.

Mr. Edward James Athawes, of Lincoln's Inn and the Middle Temple, barrister-at-law, has been appointed stipendiary magistrate for the districts of Chatham and Sheerness; and Mr. Beresford, of the South-Eastern Circuit, has been made Judge of the county courts on circuit No. 31, vacant by the resignation of Mr. Terrell.

At a diocesan meeting of Episcopal clergy held at Inverness on Thursday, it was resolved to recommend the appointment of an Archbishop of the Scottish Episcopal Church. This office has been in abeyance since the Revolution. The Episcopal Primus, Bishop Eden, was recommended as the first Metropolitan.

Colonel Reynolds has concluded a contract by which the Post-Office Department has adopted the bell telephone as a part of its telegraphic system. In a recent experiment between Dover and Calais, there was not the slightest failure during a period of two hours. Though three other wires were busy at the same time, every word was heard through the telephone, and individual voices were distinguished.

NAGASAKI. FROM THE PICTURE BY COLONEL WALTER FANE, IN THE POSSESSION OF LORD NORTHBROOK.

"TEMPTATION."

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

"We are about to sustain a national loss; but it is one that the public will rather rejoice over than regret. The familiar bit of green silk ribbon or string with which we were wont to tie up our registered letters will, on and after the First of January next, disappear for good and all from our postal correspondence. Still, in depriving us of our silken clue, Lord John Manners proposes to substitute for it a very appreciable New-Year's Gift. The registration fee is to be reduced from fourpence to twopence, plus the ordinary postage, according to weight. Registered-letter envelopes will be specially prepared, and will be purchasable singly or by the packet of twelve, to be kept in stock at home; rural postmen may act as registrars while going their rounds; and compensation up to the amount of two pounds will be awarded if a registered letter be lost in its transmission through the post. Bravo! Lord John Manners.

I hope that the "special envelope" will be a handsome one. In the last and extremely interesting report of the Deputy Master of the Mint, Mr. Fremantle drew a touching picture of the decline in this country of the beautiful art of die-sinking. In engraving the matrices for the design of the new envelope, an opportunity, which may not soon occur again, will be given of proving that the numismatic genius of the Pistrucis and the Wyons is still flourishing. Whatever may be the design on the obverse, the reverse of the envelope should, I think, bear a handsome embossed seal very strongly gummed underneath, to tamper with which should be felony. If the inviolability of this stamp-seal be not guaranteed we shall be fain to return to the old waxen impress and the confining ligature of green silk.

Mem.: In France, when you send a lettre chargée you are bound by law to affix to it no less than five seals, which must be placed in a particular order. The post-office officials render you no help in the matter. You must bring the letter to the office ready sealed; so in the neighbourhood of the Rue Jean Jacques Rousseau and the Place de la Bourse, Paris, there are (or there used to be a few years since) a multitude of petty stationers' shops where (for a consideration) you could get your letters sealed in an orthodox and official manner. There is nothing like sealing-wax—except red tape and green ferret.

Some weeks ago I ventured to make a few remarks in this column on the study of Romaic, or modern Greek. By-the-way, there was a trifling typographical error in the substitution of (if I remember aright) an Epsilon for a Sigma in a little Greek epistle which I had penned pour rire. So far as I was concerned, I was full of the deepest gratitude to the composers of this journal for their being able to decipher my crabbed handwriting at all; when my eyes were scared by the discovery of this dreadful "literal." Of course, a gentleman came up, express, from Merionethshire to tell me, sternly, of my blunder; and by the next Indian mail or so I shall expect a reproachful letter from a correspondent hailing from the Straits of Malacca on my reprehensible conduct.

Let that pass. I am delighted to find that Dr. Schliemann, who, in addition to his archaeological attainments, is one of the most distinguished linguists of the age, has been discoursing at the Birkbeck Institution, exhaustively, eloquently, and practically, concerning a topic upon which I could only superficially and hastily touch. The illustrious explorer of the Troad and Mycenæ is of opinion that little boys should be thoroughly taught Romaic, not only before they commence the study of the ancient tongue, but before they begin to learn Latin. At this I fancy that I behold the horrified, astonished, and incredulous schoolboy tearfully pondering over the tremendous verb Tupto—about the worst model verb that, perhaps, could be selected for conjugation. The French have long since adopted Luo as a type. But the Doctor sticks to his colours. He himself, he told his hearers, was enabled, actuated by "intense enthusiasm," at the age of thirty-four to speak and write modern Greek in the course of six weeks. We are not all, obviously, Dr. Schliemanns; yet I am disposed to agree with the Doctor when he maintains that a boy of ten, of average intelligence, ought to be able to learn Romaic in six months. Do you remember Lord Chesterfield's sardonic allusion in one of his letters to young Master Stanhope, then at Westminster School, to "Latin and leapfrog, Greek and chuckfarthing?" Ancient Greek, teste Dr. Schliemann, should, after a course of the modern tongue, be as easy as chuckfarthing. At what age did the late John Stuart Mill begin to learn Greek? At three or four, I think; but it was Erasmus Attic, pronounced in the manner which enables Englishmen "to understand one another, which nobody else can." I hope that the Romaic-teaching movement will be extended to girls as well as boys. Often, at Constantinople last winter, were my ears charmed to hear the silvery voice of a little English child as she prattled in softest Romaic to her Greek nurse. Surely it is not difficult to teach a small child to lip Sas eucharisti (thank you), or Euphrainomai blepton umes eis kalin ueian (I am glad to see you well). But it is the proper pronunciation that "does it," like the seasoning with the sausages.

Touching children and touching chuckfarthing, a famous dancing-mistress told me the other day an anecdote prettily illustrating the very human character of humanity, however lofty it may be. The lady of whom I speak was teaching her art in a ducal mansion. In an interval of her lesson a very young Marquis whispered to her, "Give us your coppers, Madame—." "Why, what can you want with them!" quoth the amused and amazed disciple of Terpsichore. "We're going to play at Working Men," replied his tiny Lordship.

Plevna having fallen the clubs are, of course, exercised by the revival of the old question "Who is Osman Pasha?" Is he ex-Marshal Bazaine? Or the Duke of Nemours, or some other prince of the Orleans Family? Or the "unhappy nobleman" erroneously supposed to have been recently removed from Dartmoor to some other place of languishing? Is he General McClellan, or Cagliostro, or the Chevalier d'Eon, or the Man with the Iron Mask? My own private opinion is that Osman Pasha is either one of the special war correspondents of the New York Herald (who are all sworn on the Constitution of the United States to go anywhere and do anything)—or else that he is simply Osman Pasha and nobody else.

Mem.: There are still a number of very shrewd people who firmly believe that the General d'Aurelles de Paladine, whose achievements cast a brief gleam of success on the French arms in the war of 1870-1, was in reality the Duke of Annumale. There was certainly at that time, and there may be still, a General d'Aurelles de Paladine in the French Army List; but who shall say that he did not patriotically lend his name for a season to the Duke? More curious is the admitted fact that one of the young Orleans Princes did really enlist in a regiment de marche under the assumed name of Robert Le Fort, and that his chiefs, who promoted and decorated him for his bravery on the battle-field, were unable to perceive the transparency of his disguise, and were apparently quite ignorant of the historical circumstance that Robert Le Fort was one of the earliest and most valiant "illustrations" of the House of Orleans.

Don't you wish that you were one of "Smith's Poor Kin"? An unreasonable outcry has recently been made against the perpetuation to the remote kindred of Alderman Smith, who flourished in the reign of Charles I., of participation in the benefits of a bequest, the value of which has increased from about £130 to £11,000 a year, and which in all probability will ere long be still further enhanced, since a portion of the Smith property comprises the Cadogan and Hans-place estates, which have just been let for building purposes. Several Smiths have protested in the newspapers against the idea of confiscating their vested interest in the Alderman's bounty. I agree with the Smiths; and most sincerely do I wish that I could say Ed anche io. I cannot help fancying that the crusade against "Smith's Poor Kin" (who have just been confirmed in their rights by a decision in Chancery) must have emanated from the Browns, the Thompsons, or the Joneses, or from Smiths not of aldermanic extraction.

The demolition of Temple Bar has begun in right earnest. A scaffolding has been put up round the crazy old structure, and the little old chamber in the attic story, in which Messrs. Child, the bankers, used to keep their disused ledgers and cashbooks, has already been dismantled. I read with much amusement in the Daily News that it was Major Campbell, the esteemed City Marshal, who first discovered the "subsidence" of the stones of the Bar. Unless I am very much mistaken, a certain daily paper which shall be nameless discovered the "subsidence" and the utter rottenness of Temple Bar at least a dozen years before Major Campbell came into office; and the journal in question has (metaphorically speaking) been "hammering away" at the Bar ever since. ILLUSTRATED BOOKS FOR CHRISTMAS.

There is a class of books, without any literary contents whatever, but not the less attractive and full of interest, at least to the owner and private friends, which should lie upon the drawing-room table for constant fresh entries, and for the most frequent and affectionate consultation. This is the Album for the reception of Photograph Portraits, which becomes, in a very few years, one of the most cherished household treasures of a happy family with many dear personal connections and acquaintances, who are probably scattered through five or six towns and counties in England and Scotland, besides the brothers, uncles, or cousins in Australia, India, and America, none of them to be lightly forgotten by those at home who love them still in absence with a steady and heartfelt attachment. It is fitting that the volume designed for this sacred purpose should be a handsome and substantial one; and we commend the enterprising manufacturers, Messrs. T. J. Smith, Son, and Co., of Queen-street, Cheap-side, for such a magnificent production as their new Album du Moyen Age. This superb quarto volume, solidly bound in thick russet or morocco leather, with gilt decorations or plain, and with clasp and locks, if desired, of mediæval pattern, has its pages adorned with twenty-six designs, copied from ancient missals at the British Museum and the Museum of Paris. They are printed in black ink on the finest card-board, forming a border for the open receptacles to hold the photographs of different sizes and shapes. Each page represents a series of characteristic figures, or groups of figures, with appropriate costume and furniture engaged in some kind of action, hunting, falconry, the banquet, the tournament, salutations, ceremonies, sport and games, or domestic labours, after the manner of our forefathers. The idea is well carried out, and cannot fail to be agreeable to persons of a taste for historical antiquities, or to persons of taste in general, who make no pretensions to learning.

"Birthday Books," with blank spaces, in a regular calendar of the year, in which to inscribe the natal days of one's friends, are worthy of acceptance, like the Photograph Albums, for the aid thus given to an endearing personal remembrance. It is a good and wise fashion, which has lately come into vogue, to arrange these pleasant memoranda in juxtaposition with select passages of charming and elevating poetry, often expressives of a tender or pious wish for the true happiness of the beloved sister, brother, or other friend. The Birthday Book of Flower and Song, compiled by Alicia Amy Leith, which Messrs. G. Routledge and Co. have published, is the best work of this kind we have yet seen. It is adorned with twelve beautiful floral designs, printed in colours by Mr. Edmund Evans, and every alternate page contains half a dozen quotations, taken by permission, chiefly from our favourite living authors, besides those from Shakespeare, Spenser, Cowper, Wordsworth, and others of past generations. The Tennyson Birthday Book, edited by Emily Shakspear (Kegan Paul and Co.), is a nice little volume, to answer the same purpose.

It is not exactly as a Christmas book, but as a most superb and beautiful display of the art of decoration in form and colour, that we admire the splendid volume lying next at hand. Ornamental Textile Fabrics of All Nations and Epochs (Asher and Co.) should be very useful to all those manufacturers and tradesmen, and to some intending purchasers or bespeakers of gorgeous furniture and apparel, who desire to choose the finest patterns. This collection of specimens, arranged by M. Dupont-Auberville, is meant for practical business-like service, while it affords to the eye of taste as rich a treat as can well be fancied. There are fifty folio pages, printed in gold, silver, and the purest and brightest colours, which represent more than a thousand various designs, antique, mediæval, and modern, including some of the Egyptian, Chinese, Indian, Arabic, and Persian. Explanatory and historical notes accompany this grand show of decorative styles. We may here also mention Floral Designs for the Table (Wyman and Sons), in which twenty-four coloured drawings, with practical directions, teach the most agreeable methods of setting out flowers, foliage, and fruit, for the adornment of a festive banquet. Mr. John Perkins, head gardener to Lord Henniker, is the author of this illustrated manual of a pleasing domestic art.

The readers of our Journal need hardly be warned that Leaves from my Sketchbook, by Mr. E. W. Cooke, R.A., is not to be mistaken for Mr. S. Read's Leaves from a Sketchbook. We claim an interest in that pleasant collection of architectural beauties and curiosities from many English, Scottish, French, Flemish, German, and Spanish towns of historic and romantic antiquity, which has not yet been forgotten. Its production was, indeed, one of the permanent memorials of proved acceptable work done for the Illustrated London News through a long course of previous years. Mr. Cooke's justly recognised abilities, and deserved success in his own line, make it probable that the second series of "Leaves" extracted from his "Sketchbook" will be received not less favourably than was his first publication of this kind. They appear in the form of lithographs, with short descriptive notes, the subjects of which are to be found at Venice, at Naples, Pompeii, and Paestum, and at many points of interest up the Nile. The sketches of Nile scenery, indeed, are greatly in the majority, to the number of sixteen, and they have more novelty than those of Italian subjects. But the view of the Riva degli Schiavoni, at Venice, is a very charming perspective of combined noble edifices, ships and boats, far-stretching quays, and reaches of calm water, in harmonious scenic arrangement. "Evening in the Lagoons," again, is an effective study of low, broken lights and dispersed fragments of various clouds. Several of the Nile views are delightful, and, we cannot doubt, equally truthful, so as to form a suitable memento of the river voyage, which those who have once ascended to Philæ may be glad to possess. The publisher is Mr. Murray.

We shall always respect the patriotic fondness of a Briton who prefers Scotch, or even Welsh, mountain scenery to that of any Continental region; not that he thinks it greater in physical conformation, but that he finds it more congenial to his mental sympathies. Art Rambles in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland (G. Routledge and Sons) is a volume for whose reason to be cherished with peculiar affection by him whose "heart untravell'd fondly turns to home," whether he be an Englishman or a Scotchman; for we all claim the glories and beauties of North Britain as our common inheritance. Mr. John T. Reid, the author and artist of this endearing book of places, has crewhile performed his "Art Rambles in Shetland;" and we are glad now to accompany him in districts not so far north. The Engravings, by Messrs. Dalziel, were drawn by his own hand on the wood, after his original sketches. Though on a diminutive scale, and somewhat too scratchy, they will bear looking into rather closely; yet we could have wished for a broader style in the rendering of natural scenery like that of the "Highlands and Islands." Of Mr. Reid's writing upon the subject we can testify our sincere approbation and enjoyment. Whether he conducts his readers up the Firth of Forth, thence up to Stirling, on through the Trossachs to Loch Katrine and Loch Lomond—or down the Firth of Clyde to Arran, and up the Argyllshire lochs, to Oban, to Mull and the Hebrides—or into the stern recess of Glencoe, or to the sublimities of Ross-shire, to Lochs Maree and Torridon, to the Isle of Skye—or to the north-east coast, or to Aberdeenshire, or to Perthshire, with its Balmoral and Blair Athol, and all the rest of it—or lingers about the lovely neighbourhood of Edinburgh, unmatched by that of any capital city in the world—Mr. Reid is sure to carry our heart and mind's eye along with him. We shut up his book, at last, with the old proverbial exclamation, "Scotland yet!"

Photography is an uncompromising means of setting forth the rude and hard realities of outward aspect. It may accidentally distort, but can scarcely ever be made to flatter. Street Life in London is not an elegant subject; and the publication bearing that title, which comes out at the establishment of Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston, Searle and Rivington, aims more at truthfulness than beauty. Its first volume consists of thirty-six photographs by Mr. J. Thomson, a photographic artist well known from his representations of scenes and costumes in China and Singapore. There are short essays or sketches written for the subjects of these photographs. Our cabmen, costermongers, dustmen, sweeps, bill-stickers, shoeblacks, chair-menders, advertising-board men, flower-girls, matchvenders, wandering musicians, and other classes, more or less addicted to precarious ways of getting a living, pass in turn before the photographer's optic lens. Mr. Adolphe Smith has a few items of curious information to give us upon each subject.

We must defer to next week the notices of bound yearly volumes of serial illustrated works and periodicals, with a few of the Christmas romances and fairy tales.

"TEMPTATION."

This original drawing expresses the conflict of motives in the mind of a young man, probably an Italian of the Middle Ages, whom the wicked old nobleman or statesman seeks to hire, with a bribe of money, for the assassin's hateful work. Such practices, as we read in history, were not at all uncommon in the different nations of Christendom three or four centuries ago:—

Blood hath been shed ere now, in the olden time,
Ere human statute purged the gentle wail,
Aye, and since too, murders have been performed!

But there is still hope for the soul of this tempted youth, if he be inspired with the virtuous resolution to abhor and reject the price of an infamous deed, and to defy the anger of a wealthy and powerful lord.

THE LONDON DIRECTORY.

The new yearly volume of the "Post-Office London Directory," for 1878, published by Messrs. Kelly and Co., is corrected up to the month of November. This is the seventy-ninth annual publication; and the amazing growth of London, since the beginning of the nineteenth century, from the time when a poet called it "opulent, enlarged, and still-increasing London," is shown by the huge thickness of this volume, and by the multitudinous names and addresses given in its 2627 closely-printed pages. The area comprised in the "London Directory," exclusive of the adjacent outer districts which are dealt with in the "London Suburban Directory," extends about nine miles and a half from west to east, and six miles from north to south. It thus includes Kensington and Chelsea, to the west; Bow, Cubitt Town, and Blackheath, to the east; but not Fulham and Hammer-smith, in the one direction, or Greenwich, in the other. In like manner, to the north, it takes in Highbury and Holloway, but not Hampstead, Highgate, Hornsey, or Hackney; while, to the south, Kennington, Walworth, Bermondsey, and Deptford are included, but not Clapham or Brixton. These places, with all others to a distance of twelve miles around the General Post Office, will be found treated with equally minute precision in the "London Suburban Directory;" beyond which lies the realm of the Six Home Counties' Directory, for Middlesex, Surrey, Kent, Sussex, Essex, and Herts, completing what may be called the metropolitan province of England. The London Directory, as everybody who has used it—and everybody in London has often used it—will be perfectly aware, consists, first, of an official directory; next, of a street directory, then a commercial directory, a directory of tradesmen's shops, a directory of lawyers; a "Court directory," showing all private residences of the upper and middle classes; and the Parliamentary, postal, City, clerical, conveyances, bank, and assurance offices' special directories. These are indispensable helps to business and society in such a world of houses and people.

The Recordship of Bury St. Edmunds is vacant in consequence of the death of Mr. Serjeant Tozer, LL.D., Fellow of Caius College, Cambridge.

NOVELS.

Adulteration is generally defended by the perpetrators thereof on the ground that the public like it, and prefer adulterated to unadulterated wares; and there is some reason in the defence. Indeed, it is possible that Sir Wilfrid Lawson and other champions of total abstinence would do more for their cause by bringing about a sale of pure, unqualified wine and other liquors than by passing any number of permissive bills; and, as in the case of what they drink, so in the case of what they read, especially novels, the public are wont to prefer "doctored stuff" to the good, sound, genuine literature to be found, for instance, in Erema; or, My Father's Sin, by R. D. Blackmore (Smith, Elder, and Co.), and in other works by the same author. Not that he is, by any means, altogether neglected; the various editions through which his novels pass, are, fortunately, evidence to the contrary. But he is not so popular as he ought to be, if observation may be trusted; that is to say, the demand for his works is not proportionate to the conscientious care he, apparently, bestows upon the literary composition of them. In a word, they are, for the most part, too good for the profane vulgar. The mere story appears to be, in his eyes, a matter of small consequence compared with elaborate study of character, minute and accurate description, selection of idiomatic expressions to suit persons and places; and with other points, wherein the art of the storyteller is subordinated to that of the practised writer and master of language. And this peculiarity of his is more than usually noticeable in "Erema." To tell the round truth, it requires an effort to keep attention alive through all the many pages of the replete three volumes. Not that the effort will be unrewarded; but that the ordinary novel-reader is not equal to such a strain. Take the novel bit by bit, and it is as excellent as the author's novels always are; take it as a whole, as a piece of continuous entertainment, and the author's hold of the reader's interest, generally a somewhat loose hold, save at intervals, is very much looser than heretofore. He is addicted, moreover, as he testifies in the present case, to the autobiographical form of narration, which very often detracts from dramatic force by interfering with the impressiveness of an independent development. His humour, moreover, always somewhat grim and sardonic, not only in the present instance exhibits both those qualities intensified, but occasionally degenerates into ponderous ineptitude, and is sometimes wrapped up in what looks very like an affectation of archaic disguise or a studied assumption of obscurity. Nor can it be said that Erema, the heroine and narratrix, has personal characteristics so charming as to draw one irresistibly after her through these closely-printed volumes, or that she has any very novel or startling secret to unfold. And when she does, as she not unfrequently does, make a remark which is noteworthy as coming from the lips of so ordinary and colourless a personage, it is quite plain—too plain—that she is merely the mouthpiece of the author who created her. Let us now turn to the more grateful and graceful task of touching upon those portions of his book in which the author has amply vindicated his claim to be measured by the high standard applied to the masters of his craft. Whatever scenes are laid, and many of them are laid, in California and other Transatlantic regions, evince, so far as the aspect of Nature is concerned, such admirable powers of description as can be acquired only by constant, sympathetic communion with the spirit pervading country life, combined with incessant observation of whatever is grand and picturesque, as well as moody and changeable, in earth and sea and sky. And the same subtle grasp, the same wide knowledge, the same minute treatment, the same skilfully careless exposition of petty causes about to produce tremendous effects, the same command of diction, are equally noteworthy, whenever the scenes shift to England, whether to Bruntsea, or to Shorford on the river Moon, or elsewhere. All the personages, too, with the exception of the somewhat vapid Erema and of her extremely melodramatic, illegitimate kinsman, are not only hit off, however slight the sketches may be, in a very vivid and distinctive style, but are invested with qualities which, for the most part, either make the heart warm towards them or provide a considerable fund of amusement, and, in either case, bear witness to the originality and variety, no less than to the vigour and fecundity, of the author's creative faculty. In Uncle Sam and Ephraim we have a homely but a truly noble pair of relatives. In Lord Castlewood we have a touching portrait of one who might be termed a hero as well as a martyr; and in Major Hockin we have a gallant gentleman, whose manly and truly Christian generosity, in spite of all his puerile eccentricity, is made to reveal itself by a single telling stroke in a very trying hour. And the minor characters are handled, in their degree, to equally good effect. Many also are the striking situations impressively portrayed, with a happy intermixture of light and shade, picturesqueness and pathos. The chief of these belong to the episodes in which the nugget is found, the Mexican "greasers" play their brief part, the interview takes place between Erema and the old sexton, and the miller, for her sake and for his daughter's memory's sake, consents to drain the river Moon. Taken piecemeal in this way, there are so many gems in the story that it is difficult to understand how the whole can appear, as it certainly does, a little deficient in brilliancy.

Considerable art is shown by Mr. Dutton Cook in giving a distinct individuality not only to the various characters in his new work of fiction, Doubleday's Children (Sampson Low and Co.), but also to each of the three persons who are supposed to tell the story. The raconteurs are Basil, Nicholas, and Doris Doubleday, the three children of an impecunious architect, who dies in a debtors' prison, throwing them on the world. Rather quiet are the early chapters in which the dreamy and poetical Basil sketches their uneventful childhood up to the period when the death of their father sends them branching off into three separate roads. Doris, who is a beautiful girl, finds home and comfort under the roof of an old but unsuccessful admirer of her mother, Mr. Leveridge, a painter of the Eddy school. She drifts into an engagement with her benefactor, but meets with her fate in a younger suitor, one Monsieur Riel, at once a copyist of paintings in the National Gallery and a conspirator against Louis Philippe. Her growing love for this handsome young refugee is delicately delineated in the narrative of Doris herself, as is her runaway marriage with him. When her elder brother, Nicholas, takes up the thread of the discourse, there is a change of style, the laid, matter-of-fact manner of the young banker being in strong contrast alike to the sympathetic confessions of Doris and to the gentle writings of Basil, who becomes a poet and a journalist on the staff of a paper of "advanced views," edited by a visionary enthusiast, Mr. Grisdale. It would not be fair to the author to divulge more of the plot; but it may be mentioned that when once Mr. Dutton Cook gets fairly into the swing of his story he keeps up the interest well, reserving the most exciting incidents for the last of the three volumes. Lightly though the tale is told, there is abundant evidence that Mr. Cook has deeply studied the social life of the troublous and revolutionary period which culminated with the Chartist fiasco here, and with the dethronement of Louis Philippe in Paris. And the characters of the firebrands who, both in London and in Paris, essayed to right the wrongs of their fellow-countrymen by acts of violence are limned with especial power and impartiality, we had almost said sympathy. Particularly vivid is the description of the Republican rising in the French capital in '48; and, turning from the tragedy to the comedy of "Doubleday's Children," the chapters devoted to Doris's interview with the elocutionary Turveydrop, and to her appearance as Julia, in "The Hunchback," appear to be equally lifelike, and are certainly entertaining. Mr. Dutton Cook's latest novel is, in fine, one that we can strongly recommend, the unusual manner in which the story is skilfully told adding to its literary value.

Have we not all, in our time, been held spell-bound whilst Captain Mayne Reid has interested us in the fortunes of his heroines, who, taken captive by Indians or prairie outlaws, and hurried on to goodness knows what doom, are invariably tracked by the bravest and most fearless of heroes; and, after encountering hairbreadth 'scapes of the most thrilling description, are rescued in the nick of time, and restored to the arms of their lovers? Those curious to know how the same vigorous hand manipulates the somewhat humdrum life of this England of ours, and lashes its smooth surface into fury, will find what they seek in the three volumes of incident and adventure which Captain Mayne Reid has entitled Gwen Wynn: A Romance of the Wye (Tinsley Brothers). The river Wye (to which the author has written a warm invocation) runs like a silver thread through this eventful story; and some who may find the rather sensational fare too strong for their palates will welcome each reappearance of the picturesque stream whereon Captain Rycroft first meets the fair and radiant Gwendoline, with the "blue-grey eyes, and hair of that chrome-yellow almost peculiar to the Cymri." Save that she is wilful and venturesome as any heiress has a right to be, neither Gwendoline Wynn nor her gallant wooer can be taken exception to; but it must be confessed that the exigencies of serial publication have seemingly induced the author to include among his dramatis personæ some few black sheep, who, though they may not be deemed out of place when they spring up amid the wild and luxuriant growth of tropical America, appear to have wandered from their natural pastures when found straying into a quiet English county. Fit society for a community of outlaws, the Murdocks who plot to get possession of Gwendoline's estate of £10,000 a year, the unscrupulous (and, we should hope, impossible) priest who aids them, and Coracle Dick, are villains who are surely not at home on the banks of the Wye. But the necessities of a novelist know no law. Plot must be conceived, and story spun. And if the reader should fancy "Gwen Wynn" possesses a superabundance of excitement (murder, abduction, and mystery) for a story of modern England, some excuse may be found in the fact that the pen which wrote it has been employed for wellnigh a lifetime in picturing the stirring incidents of "The Rifle Rangers" and numberless other Transatlantic tales of world-wide popularity. As minor blemishes, a few errors, probably printers' errors, in the spelling of French words should be pointed out. It is fair to add that the plot is constructed with much skill, that the dark shadows on the Wye are relieved by bright glimpses of summer light, and that virtue, after being tried by many vicissitudes, triumphs over villainy in the end.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The Marquis of Salisbury has accepted the invitation of the committee of the Newspaper Press Fund to take the chair at their next annual dinner.

The Rev. Charles Mackenzie, Prebendary of St. Paul's and Rector of All Hallows, Lombard-street, has been elected Master of the Haberdashers' Company.

The House of Commons Telegraph Office is about to be connected with the Central Telegraph Office by means of a pneumatic tube.

Dr. Frankland reports that the Thames waters supplied to London during November were efficiently filtered previous to delivery, and of medium quality as regards organic impurity.

The Metropolitan Board of Works had another discussion last week on the question of water supply, and approved the preamble of the bill which is to be proceeded with next Session.

The Duke of Richmond and Gordon presided yesterday week at the annual dinner of the London Maryshire Club, which was held in the St. James's Restaurant. About 180 gentlemen were present.

Preparations were begun on Wednesday for the removal of Temple Bar. The scaffolding will be completed on both sides, so that the whole structure can be taken down and removed without causing any interference with the traffic.

The twelfth annual report of the Council of the Central Chamber of Agriculture states that forty-nine chambers of agriculture and farmers' clubs are now in association contributing to its funds, and sending members to its meetings.

The annual meeting of the London Auxiliary of the United Kingdom Alliance was held on Monday evening at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, under the presidency of Dr. B. W. Richardson, when resolutions in favour of the Permissive Bill were adopted.

The usual meeting of the Farmers' Club preceding the Christmas recess took place on Monday evening at the Caledonian Hotel, Adelphi. The subject for discussion was the most profitable system of feeding cattle, and this was introduced by Mr. Mechi.

An exhibition of sporting and other dogs, under the auspices of the Kennel Club, has been held this week at the Alexandra Palace, and is reported to be one of the best ever held, both in numbers and quality, and in keenness of competition. The exhibition included 1200 animals, arranged in 111 classes.

The forty-sixth annual Christmas performance of Handel's "Messiah," given by the Sacred Harmonic Society, will take place at Exeter Hall next Friday, under the direction of Sir Michael Costa. Mrs. Osgood, Miss Julia Elton, Mr. Vernon Rigby, and Mr. Santley are the principal vocalists.

The Drapers' Company have offered £100 a year for two years to the Yorkshire College towards the cost of "instruction in practical coal mining;" and have voted twenty-five guineas for the purpose of assisting the Rev. H. Solly, Principal of the Artisans' Institute, to establish technical carpentry classes in various parts of the metropolis on the model of that which has proved so successful at the above institute.

A complimentary banquet to Lord Justice Thesiger, on his elevation to the Bench, was given on Wednesday night by the members of the South-Eastern Circuit, at the Albion Tavern, Aldersgate-street. The guests numbered 150. Mr. Montagu Chambers, Q.C., took the chair, and was supported by Lord Justice Bramwell, Baron Pollock, Mr. Justice Denman, Sir James Hannen, Sir Henry Hawkins, and others.

A hundred members of the recent Conference of Librarians have united in presenting to Mr. E. B. Nicholson, Librarian of the London Institution, a gold watch, as a recognition of his services in originating the conference and aiding its success.

At the weekly meeting of the School Board for London on Wednesday, Sir Charles Reed presiding, a report was presented by the Finance Committee setting forth the probable amounts which the Board will require to borrow from the Public Works Loan Commissioners during the year beginning April next, and a resolution was passed requesting the Commissioners to set aside £900,000 as the amount which may be asked for.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the number of paupers at the end of the first week of December was 81,986, of whom 39,744 were in workhouses and 42,242 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, these figures show a decrease of 821, 4250, and 13,013 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 746, of whom 532 were men, 176 women, and 38 children.

The Lord Mayor presided last Monday at the fifteenth annual meeting of the subscribers of the Surgical Aid Society, which was held at the Cannon-street Hotel. The permanent income of the society in the form of annual subscriptions during the past year amounted to £1519, while the amount received for life and special subscriptions reached £1282, being considerably more than in any former year. Many of the City companies have made grants in aid of the fund, and the Mansion House justice-room has subscribed 40 guineas.

Dr. Tyndall opened, at the London Institution, on Monday, the session of winter lectures, of which a very promising programme has been issued. His lecture was on the subject of the genesis of certain microscopic organisms. He described experiments which he had made during the last two years to establish the truth with regard to the doctrine of spontaneous generation, and stated that the conclusions, which he held to be demonstrated, were emphatically against that doctrine, and in support of the proposition that bacterial organisms were derived from germs.

An appeal is made for help to meet the heavy demands made at this season of the year upon the resources of the conjoint charities, the Field-lane Ragged Schools, Servants' Training Home, Night Refuges, and Boys' and Girls' Certified Industrial Schools. The work is carried on amongst the poorest of the London poor. The committee's expenses have been greatly increased through the demolition of the old building on Saffron-hill before the completion of the new one in Vine-street, Liguorpond-street. But the operations of the institution are being carried on in temporary premises in Charterhouse-buildings at a heavy expense. Contributions will be gratefully received through the bankers, Messrs. Barclay and Co., Lombard-street, or Messrs. Ransom and Co., Pall-mall East; the treasurer, Mr. W. A. Bevan, 54, Lombard-street; or through the hon. financial secretary, Mr. E. T. Hamilton, at the institution, Charterhouse-buildings, Wilder-ness-row, E.C.

The fifty-fourth anniversary and distribution of prizes and certificates in connection with the Birkbeck Literary and Scientific Institution took place on the 7th inst. The chair was taken by the Earl of Northbrook. With regard to the principal prizeholders of the six Whitworth Scholarships, each of £100 per annum for three years, which are open to the entire kingdom, the first was obtained by Mr. W. I. Last, and the third by Mr. W. F. How, the fifth being gained by Mr. A. D. Ottewill, also a student of this institution. A Whitworth Scholarship Prize of £50 was obtained by Mr. George Goodwin. The Prince Consort's Prize of 25 guineas, given by her Majesty, was awarded to Mr. Alfred Carter; and the Society of Arts Council Prize of 10 guineas for female education to Miss M. S. Mungam. The Chancellor of the Exchequer's Prize of 10 guineas was carried off by Mr. A. G. Thorn. The first scholarship was obtained by Mr. G. J. Burns, and the second scholarship by Miss M. Stannard. Altogether 225 candidates obtained prizes or certificates from the Science and Art Department, 100 from the Society of Arts, and 138 from the educational council of the institution.

There were 2435 births and 1547 deaths registered in London last week. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 71, whereas the deaths were 222 below, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths from smallpox, which had been 27 and 31 in the two preceding weeks, were 25 last week. Of these cases 6 were certified as unvaccinated and 6 as vaccinated, while in 13 cases the medical certificates gave no information as to vaccination. The number of smallpox patients in the Metropolitan Asylum Hospitals, which in the first week of October had declined to 137, have since steadily increased, and were 278 on Saturday last. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs, which had been 409 and 417 in the two previous weeks, declined to 397 last week, and were 89 below the corrected average; 262 resulted from bronchitis, and 92 from pneumonia. There were 76 deaths from measles, 46 from scarlet fever, 5 from diphtheria, 36 from whooping-cough, 27 from different forms of fever, and 19 from diarrhoea. In Greater London 3008 births and 1811 deaths were registered. The mean temperature was 43.4 deg.

The committee appointed to report on the desirableness of building war ships of the Inflexible type have issued their report, which may be said to be a favourable one. They recommend, however, that before proceeding with the construction of more vessels of this type there ought to be a thorough investigation as to whether, by giving more beam, their safety may not be largely increased without impairing their speed and efficiency.

THE BIRMINGHAM POULTRY SHOW: PRIZE BIRDS.

GRAND PALAVER AT SIERRA LEONE BETWEEN THE GOVERNOR AND NATIVE CHIEFS.

BIRMINGHAM DOG AND POULTRY SHOW.

The Cattle Show held in Bingley Hall, Birmingham, noticed last week, had its usual accompaniment, a Dog Show and a Poultry Show, from which are selected a few subjects for our Illustrations. Of the dogs, we have chosen some that may be called "Ladies' Pets." No animal of its kind could be more elegant than Mr. Howard Mapplebeck's toy black-and-tan terrier. But not less beautiful, bright, and lovable is Mr. Bruer's Italian greyhound, or Mr. Day's second prize of the same breed. Again, there are Mrs. Fisher's snowy white Pomeranian and Mrs. Monk's fluffy Maltese; the odd-looking Dachshund of Mr. Hutton; the Blenheim spaniel of Mr. Forder, with a coat like floss silk; and the Skye terrier of Mr. Mark Gretton. Some will admire the old quaint-looking pug, with his droll, wrinkled face. He is rather large; still his owner, Mr. Foster, no doubt deems him a pet. Last, not least in merit, is Mr. M. C. Ashwin's beautiful collie, full of life and intelligence. These are the prize-winners in their classes; and each, as we can testify, has its special admirers.

From the Poultry Show, we give some of the pigeons, each and all prize birds. Here, without doubt, the lovely Fantail carries off the honours for beauty; and Mr. J. Walker's (white) and Mr. Samuel Shaw's (blue) are both worthy of admiration; so are the Turbit and Turbiter, while, for mere weight, Mr. Stephen's Runt comes to the front as being the heaviest pigeon yet shown at Birmingham—2 lb. 9 oz. The elegant white Bantams of the Rev. F. Tearle, and the brilliant black-breasted red game cock of Mr. Matthew, close the list. These shows, on the whole, were remarkably good, so as well to repay the ardent fancier the cost and time spent in going more than a hundred miles to see them.

THE SMITHFIELD CLUB CATTLE SHOW.

On Monday morning the judging of the fat cattle exhibited at the eightieth annual show organised by the Smithfield Club began at the Agricultural Hall; the show being opened to the general public at two in the afternoon. At noon the Prince of Wales attended the private view, and was escorted round the building by Lord Walsingham and Mr. Leeds. The Queen had ten entries: two in the Devon classes, two in the Hereford, one in the short-horn, one in "heifers and cows most qualified for the foregoing classes," and four in the pig pens, three of which were of the white breed. Her Majesty took the first prize in Hereford steers not exceeding three years old, with a steer bred at Windsor on the Flemish Farm. From the Shaw Farm, Windsor, came also the beast which took first prize in Class 32. The Prince of Wales exhibited in the Devons, Shorthorns, Southdown sheep, crossbred sheep, and pig pens (white breed). In Devons the first number in the catalogue came from Sandringham, and was highly commended, and competed very closely with the best which took the second prize. In Devon steers not exceeding three years his Royal Highness took the first prize with a meat-carrying, well-compacted animal, to which the £40 Breed Cup was awarded. In the next class, for Devon steers or oxen above three years and not exceeding four, his Royal Highness won the second prize; thus carrying away two prizes, and the Breed Cup in the Devons, besides being highly commended. For short-horn steers under three years the Prince was credited with the Blue Rosette. In passing round the hall, beginning with the Devons, attention was drawn in Class 2 to No. 10, a steer, under three years, exhibited by R. J. Stranger, Esq., of Court House, North Molton. Major Butler, of Downes, Crediton, had the third prize for the same class, with a tall and long beast. He also showed a very large animal in Class 3, taking the third prize. Among the now famous shorthorns, Sir John Swinburne's steer, not exceeding two years and a half, showed the most carrying ability of the breed almost in perfection. In short-horned cows Earl Spencer was successful with the second prize, but was closely run by Messrs. Franklin, of Ascot. Mr. R. B. Blyth, of Wolverhampton, showed a shorthorn cow, whose success is remarkable, because only at the last moment prepared for the show. The entries of Sussex cattle, which were large, presented a very even display; and this useful class was in great strength. In Sussex cows above four years, however, there was but one entry. The Duke of Roxburgh exhibited a splendid black Scotch Highland steer (No. 127). Mr. H. D. Adamson, of Balquhurn, Aberdeen, had an animal in the cross-bred class (No. 160), a most handsome and striking creature. Mr. W. Gordon Cumming received the Breed Cup, £40, for the Scotch beasts.

The Duke of Roxburgh sent a pen of noble Cheviot sheep, whose beauty was apparent to the most unpractised eye. The champion prize for sheep went to a pen of Lincoln ewes exhibited by Mr. John Peurs, of Mera, Lincoln. In Class 60 Mr. John Watts exhibited a pen of wether lambs from the "Whistley four-horned mountain breed," being, it is stated, the first occasion on which any of these singular animals have been exhibited in the metropolis.

The prize-list represented a sum of about £3000. In cattle there were thirty-five classes, and the aggregate amount of prizes reached £1285. The sheep had devoted to them thirty-one classes, with prizes of £728; and the pigs had thirteen classes, with prizes amounting to £192.

At the annual meeting of the Smithfield

Club, which was held on Tuesday, the Duke of Sutherland was unanimously elected president for 1879. It was stated by Lord Walsingham that his Grace had added more acres to the cultivated land of Great Britain than any other member of the club, or, indeed, any other man in England. Mr. Brandreth Gibbs was re-elected hon. secretary by acclamation. A vote of thanks was given to Lord Walsingham for his conduct as president during the past year; and a similar acknowledgment was made to Mr. Gibbs.

WEST COAST OF AFRICA.

The settlement of our relations with the Mellicoe and Sammo Bullom districts is just now exercising the mind of the Colonial Government of Sierra Leone. In May last the Administrator, Chief Justice Huggins, concluded a treaty with the kings and chiefs of these districts, subject, of course, to the approval of the Imperial Government, whereby their territory was included in the British Protectorate. Upon this a proclamation was issued by the French authorities at Senegal that the country in question was and had been in the French Protectorate. Some fifty or sixty men, with four pieces of cannon, were sent down from Senegal to the Mellicoe river to enforce the French authority and protect French trade. The kings and chiefs objected to this; and, after some months of palavering, protesting, and quarrelling among themselves, they came over in a body to Sierra Leone, with a view to inquire whether the British Treaty of May had as yet received the Imperial sanction. They were informed that the matter was still under consideration, and that a final reply could not then be given. After a short time they again came forward, and requested a "big palaver," which the Governor accorded them on Oct. 31. It was evidently intended to be a show day, with a view to impress upon the barbarians the importance of the English colony and its Governor. Guards of honour of the 2nd West India Regiment and from H.M.S. Mallard were stationed on the terrace of Government House. The Governor was supported by all the civil, military, and naval officials in the colony. The palaver was conducted through the Government interpreter. It appeared that the natives complained, firstly, that, owing to the unsettled state of the negotiations, their internal affairs were in great confusion, as there was, unfortunately, a small but rebellious party which took advantage of the state of affairs by intriguing with the French; and, secondly, that they suffered from the French much abuse and oppression. They desired a satisfactory conclusion to the treaty negotiations, and that England should give them real and tangible assistance in restoring order among their own people, and in protecting them from French interference. They were informed, in reply, by Governor Rowe, that such a matter required a great deal of consideration, and could not be arranged offhand; and that all he could give them at the time was the assurance of his having their interests at heart, and his intention of arranging matters satisfactorily, with as little delay as possible. With this the palaver ended; but it is said that Bey Sherboro and his followers are by no means satisfied, and want something beyond words. At any rate, such an affair as that of Oct. 31 has not been seen in Sierra Leone for many years. It was a grand display of blue and scarlet and gold, cocked hats, helmets, feathers, and lace, while the guards of honour presented arms promiscuously at intervals, and the band of the 2nd West India Regiment played a selection of music to conclude the ceremony, which must have been very gratifying to the barbarian mind.

Some very pretty Christmas and New Year's cards have been forwarded to us by Mr. Ackermann, of Regent-street, who is the agent for Franz and Co., the American publishers. These American cards are delicate and harmonious in colouring and very pleasant to look upon.

The Cardiff Corporation has authorised a local architect to prepare plans for a new free library and science and art schools. The cost of the new building is estimated at about £13,000. The existing premises used as a free library are too small, and are, besides, required by their owners.—Lord Wrottesley laid the foundation-stone of a free library at Stoke-on-Trent on Monday afternoon. The site for the building was given by Mr. Campbell, M.P., who was present on this occasion, as was also Mr. Heath, M.P.—The electors of Salisbury having been polled to decide whether a free library should be opened in the town, the result was unfavourable to the scheme, the numbers being—For the library, 539; against, 1051.—The Leicester Town Council on Tuesday, after four hours' debate, rejected a motion to open the town museum and library on Sundays by twenty-eight votes against fifteen.

Speaking at Manchester on Tuesday afternoon, Mr. John Bright warmly supported an extensive scheme of canals and irrigation works in India, and urged that by an expenditure of 25 millions or 30 millions in that direction both India and England would be blessed at the same time. The right hon. gentleman sharply criticised the Indian Government, which, he said, spent half its time at Simla, and was incapable of governing 250 millions of people. It was monstrous to suppose that half a dozen officials at Calcutta could govern a conquered people comprising twenty nations and speaking twenty languages. He thought the country should be divided into five or six separate and independent presidencies, each with its own council and governor. That would prepare the people to govern themselves, which was a contingency that we ought to look forward to. We might make amends for past mistakes by giving the people of India that good government and freedom to which all God's children were entitled.

The annual publication of a variety of pocket-book diaries and almanacs was noticed in our last. Messrs. Letts, Son, and Co. have produced, as usual, the different forms of their "Pocket Diaries," with a small "Card-Case Almanac"—just the size to carry a few visiting cards, and furnished with blank leaves of paper and vellum for memoranda. The diaries, books for desk or table compiled by Messrs. Letts are too well known to need fresh description; they are of different sizes and shapes, also different prices, and some are specially arranged for entry of cash accounts, bills due, and other items of money business. Professional diaries, for the use of medical men, clergymen, and others, are also provided by Messrs. Letts; the clergyman has a tablet diary, to be shifted weekly, showing him the appointed lessons, as well as Church festivals, for all days in the year. A "liquid ink pencil," invented by the same manufacturers, has nothing to do with the pocket-books, which are furnished with pencils of an ordinary sort. Messrs. Benrose and Sons have issued their small pocket-book called "Daily Remembrancer," and a convenient little diary in twelve monthly parts, besides the daily calendar and "Scripture Text" calendar, upon tablets, to be shifted each day.—We have noticed some packets of decorated Christmas cards. None are more beautiful than those prepared by Marcus Ward and Co. Flowers and floral garlands, parrots and butterflies of splendid hues, pretty children in the airiest and brightest dresses, and designs emblematic of the sacred season, are skillfully and tastefully depicted in the finest colour-printing. The verses are mostly original, and not without merit.

THE WAR: IN THE SHIPKA PASS—RAOUF PASHA WATCHING THE BOMBARDMENT OF THE RUSSIAN POSITIONS.
SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

SETTLING THE EASTERN QUESTION.

Those who attentively follow the course of public events in times of excitement or anxiety understand what is meant by a fact being "in the air." In various quarters an identical statement or conviction, rumour or forecast, finds almost simultaneous expression; and everyone seems instinctively to feel its truth and force. For more than a fortnight past a statement well calculated to cause grave reflection to the people of this country has been "in the air," not alone here, but all over the Continent. It is said—and the conviction is somehow accepted as irrefragable—that the three Emperors have designed against England the heaviest blow which her prestige has received for a century; that the Eastern Question is to be settled "over her head;" that, although a congress may in form be assembled to ratify the terms of peace between the Sultan and the Czar, the real terms will have been virtually decided beforehand between Berlin, Vienna, and St. Petersburg.

This story—impression, conviction, or apprehension—is corroborated in a certain degree by many incidents and signs; and the great military event of the past week gives it a momentous importance. That the purpose it announces is likely to be accomplished we seriously doubt. Recently proofs have become daily more clear and strong that Russia did not venture to move a battalion on the Danube until, at the very least, the "benevolent neutrality" of Germany had been secured and Austrian fears and apprehensions effectually appeased. Even those who assume to be the best informed on such subjects are evidently but guessing at the nature and terms of the arrangement between the three northern Courts; for that the present war has behind it a certain secret concert or agreement of those Powers it is impossible any longer to disguise. In the guesses to which we allude it is safe enough, for it is an obvious probability, to say that Germany is not alone repaying the service and imitating the part which Russia performed during the Franco-Prussian war, but has also some ulterior object in view. She is quietly resting in the background with a policy of "conditional neutrality;" the condition being that no other Power whatsoever shall attempt to intervene between Russia and Turkey. Whether in the remote and improbable contingency of Russian failure and decisive reverse this attitude was to be exchanged for one of assistance need not here be discussed. It is enough that now all men know that Russia moves in the present war with the goodwill and moral protection of Germany.

But Austria? Until quite recently the belief was widely prevalent in this country that, although Germany might, indeed, be covertly allied with Russia, Austria was ready at hand for an alliance with England. Ever and anon incidents occurred that seemed to show the Emperor-King as one ill at ease—quieted and restrained by repeated assurances, promises, or "guarantees." From time to time it looked as if he was about to break away, to draw off, and more than once an Anglo-Austrian alliance has been reported as an event near at hand. These rumours had a very solid probability to encourage them. Austria and England are the two Powers, and perhaps it might be said the only Powers, whose interests are endangered by the present conflict. So natural would rapprochement and concert between them be, that we may assume none but very weighty considerations must have been the price which has so far kept Austria in accord with the Berlin-St. Petersburg views.

Within the past week or two, however, the Anglo-Austrian alliance seems to have almost totally vanished from the public mind, and a thousand signs proclaim that in certain eventualities, disquieting enough to England, the Russian Emperor will have nothing to fear from his Hapsburg neighbour. The "rumours of mediation" and speculative "terms of peace" which have been making their appearance in the Continental press have a deeper purpose than readily meets the eye. In these we are being gradually familiarised with certain features of the Russo-German scheme of arrangement. European public opinion is being cautiously felt, now in one direction, now in another; and while the eager crowd of news-readers and financiers discuss the peace paragraphs of the Golos or the St. Petersburg Journal only as they seem to affect the termination of the military struggle, the way is being prepared for operations in a new arena. Much of the prospect is still hazy; but by this time one or two facts are revealed distinctly enough. It seems almost certain that Austria has received some pledge or assurance that no Russian annexation shall be made on her southern frontier, nor any Russianised States or Principalities newly formed to her disadvantage; while, expressly or by implication, the Czar is left free to seek material guarantees on the other shore of the Bosphorus. Still more clearly can the serious fact be spelled out of what is transpiring around us, that the opening of the Black Sea to Russian fleets of war—that deeply cherished object of Russian effort so steadily resisted at all times hitherto by the Western Powers—is a foregone conclusion as far as the three northern empires are concerned. The annexation of at least a portion of Armenia, the “opening” of the Dardanelles, and certain autonomous arrangements of Bulgaria, Bosnia, and Herzegovina, are now almost admittedly amongst the terms which will be proposed by Russia and supported by Germany and Austria. On another and still more serious point one can notice an extremely cautious and delicate process of “feeling the way” being gently pushed forward. Is Russia not to be indemnified or reimbursed for the vast financial outlay which she has been put to in acting as the international policeman? The European Powers agreed and declared that certain things were absolutely indispensable if the public peace was to be assured and the requirements of humanity fulfilled in the East. Russia alone undertook to execute the will of Europe; is she not therefore entitled to, at all events, the support or acquiescence of Europe in making the defendant pay the costs? Such are the considerations insinuated or suggested with an air of virtuous equity and candour. They point to a transaction which most persons shrink from explicitly avowing—just at present, at all events—the expedient of “accepting” the Turkish fleet in lieu of a war indemnity.

We express our confidence that neither over our heads nor in any other way will this latter proposition be a feature in the arrangement of the Eastern Question. The others are grave enough; but this is one which, for reasons we can adduce, may be dismissed from serious notice. Prince Bismarck is a very astute and far-seeing statesman; and while he may, in this business, push England aside as far as he thinks may safely be done, he will halt at the point which would really bring England on the scene in hostile attitude. A settlement of the Eastern Question “over our heads” would, in any event, and no matter what the terms, be a wound to our amour propre; and the opening of the Dardanelles would no doubt be the demolition of a position we have hitherto very firmly maintained. Nevertheless no British Ministry would carry this nation into war on merely such a ground of quarrel. The appropriation of the Turkish fleet by Russia, conjointly with the opening of the Black Sea, would, however, be such a palpable and direct stroke at this country as no British Ministry would permit. At this point arise considerations which are left out of view by those who conclude that in such an event England would be obliged to yield in presence of a Russo-Austro-Germanic alliance backed by the already-secured support of Italy. It is an assumption utterly unwarranted by fact or probability that Austria, though possibly willing enough to accede to the other propositions under notice, would acquiesce in a proceeding as full of peril to her as it might be full of menace to England. Nor can we at all admit the presumption which underlies the acceptance of this story, that Germany is as free-handed as is thought, or France as completely out of the account as some people complacently suppose. France is just now torn by domestic strife, and is in a certain sense powerless; but Prince Bismarck is sagacious enough to contemplate not the France of the present hour, but the France that would probably appear the moment Germany was found to be involved in a serious war. There is, we confidently assert, a limit to what the “three Emperors” may devise as to keeping us “out in the cold,” or settling matters “over our heads.” We may grumble at but put up with the opening of the Euxine; but those who conceive we should be powerless to oppose a direct attack on our naval power and Eastern interests can have but very superficially studied the facts that bear upon so critical a question.

MUSIC.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

The season of Italian opera performances—which began on Nov. 5—is to terminate on Tuesday next; and the theatre will be reopened (again under Mr. Mapleson's management) on Boxing Night with a new grand fairy ballet, “Rose and Marie; or, the Reward of Filial Love,” in which three hundred children will appear, including the students of the National Training School for Dancing. A version of Adolph Adam's pretty little opera, “Le Châlet,” will be played before the ballet.

Last week's specialties were a repetition of “Faust” and the first performance this season of “Don Giovanni.” On the first-named occasion Mlle. Marimon appeared as Margherita, and sang with her accustomed refinement of style and finished execution. The “Jewel song” and the love music of the garden scene were exquisitely rendered; the delicate sentiment of these portions having been admirably contrasted by the expression of despair and remorse in the subsequent scenes. Mlle. Anna de Belocca gave the two songs of Siebel with much charm of style, and was encored in the second. As Mefistofele, Signor Foli resumed a part with which he has heretofore often been associated; and the cast was otherwise as recently, including Signor Runcio as Faust, Madame Lablache as Marta, &c.

In “Don Giovanni” the characters of Donna Anna and Donna Elvira were very effectively rendered, respectively, by Madame Marie Roze and Mlle. Alwina Valleria. Mlle. Anna de Belocca sang the music of Zerlina with much charm of style; and Signori Bettini and Del Puente were, respectively, very efficient as Don Ottavio and Don Giovanni, the cast having been completed by Signor Monari Rocca as Leporello, Signor Zobili as Masetto, and Signor Brocolini as Il Commendatore.

This week opened with a performance of “Ruy Blas,” followed by “La Sonnambula” on Tuesday, “Don Giovanni” on Wednesday morning, and “Il Trovatore” in the evening; “Faust” having been announced for Thursday, “Der Freischütz” for Friday, and “Il Flauto Magico” for this (Saturday) evening. This was to have been the closing week, but two extra nights are to be given. On Monday “Martha” will be performed, and on Tuesday there will be selections from several operas, the occasion being for the benefit of Mr. Mapleson.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

“Joseph”—the oratorio composed by Professor G. A. Macfarren for the Leeds Triennial Musical Festival, and produced there in September last—was performed by the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society on Tuesday evening, for the first time in London. On the previous occasion we entered at some length into a consideration of the merits and characteristics of the work, and may now, therefore, more briefly state the results of its second hearing. As before mentioned, the text (drawn from the Holy Scriptures) was adapted by Dr. Monk, organist of York Cathedral, the scene of the first part being laid in Canaan; that of the second in Egypt. It may also be repeated that the supposed characters are Jacob (bass), Reuben (tenor), Joseph (baritone), Benjamin (soprano), the nine brethren (semi-chorus), and Pharaoh (tenor); with impersonalities for soprano, contralto, and choristers. Four of the solo singers—Madame Patey, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. Santley, and Signor Foli—were the same as at Leeds; Madame Lemmens-Sherrington having been the principal soprano and Mrs. Osgood the second soprano in the Albert Hall performance.

Again, on Tuesday, the impression was that the choral portions of “Joseph,” as in the composer's two previous oratorios, “St. John the Baptist” and “The Resurrection,” are generally those in which most power is manifested; together with an occasional display of special skill, in the forms of counterpoint and fugue. In the performance now referred to, a marked effect was produced by the choruses “O, praise the Lord, ‘Honour thy father.’” “We come from Gilead” (encored), “A voice was heard in Ramah,” and “See, Pharaoh hath set Joseph.”

The music for solo voices is generally superior in melodic flow to that of the composer's other oratorios. Of these portions of “Joseph” the most effective on Tuesday were—the duet “Joseph, I love thee” (Mr. Santley and Signor Foli), the songs “Love is strong as death,” “Let us not kill him,” and “Whoever perished” (sung, respectively, by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Mr. Lloyd, and Madame Patey); the duet, with female chorus, “Commit thy way” (soloists, Mesdames Sherrington and Patey); and the trio “My sons, tell me all” (Mrs. Osgood, Mr. Lloyd, and Signor Foli). The beautiful sestet, too, “Forgive, if ye have aught,” for the principal vocalists, was again a special feature. The performance, conducted by Mr. Barnby, was very efficient throughout. The music of the nine brethren was well sung by the members of the London Vocal Union. Dr. Stainer presided at the organ. At the conclusion of the oratorio Professor Macfarren was called for, and appeared on the platform in acknowledgment of the applause.

Saturday's Crystal Palace Concert—the last but one of the present year—included performances of Joachim Raff's elaborate violin concerto, op. 161, in B minor, and Liszt's orchestral version of his “Rhapsodie Hongroise,” both for the first time here. The concerto has already been spoken of by us in reference to its performance by Herr Leopold Auer, at a New Philharmonic Concert of the past season. On Saturday its interpreter was Herr Wilhelmj, who gave the work with his well-known excellence of tone and style, besides having played his own “Concert-stück.” The programme included Beethoven's eighth symphony (in F), and Mozart's overture to “Die Zauberflöte.” Madame Matilda Savert and Signor Foli were the vocalists. A special operatic performance was announced for Wednesday afternoon, when Cimarosa's “Il Matrimonio Segreto” was to be given, with a new English libretto by Mr. W. Grist. At the concert of to-day (Saturday) Mr. J. L. Hatton's new sacred drama, “Hezekiah,” will be performed for the first time.

Madame Norman-Néruda was the leading violinist and Mr. Charles Hallé the solo pianist at this week's Monday Popular Concert, and at the previous Saturday afternoon performance.

The last of the London Ballad Concerts of the year took place at St. James's Hall on Wednesday evening, with a programme of the usual attractive and varied character. The series will be resumed in January.

The third of Mr. William Carter's Oratorio Concerts at the Royal Albert Hall took place on Thursday evening, when Haydn's “Creation” was performed.

Handel's “Judas Maccabæus” was given by the Sacred Harmonic Society yesterday (Friday) evening; the solo singers announced having been Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Julia Wigan, Miss Julia Elton, Mr. Vernon Rigby, and Mr. Lewis Thomas.

We last week drew attention to the concert of Miss Emily Mott, daughter of the late respected Mr. Superintendent Mott, of the Metropolitan Police, by whose express wish it was that the concert took place yesterday (Friday) week, as previously announced—Miss Mott, however, of course, not appearing. The programme was full of popular interest.

The first private concert of the Royal Albert Hall Amateur Orchestral Society will be given this (Saturday) evening, in St. James's Hall. The programme will include symphony No. 1, by Kalliwoda; concerto in E flat, for two pianofortes, by Mozart; incidental music to the Masque in “The Merchant of Venice,” by Dr. Sullivan; and overture to Weber's “Der Freischütz.” Mr. George Mount being the conductor.

THEATRES.

GAJETTY.

Mr. John Hollingshead, the manager of this theatre, placed on Monday for the first time on its stage a production of his own. Perhaps the word “production” is too strong a term, for the piece is, in fact, an adaptation from the French. His authors are MM. Meilhac and Halévy, well known by their successful labours, such as “Frou-Frou,” “The Grand Duchess,” and other similar lively inventions, including “La Cigale”—namely, the present play. The adaptation is entitled “The Grasshopper”—slight in subject, but meant to be profoundly significant. Mr. Hollingshead has judiciously condensed it, and in the second act considerably altered it. The life and soul of the trifle (for such it is, though in three acts) is Miss Ellen Farren, and the part she plays is called the Grasshopper, such being her name as a star acrobat in a travelling circus. Her performance is in contrast with that of Celine Chaumont's, the original representative at the Varieties Theatre, Paris. Such an irritable, active, and inventive artist rarely exists even in circus life, and one more ready at a pinch never in any sort of entertainment. On the slightest incentive she climbs or she descends, leaps here, there, and everywhere; and is, in fact, never quiet for a single moment. The action of the piece is, accordingly, indescribable; of story there is little that is worth telling. It opens in the William Rufus Inn in the New Forest, a place visited in succession by the Grasshopper, her employer, old Gyngeall, the showman; and her companions, the Patagonian Wonder and a melancholy contortionist. All these worthies have fallen in love with the heroine, and to escape the inconvenience of their attentions she is in the act of running away, followed by them. It transpires that she cannot quit the service except by forfeiting ten pounds. The sum is readily paid by a fantastical photographer, Pygmalion Flippit (Mr. Edward Terry), who, regarding himself as “an Artist of the Future,” is, of course, sufficiently romantic. In subsequent scenes, the Grasshopper figures as a lady in a drawing-room, it having been discovered that she is a wealthy fugitive. Pains are taken to make her behave as a woman of fashion, but in vain; and a bridegroom is provided for her whom she will not accept.

In Flippit's studio she finds the attachment that best pleases her wayward fancy; and here, too, we have specimens of the artist's work, which seem with intended satire. The walls are covered with the strangest designs—such as “The Lost Disraeli, after Gainsborough;” “Wagner Struggling with the Power of Sound, after Leighton;” “Gladstone Coquetting with Young Ireland, after Millais;” “The Roll-Calls in the Lowther Arcade, after Miss Thompson;” “The Apotheosis of Henry Irving, after Whistler, by Mr. Gordon Thomson;” and “The Creator of Black and White, after Himself, by Signor Pellegrini.” The humour of all this is apparent enough; and, on the whole, the new adaptation merits success.

Morning performances are certainly in the ascendant, and those introduced by Mr. Henderson at the Criterion have secured a preference. Mr. Tom Taylor's “Still Waters Run Deep” was repeated on Saturday to a numerous and appreciative audience. Mr. Charles Wyndham represented Jola Mildmay in a natural and significant manner, bringing out every phase of the character, particularly his manliness in resisting the villanous Hawksley. A most cordial reception was given to the entire performance.

A new play is announced as having been written by Messrs. Saville Rowe and Bolton Rowe, for the Prince of Wales's Theatre, entitled “Black Mail.”

The number of Dramatic Readers is greatly on the increase. At the Langham Hall, Mr. T. Turquand's series of recitals, from Shakespeare, Dickens, Longfellow, Lord Lytton, and others, merit attention; and last week, at the Sussex Hall, Mr. Charles A. Ferrier gave a selection of very curious readings, which interested by their quaintness and novelty. Mr. John A. Heraud presided, and Dr. Richardson was on the platform.

Miss Glyn, who has been lecturing in the suburbs with great success, announces her last two readings; one, “Hamlet,” taking place this Friday, and the second next Tuesday afternoon, being a repetition of the ever-fresh “Antony and Cleopatra.” “Age cannot wither her, or custom stale her infinite variety.”

To-night Mr. Henri Beaumont gives a Dramatic Reading at Ripon House, Woburn-place, Russell-square. The pieces are from Shakespeare, Longfellow, and other well-known authors.

Also, to-night, a dramatic performance at the Royal Aquarium will be given for the benefit of the Royal General Theatrical Fund.

CHRISTMAS BOOKS FOR THE YOUNG.

All the boys and girls in England ought to be made happy at Christmas, upon the sole condition of being good. One way of providing for their harmless gratification, in this age of superabundant literary manufacture and pictorial entertainment, is to give them new illustrated story-books. This is further convenient as a way of keeping them quiet, so as not to disturb their elders during the long winter evenings and the many hours of bad weather that must be spent in-doors. A great variety of publications intended to meet this demand now lie before us; and we shall endeavour to notice as many as time and space will permit.

Our older English narrative poets, Chaucer and Spenser, should contain much that will be acceptable to the juvenile mind, when their antiquated language and unfamiliar metrical forms are removed. Mrs. Haweis last year attempted to convert several of the Canterbury Pilgrim's Tales into easy verse of the modern style; and now we have, from the same publishers, Messrs. Chatto and Windus, a prose Spenser for Children, by M. H. Towry, which seems likely to win equal favour. It includes the story of the Red Cross Knight, with Una and Duessa, the three fierce Paynim brothers, and the cunning enchanter Archimago; that of Sir Guy and his errand in search of the Bower of Bliss, with Mammon's Cave, and the voluptuous abode of Acrasia; the story of Canace's ring, and the contest of Triamond with her brother Cambel; the histories of Britomart and of Florimel, and the Herculean exploits of Talus, the Iron Man. These fables, deprived of their allegorical significance, may still prove interesting as a treat of romantic fancy. There are six coloured illustrations, designed by Mr. Walter J. Morgan. A book on the same plan, but of standard literary merit, is Charles Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare; and we are glad to welcome a beautiful new edition of this, published by Messrs. G. Routledge and Sons, which is illustrated with nearly two hundred of Sir John Gilbert's well-known designs. We would suggest that the simple prose narrative might sometimes be used together with selected passages from Shakespeare, taking the more striking portions of dialogue in a play and reading them aloud to an audience of young persons. It is rather too much for them to hear an entire play read at one sitting, but they ought to have the whole story brought before them at once. A scene or two from each act of the play could be read at intervals, filling up the gaps in its dramatic progress with Charles Lamb's agreeable statement of the plot and course of action.

There is considerable merit in the popular German imitation, or adaptation, of the idea of “Robinson Crusoe,” which has long been known by the name of The Swiss Family Robinson. Its author was Johann David Wyss, a native of Berne, and a pastor or chaplain in the army, towards the end of the last century. The adventures related are those of a whole family, father, mother, and four sons, of the middle class from Switzerland, who are shipwrecked on an uninhabited island near New Guinea. The story was first published in German in 1813, but a sequel, in French, has been written by Madame de Montolieu. A new and complete translation from the original, by Mrs. H. B. Paull, who has translated the fairy tales of Grimm and Andersen, is now published by Messrs. F. Warne and Co. It is, in our judgment, one of the very best books that can be given to a boy from nine to twelve years of age. Mrs. Paull has certainly performed her task with excellent taste and skill. She has made this translation from the German read almost like the English of “Robinson Crusoe.” The book is well illustrated with a large number of engravings. Another edition of The Swiss Family Robinson, or rather a reprint of one of the old translations, is published by Marcus Ward and Co. The Original Robinson Crusoe (Routledge), edited by the Rev. H. C. Adams, with an introductory chapter and an appendix, is the old narrative of Alexander Selkirk's lonely life on the isle of Juan Fernandez, upon which De Foe founded his admirable romance.

For an out-and-out good Fairy Tale, of the liveliest, the most energetic, and most delightfully fantastic dreaming, we must highly commend The Magic Valley, or Patient Antoinette, by Miss E. Keary (Macmillan and Co.). The scene is laid in some magic land of Southern France, haunted by the Fées or Fadas, the Dracs, the Lutins, and the Follets, whose caprices are very amusing indeed. It is new ground to us, and we invite the reader to enjoy it freely. The illustrations, designed by the well-known “E. V. B.,” are quaintly humorous and pretty. Six Little Princesses (Warne's Fairy Library), to which are added a dozen other short tales, of the Hans Andersen class, will probably suit the tastes of many young people.

Those who can recollect, in their own youth, having found pleasant instruction in "Joyce's Scientific Dialogues," or Miss Edgeworth's "Harry and Lucy," will understand the aim of the next book we shall notice. It is entitled Children's Toys, and What They Teach (publishers, C. Kegan Paul and Co.). The elementary knowledge of mechanics, optics, pneumatics, and other physical sciences, to be got from explaining and experimenting with some very common playthings, is quite worthy of attention. Tops, balls, hoops, shuttlecocks, kites, bows and arrows, squirts, and pea-shooters, the kaleidoscope and the zoetrope or thaumatrope, and even dolls, have a good deal to teach; and the parent or the governess will do well to study this little volume, and then to give it to the elder children.

The author of "The Swan and her Crew," Mr. G. Christopher Davies, after describing in that book all sorts of fish and fowl, and sport therewith, in the "broads" or lakes of East Norfolk, has changed his ground in Wildcat Tower (F. Warne and Co.). This is in North Northumberland, on the banks of the upper Tyne, and on the sides of the Cheviot Hills, the Moors and Fells, and other likely places for all such adventures as are delightful to healthy youngsters. Four boys in friendly companionship are described as finding plenty to do with themselves in that part of the country; and we expect that many other boys, reading the book at home, will soon wish to go there and to do likewise.

The deserved popularity of "Alice in Wonderland" has begotten several imitations, some good, and some indifferent. Amongst the good of this kind we should rank Elsie in Dreamland (F. Warne and Co.), by Mr. Frederick Weatherly, with engraved designs by H. Cross. Little Elsie travels by a mystic railway to very strange places, where she meets those nice people Boy Blue, Jack Horner, Jack Sprat and his wife, Miss Muffet, Old King Cole, and other characters of nursery fame. The nonsense is cleverly handled, though we do not mean to say it is equal to Mr. Lewis Carroll's. Our Trip to Blunderland, by Jean Jambon (W. Blackwood and Sons), is rather poor stuff; but there are sixty woodcuts, designed by Charles Doyle.

"Mother Goose" has still a great deal to answer for, among the new books for children. We find a thick square volume, Mother Goose's Nursery Rhymes and Fairy Tales, with four hundred illustrations, published by Routledge; also, her "Fairy Tales," being half that volume, issued separately; and Mother Goose's Melodies, which seems to be the other half; with a pretty picture, on the cover, of an old woman in red cloak and high-peaked hat, riding through the air, mounted on a flying goose. Again, we have Mother Goose Jingles, in the same style. This is what the old belief in witches has come to, and it is innocent enough in its childish way.

Fun and fancy are good; love and truth are better. For inculcating these virtues in a cheerful, hearty, sensible manner, several writers ought to be praised. We like Seven o' Clock, by Janie Brockman (F. Warne and Co.). Lady Verney's Sketches from Nature (Daldy, Isbister, and Co.) teach many facts of pleasant and improving knowledge, pervaded by a wholesome spirit. For boys who like to read about animals and hunting adventures, Cassell, Petter, and Galpin have provided two books—Field Friends and Forest Foes, by Phillis Browne; and Jungle, Peak, and Plain, by Dr. Gordon Stables—both copiously illustrated and full of interesting anecdote.

We spoke just now of Robinson Crusoe. Here, in a little book sent forth by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston, Searle, and Rivington, we have Six Hundred Robinson Crusoes. This means, of course, the crew and passengers, to that number, of a ship which is cast on an uninhabited island, somewhere in the Caribbean Sea, where they have to take care of themselves like the solitary man in De Foe's familiar tale. The author is Mr. Gilbert Mortimer. The Flag Lieutenant, a story of the Slave Squadron, by Lieutenant S. Whitchurch Sadler, R.N., has a stronger appearance of reality, not to speak of the young lady and the love-making introduced into it. The Bella and her Crew, by Harriet Hill, is rather a story of the seaside, and of a small sailing smack, than of ships on the great sea.

Many one-volume stories for young people, which seem to be of wholesome moral tendency, and may interest readers of one sex or the other, can only be enumerated in this place. For girls, we have "Little Mercy," by Maude Jeanne Franco (Sampson Low and Co.); and "Brave Little Heart" (Routledge). Boys will relish "Coralie, or, the Wreck of the Sybille," by C. H. Eden (Marcus Ward and Co.); "Martin Noble, or, A Boy's Experience of London Life," by John G. Watts (F. Warne). Smaller children may like "All in a Garden Green" and "Talk of a Sheet of Note-Paper," by Elizabeth Traice (Marcus Ward). We should recommend especially "Boy and Man, a Story for Young and Old" (Religious Tract Society); "Margaret Woodward" (F. Warne); "Lettice Eden, a Tale of the Last Days of King Henry VIII.," by Emily Sarah Holt (J. F. Shaw and Co.); "King Hetel's Daughter, or, the Fair Gudrun, a Tale of the North Sea" (F. Warne); and "David's Little Lad," by L. T. Meade, author of "Great St. Benedict's" (J. F. Shaw); "Rosabella, a Doll's Christmas Story" (Routledge) will please a little girl. "Uncle Philip, a Tale for Boys and Girls," by Stella Austin (J. Masters and Co.), speaks for itself. "Little Davy's New Hat" (Routledge) was written in 1801 by Robert Bloomfield, author of "The Farmer's Boy." "Owen Hartley, or, Ups and Downs," is a "Tale of the Land and Sea," by that popular story-teller, W. H. G. Kingston. He gives us also "The Young Llanero, a Story of War and Wild Life in Venezuela" (T. Nelson and Sons). "A Peep Behind the Scenes" is by Mrs. Walton, author of "Christie's Old Organ" (Religious Tract Society). "Good Out of Evil" (T. Nelson and Sons) is a pleasing tale for children, by Mrs. Surr, with many pretty bird-pictures by Giacomelli. "My Rambles in the New World," by Lucien Biart, author of "Adventures of a Young Naturalist," is a translation from the French, "A Travers l'Amérique," by Mary de Hauteville, and is a capital book for boys. The same publishers (Sampson Low and Co.) bring out a translation, by Miss Ellen Frewer, of Jules Verne's "Hector Servadac, or, The Career of a Comet," likewise with numerous illustrations. "The Three Magic Wands," by Mrs. E. Prentiss (F. Warne) teaches a good lesson of unselfish kindness. "Peter Pangelley, or, True as the Clock," by J. Jackson Wray (Wesleyan Methodist Sunday School Union), has an excellent moral purpose. We can but mention the following:—"Our Valley" (Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge); "The Snowball Society," by M. Bramston; "Drifted Away, a Tale of Adventure," "The Snow Fort and the Frozen Lake, or, Christmas Holidays at Pond House," "The Two Voyages, and What Came of Them," "The Shepherd of Ardmuir," "The Girls of Bredon," by Mrs. Stanley Leathes; "An Eventful Night," and "Seppi," from the German, all published by the Christian Knowledge Society; "Rosy's Three Homes," by Mrs. Herbert Martin (Sunday School Association); and "Phil's Mistake," by Beatrice Jourdan (Sunday School Association); "The Boys of Willoughby School," by Robert Richardson (W. P. Nimmo); also, "Harvey Sinclair, a Lesson for Life," "The Story of a Wooden Horse," from the French of Emile Bayard (Routledge); and "Sybil Grey," by Mrs. Perring. All these are separate tales, and we should think every one of them likely to please minds of suitable age that have not been spoilt. Mr. Edward Jenkins, M.P., the author of "Gin's Baby," has spun a Christmas yarn, called "The Captain's Cabin" (W. Mullian and Son), which we do not think at all suitable for children to read. It is only mentioned here to prevent any mistake on that score.

There are not a few volumes of collected shorter stories, which merit quite as much regard, in general, as those occupying each a single volume, but which have, in some instances, appeared before in the magazines for the juvenile public. Such are "Old Pictures in a New Frame," by Douglas Straight, who formerly wrote as "Sidney Daryl" (F. Warne and Co.); "Short Stories, and Other Papers," by Mark Guy Pearse (Wesleyan Conference Office); "Little Wide-awake," by Mrs. Sale Barker, with nearly four hundred illustrations (Routledge); "God's Silver," and other tales, by the Hon. Mrs. Green (F. Warne); and "Chronicles of Capstan Cabin," by J. Jackson Wray (Wesleyan Sunday School Union). Among story-books of a superior class, we have to notice "Fairy Circles, or, Tales and Legends of Giants, Dwarfs, Fairies, Water-Sprites, and Hobgoblins," from the German of Villamaria, with numerous illustrations (Marcus Ward and Co.); "A Holiday Book," by Richard Rowe, author of "Episodes in an Obscure Life" (W. P. Nimmo); "Story after Story, of Land and Sea, Man and Beast," by the author of "Cheerful Sundays" (Daldy, Isbister, and Co.); and "Pixie's Adventures, the Tale of a Terrier," by N. D'Anvers (C. Kegan Paul and Co.); "Told by the Sea," including "Mr. Plassington's Journal," by F. Frankfort Moore, is not a child's book, but may beguile an hour of idleness for the older reader.

We should further mention, for the benefit of real children, "Sunbeam's Picture-Book" and "Little Curlypat's Story-Book," "Little Primrose's Picture-Book," "Little Forget-me-not's," and "Little Bluebell's Picture-Book" (Routledge); also the "Holiday Album for Girls" and "Lily's Drawing-room Book," by Mrs. Sale Barker; "My Pet's Gift-Book" (Religious Tract Society); "The Daisy Playmate," with coloured pictures (F. Warne and Co.); "Aunt Emma's Picture-Book" (T. Nelson and Sons); "The Children's Picture Annual" (Ward, Lock, and Tyler); and the bound yearly volumes of "Chatterbox" and "Sunday," edited by the Rev. J. Erskine Clarke, and "The Prize for Girls and Boys" (W. W. Gardner, publisher); "Golden Childhood," edited by Dr. H. W. Dulcken (Ward, Lock, and Tyler); "The Children's Friend" (Seeley, Jackson, and Halliday), with "The Infant's Magazine," "The Family Friend" and "The Friendly Visitor" (S. W. Partridge and Co.), also "The Weekly Welcome," published by Messrs. Partridge; "Young Days" (Sunday School Association); and "Early Days" (Wesleyan Conference Office). But we must, in concluding the list, not omit to greet an old friend, "Peter Parley's Annual," now in his thirty-seventh year, with the illustrations now printed in oil colours, and published by Mr. Ben George. The series of "Instructive Picture-Books" (coloured), produced by Mr. E. Stanford, of Charing-cross, is well devised to call forth the faculties of perception and comparison in an infant mind.

THE LATE PRINCE CONSORT.

Wonderfully pat and seasonable, by mere accident and without any sort of premeditation, is the advent of certain publications, among which may be numbered the third, but not, as the editor had fondly hoped it would be, the last, volume of the truly Royal work entitled The Life of his Royal Highness the Prince Consort: by Theodore Martin (Smith, Elder, and Co.), the titlepage of this third volume being faced by a very speaking portrait of the late Duchess of Kent. As regards the patness and seasonability of the contents, it will be sufficient to mention that the period embraced includes the date of the Crimean War, a date at which all England was occupied, just as it is now, with the momentous Eastern Question. That question may be said to obtrude its irrepressible influence, in some oblique, if not straightforward, fashion, amidst the biographical details, however private and domestic, contained in any one of the twenty-three chapters into which the volume is divided.

In the first chapter we see how inevitable it was that there should be war in the East. In the next we have the ultimatum sent to Russia by France and England, the declaration of war, and the departure of troops for Malta. In the next, we ponder over the sailing of the Baltic fleet and over the memorable but questionable scene which took place at the dinner given to Sir Charles Napier. In the next, we read with satisfaction the Queen's sensible observations about the proposed "day of humiliation;" we admire once more the Turks' successful defence of Silistria, and we are presented with Prince Albert's plan for an invasion of the Crimea. In the next, there is an interesting account of the visit paid by the Prince to Napoleon III. at the camps of Boulogne and St. Omer, a visit which but for the Crimean War would certainly not have taken place. In the next there is a document of singular interest: it is the memorandum drawn up by the Prince himself concerning the visit he paid to the French Emperor and the conversations he had with him who, after being known as the Arbitrator of Europe, was to descend to posterity as the Man of Sedan. In the next, we exult over the battles of the Alma and of Balaklava; we are reminded of the disappointment aroused by the proceedings of the Baltic fleet, and we renew our feelings of shame at the disputes between Admiral Napier and Sir James Graham. In the next, a picture is drawn of the alarm created by accounts of the battle of Inkerman, of the indignation excited by the behaviour of the Russians towards the wounded, and of the great storm in the Crimea, during which the magnificent steam-ship Prince was lost. In the next, we have our attention drawn to the fine spirit exhibited, amidst their sufferings, by our gallant Army; to the establishment of the "Patriotic Fund;" to the noble conduct of Miss Florence Nightingale, and to the work performed at the hospitals of Scutari. In the next, the prominent feature is the protracted Ministerial crisis caused by the sudden and, as it is roundly stated, unjustifiable resignation of Lord John Russell. In the next, the most important matter, as regards the late Prince Consort, is the account of Mr. Roebuck's celebrated Committee; an account of which advantage is taken to vindicate the Prince's memory from "the extraordinary suspicion entertained by Mr. Roebuck and others" against his Royal Highness. In the next, we are entertained with a narrative of the visit paid to this country by the Emperor and Empress of the French, a visit which, it may be safely affirmed, was due solely to the alliance concluded on the occasion of the Crimean War. In the next, the heart of every reader will be melted by perusal of the letter in which the Queen, in her own simple and womanly but queenly words, records her feelings when she, with her own hands, distributed the well-earned medals to her wounded soldiers. In the next, there is recorded a very important event; the transference of the chief command in the French army from Canrobert to Pelissier, from the man of whom it was said that he would sacrifice a large number of troops "by dribblets without obtaining any advantage," to the man of whom it was said that he would sacrifice a like number "for a great result at once." In the next, the eye is caught at once by the battle of the Tschernaja—a critical battle, inasmuch as it "was planned at St. Petersburg, and it had been looked forward to there as certain to result in the raising of the siege" of Sebastopol. In the next, we have the visit of the Queen and Prince Albert, with two of their children, to the Emperor of the French; which visit is, of course, distinctly traceable to the Crimean War, though it was chiefly remarkable as being the first occasion on which an "English Sovereign had set foot within Paris since Henry VI." In the next, we have the fall of Sebastopol. In the next, we are confronted by "the intention of the French Emperor to withdraw 100,000 men from the Crimea;" and the gracious figure of Peace already begins to loom in the distance. In the next, there is a striking letter from Prince Albert to King Leopold of Belgium "on the position of England with reference to the war, and the ultimatum proposed to be sent by Austria to Russia." In the next, we find the Plenipotentiaries fairly seated at Paris and discussing the conditions of peace. In the next, we have the treaty of peace, after much difficulty, concluded. In the next, some short observations are made upon the manner in which that treaty was discussed in our Houses of Parliament. In the next, which is the last, we have a short but thrilling description of the famous review at Aldershot, when the Queen, in person, thanked her soldiers for their valour and devotion, and when her soldiers answered her with such a shout of "God save the Queen!" as might have shaken the walls of Jericho.

This last chapter, moreover, concludes with the following extract from Prince Albert's diary:—"The protocol about the Russo-Turkish frontier is signed in Paris, and thus is the Bolgrad question solved. Thank God!" Little, no doubt, did the writer of that sentence imagine that, before the world was twenty years older, the Russo-Turkish frontier, under some specious pretext, would be considered to stand in need of further rectification; or, at any rate, that the Russo-Turkish spectre would once more stalk abroad and throw all Europe into commotion. It will be plain, however, from the brief summary given, that all the chapters, so far as they are historical, and historical they are to a very great extent, are pervaded by the influence of the Eastern Question, and have, therefore, a very distinct bearing upon the present lamentable condition of affairs in South-Eastern Europe and in Asia Minor. And it is difficult to over-estimate the value of opinions formed by such persons as the late Prince Consort, persons having the best means of information as to the private sentiments of men in high places, persons knowing almost, it may be said, of their own knowledge what is the policy, the immemorial policy, of autocratically governed Russia, and what weight is to be attached to Russia's boast of going forth to war as the disinterested champion of oppressed Christianity.

So far as the various chapters are biographical and domestic, they overflow with interesting and touching details. The editor, who combines with his duties in that capacity those of biographer and champion, makes it one of his principal objects to disperse, as he considers, into thin air the calumnies which detractors, to use his own word, were prone to spread abroad concerning the late Prince Consort, than whom, we are told, "no man bore calumny better." Some of those calumnies, we understand, he outlived; some outlived him, but only, we are led to believe, for a while; one, it is supposed, still retains a slight hold upon the public mind. That one is disposed of in the following fashion. Be it premised that "even recently we were assured, upon the authority of an eminent statesman who survived the Prince many years, and who professed to speak from personal knowledge, that he left behind in one of his investments no less a sum than £600,000!" Well, the reply is not only that "the statesman in question was not always exact in his statements, and he was never less exact, or more inexcusably so, than in this instance;" but it goes into minute detail as well as emphatic denial. So far, it asserts, was the Prince from having amassed, as was supposed, "large sums of money out of the income allowed him by the nation, part of which had been invested in the purchase of land at South Kensington, adjoining the property of the Exhibition Commissioners," that he "never purchased any land at South Kensington either for himself or his family. Connected as he was with the acquisition of ground there for purely national purposes, the thought of acquiring property in the same locality for personal purposes would never have entered his mind, or the mind, indeed, of any honourable man. . . . It was only by strict economy that the year's current expenditure was made to square with the year's income, and the Prince died leaving absolutely no fortune; indeed, barely enough to meet his personal liabilities." Probably this will satisfy every candid mind; but there is a well-known difficulty about convincing a man against his will. Another calumny, not, perhaps, so generally spread and believed, is dealt with in referring to Mr. Roebuck's suspicions of a desire on the part of Prince Albert that the Crimean expedition might be a failure; suspicions which were met by the Duke of Newcastle with the remark and rebuke: "If, during the time of my official duties, I have received any suggestions which were more valuable to me than others, they did not come from your friends the Napiers, but from Prince Albert." It is, of course, obvious for the party of suspicion to rejoice, that the Duke of Newcastle's administration, though as good, it may be, as any other would have been, was not generally considered a very great success.

Of the domestic scenes to which the reader is occasionally admitted none will go more home to the hearts of the Queen's subjects than the idyllic description of the manner in which our Princess Royal was wooed and won, when the young Prince of Prussia presented her with "a piece of white heather (the emblem of good luck)," which "enabled him to make an allusion to his hopes and wishes." But this has, no doubt, been already a delight to the thousands who read the "Leaves from a Journal," in which, it appears, the sweet tale is told. And another scene of the same taking sort, for us English, is that just hinted at in the Queen's few words about her returning to Osborne after her visit to Paris. It has the true stamp of our "Home, sweet home." Very interesting is the account given by the Queen of the impression made upon her by Napoleon III.; it would probably make the author of the "Histoire d'un Crime" surpass all that was ever done by any of his countrymen in the way of shoulder-shrugging and grimacing. Fancy Napoléon le Petit an object of esteem and attachment to Queen Victoria and Albert the Good! M. Victor Hugo would have a lower opinion than ever of the English. For Prince Albert, as his biographer maintains, was English to the backbone. That biographer complains of a phenomenon of which his fraternity have not very often to complain: there is no shadow to relieve the excessive light of his biographical picture, for the subject of the portrait had "no such defect as would have furnished that relief." The biographer, for all his researches, found no such "flaws and blemishes" as would have helped him out of his perplexity; and the reader has consequently to guess for himself, as every human being must have a weak spot somewhere, what particular quality it was which prevented Prince Albert from being either more or—which is ridiculous—less than human.

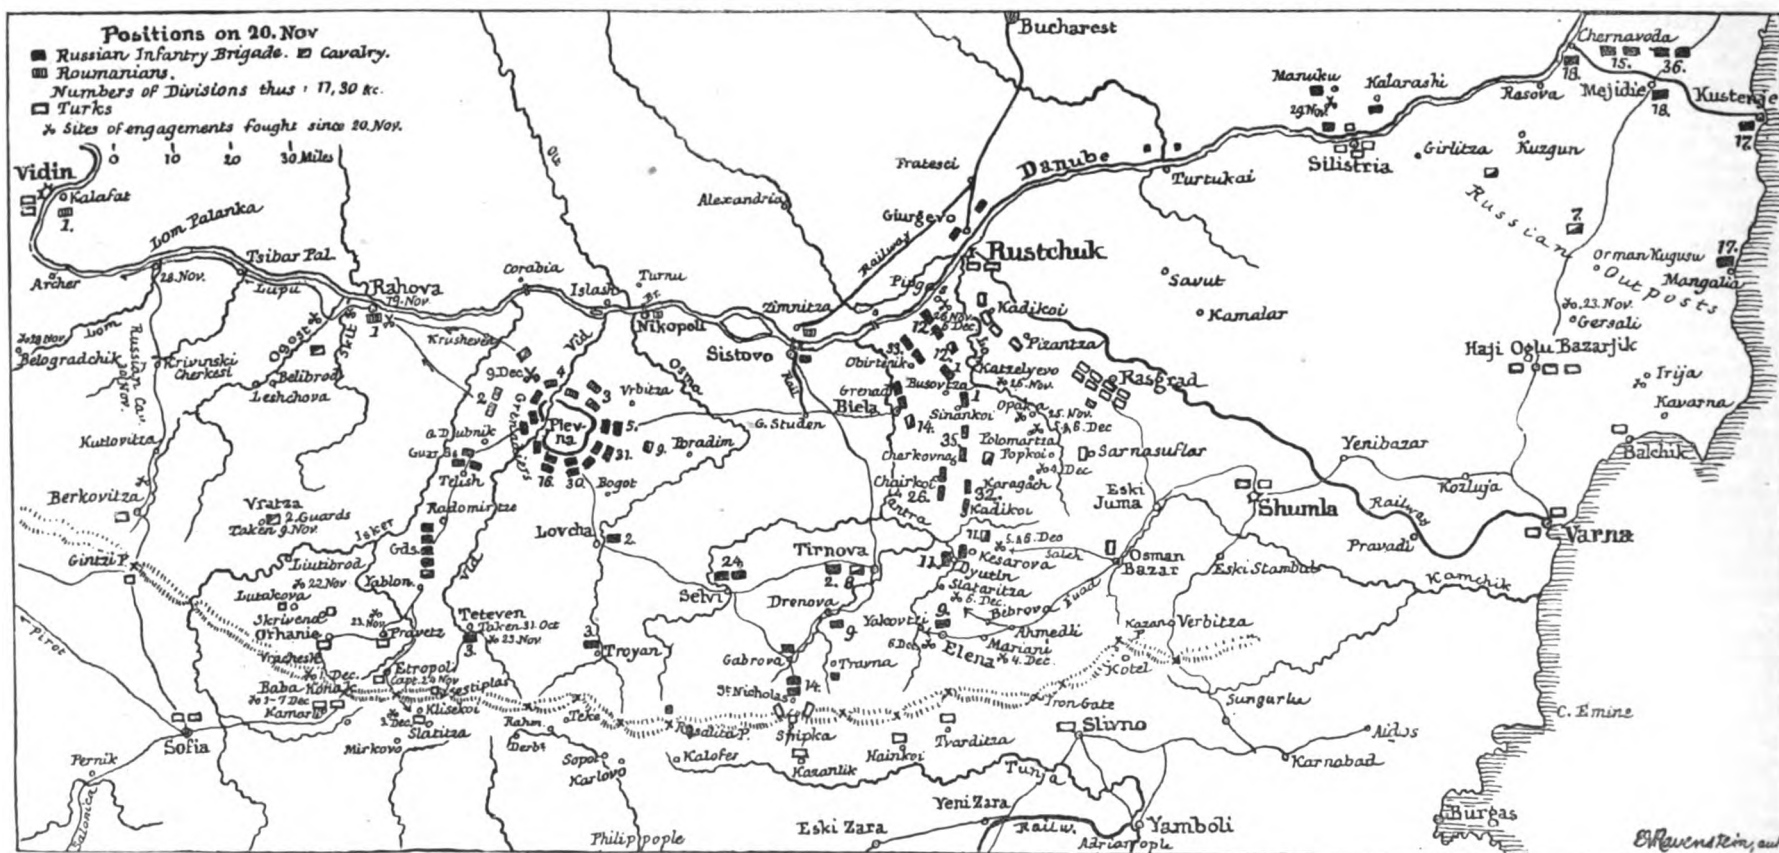

THE WAR: FUEL AND FODDER FOR THE RUSSIAN ARMY BEFORE PLEVNA.
SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

THE MILITARY POSITIONS IN BULGARIA.

The surrender of Osman Pasha and his army, with the Turkish fortified position at Plevna, on Monday last, will of course make an entire change in the relative bearing and future movements of the contending forces in Bulgaria. Yet it may still be worth while to survey, by the aid of our Map, the situations which were actually held by the different army commanders, Russian and Turkish, throughout the whole of that extensive country, till within a few days ago; and even the particular divisions of the allied Russian and Roumanian troops are indicated by figures in this plan of the campaign. The recent dates, from Nov. 20 to the 9th inst., which are marked at certain localities, on the roads to the south-west of Plevna, in the neighbourhood of Etropol and the Baba Konak Pass, as well as on the river Lom, from Pirgos southwards to Elena, which lies near the Balkans, refer to those actions of Mahomet

Ali Pasha and Suleiman Pasha respectively, which were lately mentioned. It will be remembered that Mahomet Ali Pasha has been in command of the Turkish army at Orkhanieh, between Plevna and Sofia; while Suleiman Pasha has commanded the Turkish army of the Lom, extending in a line from north to south, between the Danube at Rustchuk and the Balkans at Slivno, and supported in its rear by Rustchuk and Silistria, on the Danube, Shumla, and Varna, with railway communication between these important towns. Eastern Bulgaria, to the Black Sea coast, seems to be protected enough by that Quadrilateral of fortresses, independently of Suleiman Pasha's army in the field. But Western Bulgaria, since the fall of Plevna and the loss of Osman Pasha's heroic army, can scarcely resist an invasion which will now be pressed by all the Russian, Roumanian, and Servian forces, concentrating their attack upon the Turkish positions covering Sofia. It is announced that Mahomet Ali Pasha is now superseded by another commander at Kamarli and Baba Konak; but we cannot suppose that the Turkish forces in that quarter are sufficient to hold the invasion in check. If Servia should enter upon active hostilities, her army will probably either undertake the capture of Widdin (Vidin on our map) or will advance upon Sofia down the Maritza Valley. The Turks, under Raouf Pasha, now recalled to Constantinople as Minister of War, have, indeed, stopped one of the approaches to Adrianople, by the Shipka Pass; and their capture of Elena was imagined, for a moment, to threaten the Russians at Tirnova; but these proceedings were of transient importance. The army of the Czarewitch, now at Biela and on the Yantra, will henceforth be set free to act against Suleiman Pasha and the Quadrilateral, being no longer required to secure the left flank of the Grand Duke Nicholas before Plevna. Farther away to the north-east, beyond Silistria, lies the Russian division under General Zimmermann, which does nothing.

THE TELEPHONE.

We give some Illustrations of the apparatus lately invented by Professor Alexander Graham Bell for the electrical transmission of distinctly articulate sounds to great distances. In general, the "telephone," as it is called, consists of a strong ordinary magnet, to the two extremities or poles of which are attached properly insulated telegraph wires. Just in front of the extremities of the magnet there is a thin plate of iron, and in front of this again there is the mouth-piece of a speaking-tube. By this last the sounds which it is desired to transmit are collected and concentrated, and falling on the metal plate cause it to vibrate. These vibrations, in their turn, excite in the two wires electric currents, which correspond exactly with the vibrations—that is, with the original sounds. If, now, the two wires are connected with an ordinary line of telegraph, specially insulated for the purpose, the sounds can be transmitted to any distance, and on arriving at their destination are reproduced in a precisely similar apparatus. Already there are varieties of the telephone, but this is its essential nature.

Professor Bell's lecture to the Society of Arts last week drew a crowded audience. He spoke first of mechanical arrangements, as by wooden rods, or strings connecting membranes, for transmitting the vibrations resulting from sound. In electric telephony the vibrations are not mechanically transmitted, but the electric current passes along the conductor and reproduces de novo a like sound at the receiving end. Attention was drawn to the distinct species of currents of electricity which have been employed in electrical telephony. These are, primarily, three—intermittent, pulsatory, and undulatory. The latter in its special application was shown to be continuous and coincident with the motion of a particle of air in motion under the influence of the combinations of particular sounds. These larger divisions were subdivided into nine varieties. Hitherto all experimenters had dealt with the intermittent and pulsatory currents. Professor Bell claimed to be the first to have used undulatory currents, whereby not merely musical sounds could be produced, but beyond those the timbre as well as the force could be realised. He admitted that as yet the undulatory character of the current was only approximate, but he showed how the present imperfection could be largely counteracted. The earliest means of producing an undulatory current was devised by Helmholtz. A tuning-fork was attached to a voltaic battery, and one wire from it just immersed in a cup of mercury. When the circuit was closed, the magnet attracted the forks apart and the wire was pulled out of the mercury; when the current thus ceased the magnetic influence ceased with it, and the wire dropped again into the mercury; so the vibrations of the fork were kept up and the musical sound produced. Helmholtz also devised a receiving apparatus, in which a fork of the same pitch took up the vibrations and a resonator intensified its sound. The next step was the trial of a number of tuning-forks, the sounds of several being combined together to copy the timbre, or quality, of the particular sound originally produced. Certain vowel sounds were in this way obtained. Such was the state of progress when Professor Bell devised his first apparatus for the transmission of undulatory currents. This was a harp of steel rods attached to the poles of a powerful magnet. The intensity of the current depends on the speed of the motion of the originating rod, the downward motion producing positive and the upward negative qualities; and thus the intensity of the sound is proportional to the velocity of the vibrations. The variation of the amplitude of the vibrations induces variations in the intensity of the sounds. By the results of of the combinations of musical notes articulate sounds can be produced, and by reproducing their intensity the timbre is acquired. The phonograph of Leon Scott was the next means of advancing telephony. This instrument consisted of a cone having a membrane at the small end, into which (the wide end) the voice was projected, and its vibrations transmitted to the membrane, which by means of a long style of wood traced its own motions on a piece of glass moved rapidly along. This instrument led to the substitution of an iron plate for the membrane. Mr. Blake, an aurist, suggested some experiments with a human ear, which when moistened with glycerine, and thus made pliable, vibrated a long style of hay, the vibrations being recorded on a plate of smoked glass. This was the clue to the present form of Professor Bell's telephone. The bones of the ear were seen to be disproportionately large and heavy, and it was argued that if vibrations from a thin membrane could be set up in them, something larger and more substantial than mere membrane it was considered might be employed. A rod of iron was first tried, and subsequently plates; and in some experiments with Mr. T. A. Watson the first articulate sounds were faintly detected. Another modification was tried, and increased distinctness of articulate sounds resulted; the effects of interposing the resistance of fluids, water and mercury, were also tested. The form of the receiving apparatus next underwent change. It first consisted of a hollow drum, with the electro-magnet inside, and when the ear was placed on the iron lid the sounds were distinctly heard. Then followed experiments on the needful extent of the voltaic battery, which resulted in demonstrating that the pole only of the magnet need be inclosed by the coil. Varying the power of the battery showed that extent of power was not needful, the residual magnetism being sufficient to reproduce the sounds. Permanent magnets then were introduced, being the primary step to the introduction of portable instruments. The plate of iron dispensing with the membrane followed in the series of ordeals. Portions of plates were padded, and improved effects resulted. The thickness and size of plates also were examined into, and it was found that when the variations were extreme, either in respect to thickness or size, nasal sounds would be produced on the one hand and drumming sounds on the other. It was found also that the voice spoken through an inch of wood over the originating iron plate did not prevent a conversation being carried on through an interval of three miles. In other experiments with Professor Cross, of Boston, it was proved that milder sounds were transmitted more clearly than loud tones; and, finally, the instrument was described, as now manufactured, in its handy portable form of a sort of hand-trumpet of some eight inches long by four inches in diameter at its broadest end. In conversation two instruments are used, one to speak through, the other kept at the ear, as there was found a difficulty in using one instrument only, as both the correspondents might be speaking or listening at the same instant; but with two instruments a regular and continuous conversation can be kept up the same as in the ordinary way in a room. Some most interesting experiments with the telephone were noticed as having been lately made by Sir William Thomson, in which the telephone had proved itself a most valuable means of notifying the interferences of sound. The application to diving apparatus was also described in detail. It might be asked how far it was possible for sound to be transmitted. At present no limit had been discovered, and he hoped the telephone might soon be in use on circuits of all lengths. The longest actual distance through which conversations have been held was stated to be 258 miles—namely, between Boston and New York; but in laboratory experiments conversations have been perfectly clear through resistances equal to distances of 6000 miles. (With respect to the portable telephone, No. 4 in our illustration, although five or six miles carrying distance only is claimed for it, yet Professor Bell told our artist that by its aid a message, under favourable circumstances, has accomplished a transit of eighty miles. In fact, as yet the powers of the telephone are unknown. In the course of the evening two telephones were used, one being connected by wire with a neighbouring hotel, and the other having its other terminus in Gough-square, Fleet-street. Questions and answers were sent through these apparatus (one of the experimenters being the Earl of Caithness), and the responses were distinct, and almost immediate. A vote of thanks was heartily passed to Professor Graham Bell at the close of the lecture.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

THE MARCHIONESS OF NORTHAMPTON.

The Most Hon. Eliza, Marchioness of Northampton, died on the 4th inst. at Florence. Her Ladyship was the second daughter of Admiral the Hon. Sir George Elliot, K.C.B. (son of Gilbert, first Earl, and brother of George, second Earl of Minto, G.C.B.), by Eliza Cecilia, his wife, youngest daughter of James Ness, Esq., of Osgodoe, in the county of York, and was married, Aug. 21, 1844, to Captain Lord William Compton, R.N., who succeeded to the marquise of Northampton on March 3 last, at the death of his elder brother. The Marchioness leaves four sons and three daughters; of the latter the eldest, Katrine Cecilia, is Countess Cowper.

MR. SYDNEY SMIRKE.

Mr. Sydney Smirke, R.A., F.R.S., F.S.A., the architect, died at Tunbridge Wells on the 8th inst., in his seventy-eighth year. Among his principal works are the Carlton and Conservative club-houses in London; the restorations of portions of Lichfield Cathedral, York Minster (after the second fire), the Savoy Chapel, and the Temple; the reading-room and many other works at the British Museum; and the new Royal Academy at Burlington House. Mr. Smirke was elected Associate of the Royal Academy in 1848, R.A. in 1860, Professor of Architecture in 1861, and treasurer in 1862. He was a trustee of the Academy and of the Soane Museum, and had received the gold medal of the Royal Institute of British Architects.

The deaths have also been announced of—

Lieutenant-Colonel William Tedlie, late 60th Rifles, on the 6th inst., at Boulogne-sur-Mer.

William Freeman, Esq., J.P., formerly of London-street and Heigham-grove, Norwich, on the 2nd inst., aged ninety-four.

James Russell, Esq., J.P., on the 30th ult., at Kirkcaldy, Fifeshire, aged sixty-eight.

William Henry Mounsey, Esq., late Captain 4th and 15th Regiments, on the 3rd inst., at Rochelle Hall, near Carlisle, aged sixty-nine.

The Rev. William Farley Wilkinson, B.D., late Fellow and Tutor of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, on the 5th inst., at North Walsham, aged eighty-one.

The Rev. Walter Mooney Hatch, M.A., Fellow of New College, Oxford, and Rector of Birchanger, Essex, on the 2nd inst., at Birchanger, aged thirty-four.

Thomas Atchison, Esq., late Captain Royal Artillery, and Hon. Colonel Royal Lancashire Militia Artillery, at Bradford, on the 4th inst., his ninetieth birthday.

Henry FitzRoy, Esq., of Salcey Lawn, Northampton, eldest son of the late Rev. Lord Henry FitzRoy, Prebendary of Westminster (son of Augustus Henry, third Duke of Grafton, K.G.), on the 5th inst., at Fitz Roy House, Putney, aged seventy-one.

Major William Temple Parratt, late 58th Regiment, on the 27th ult., at Snodlands, Kent, aged fifty-six. He was the youngest son of the late Lieutenant-Colonel Hildebrand Meredith Parratt, of Effingham House, Leatherhead, Surrey, and brother to Colonel Evelyn Latimer Parratt, now of Effingham House.

Walter Lawrence Lawrence, Esq., J.P. and D.L., of Sandywell, Gloucestershire, on the 3rd inst., at the Manor House, Sevenhampton, Gloucestershire, aged seventy-eight. He was the son of William Morris, Esq., of Sevenhampton, and assumed the name of Lawrence, that of his maternal grandfather.

Lady Catherine Harcourt, on the 5th inst., at Buxted Park, Sussex. Her Ladyship was the eldest daughter of Charles Cecil Cope, third and last Earl of Liverpool (on whose death the earldom of Liverpool became extinct, and the baronetcy of Jenkinson passed to his cousin), and was married, in 1837, to Colonel Francis Vernon Harcourt, of St. Clare, Isle of Wight, Esquerry to the late Duchess of Kent.

The Rev. Thomas Salwey, B.D., Rector of St. Florence, Pembroke, and formerly Vicar of Oswestry, Salop, on the 3rd inst., at Worthing, aged eighty-six. He was second son of Theophilus Richard Salwey, Esq., of The Lodge, in the county of Salop, by Anna Maria, his wife, daughter and coheir of Thomas Hill, Esq., M.P., of Court of Hill, in the county of Salop. He married, 1829, Frances, daughter and coheir of Henry Gibbons, Esq., and leaves issue.

William Hutton, Esq., of Gate Burton Hall, Lincolnshire, J.P. and D.L., on the 5th inst., aged seventy-two. Mr. Hutton was the eldest son of William Hutton, Esq., of Gate Burton, by Mary Anne, his wife, daughter of Thomas Pyke, Esq., of Baythorne Park, Essex. He was educated at Rugby, and at Magdalen College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A., 1827, and M.A., 1833. His son and successor, Colonel George Morland Hutton, of Knaith, Lincolnshire, is J.P. and D.L. for that county.

The Rev. John Charles William Leslie, of Ballybay, in the county of Monaghan, on the 29th ult., at Cannes, in his seventieth year. He was fourth son of the late James Leslie, Esq., of Leslie Hill, in the county of Antrim, J.P. and D.L., High Sheriff 1799, and was descended from Henry Leslie, D.D., Bishop of Meath at the Restoration. He married, 1844, Emily Eleonora Wilhelmina, widow of Arthur French, Esq., and only child of Charles Albert Leslie, Esq., of Ballybay, and leaves a son and a daughter.

The Birmingham School Board have issued a precept for £16,000, which will necessitate the levying of a rate of 8d. in the pound. Last year the amount required was £35,000, and the education rate was 6d. in the pound.

An address and a massive Grecian silver vase have been presented to Sir Talbot Clifford Constable, Bart., of North Ferriby, by a number of gentlemen, as a mark of appreciation for the liberal manner in which he has hunted the Holderness and adjacent districts for three years at his own expense.

Of seven prizes given this year by the Cobden Club to the most successful students in political economy in connection with the Cambridge University Extension Syndicate for conducting local lectures, five have been awarded to female competitors. The winners are Gertrude Gregson, of Highbury Bowdon; Sarah Smithson, York; Hannah Cheetham, Southport; Annie Hankinson, Altrincham; Elizabeth H. Sturge, Chesham; H. R. Kruger, Hull; and A. W. Tarbotton, Hull.

CHESS IN LONDON.

The following very interesting Game was lately played at the Divan between Mr. MacDonnell and a strong Amateur. (Musio Gambit.)

WHITE (Mr. M.) BLACK (Mr. E.)
1. P to K 4th P to K 4th
2. P to K B 4th P takes P
3. Kt to K B 3rd P to K 4th
4. B to B 4th P to Kt 5th
5. Kt to B 3rd
6. Kt to B 3rd
7. P to Q 4th, followed (if B takes P) by P to Q B 3rd, is the correct defence.
8. Kt to Q 5th Q to Q 3rd
9. Castles Kt to K 2nd
10. Kt takes K B P Q Kt to B 3rd

This was A. MacDonnell's method of varying the Muzio attack. It was formerly considered inferior to 6. Castles; but that opinion loses much of its force now that the weak points of the latter continuation have been discovered.

His best play was Kt to K 4th, to which the reply would probably be Kt to K 3rd (ch), leading to a series of exchanges; but White seems to keep the better game.

Mr. MacDonnell now proceeds in a graceful and agreeable fashion to put an end to the fray.

11. B takes B P takes Kt
12. Q to Q 5th (ch) K to K 3rd
13. B to Q 2nd Q to Q 5th (ch)
14. K to R sq Q to Kt 2nd

CHESS IN NOTTINGHAM.

A Skirmish between the Rev. A. B. Skipworth and Mr. S. Hamel, at the Nottingham Chess Soiree, on the 13th ult. (Irregular Opening.)

WHITE (Mr. S.) BLACK (Mr. H.)
1. P to Q B 4th P to Q 4th

No one can know better than Mr. Hamel that this is an altogether incorrect and bizarre defence. We may very reasonably infer, therefore, that he did not care for serious chess upon this occasion, and wished to bring on a spangly fight.

2. P takes P Q takes P
3. Kt to Q B 3rd Q to Q 3rd
4. P to K 3rd Kt to K B 3rd
5. Kt to B 3rd B to K 4th
6. P to Q 4th P to Kt 3rd
7. Q to Kt 3rd B to Q 3rd
8. B to K 2nd B to Q 3rd
9. Castles Castles
10. Kt to Q Kt 5th B to K 6th
11. B to Q 2nd P to B 4th
12. Kt takes B Q takes Kt
13. P takes P P takes P

The position is quite abnormal, and Black has the worst of it; probably not much to his own surprise.

14. B to B 3rd Q Kt to Q 2nd
15. K R to Q sq Q to Kt 3rd
16. Q to R 3rd Kt to Q 4th
17. B to R 5th Q to Kt 2nd
18. Kt to K sq Q R to Kt sq
19. P to Q Kt 3rd K Kt to Kt 3rd
20. B to K B 3rd

We doubt the policy of this line of play, and should much prefer Q R to B sq. The Bishops are in good positions, and should two passed Pawns, wins easily.

CHESS INTELLIGENCE.

A match took place between the Bermondsey and Railway Clearing-House Chess Clubs on the 6th inst., at Seymour-street, N. The first-named association was victorious by five games to one, with three draws.

On the 7th inst. a contest occurred between the Eclectic Chess Club and the fifth class of the City of London Club, with even results. There were ten players on each side, and the score at the finish was eight to eight, with three draws.

By the programme of the Grantham Chess Meeting, noticed by us last week, we observe that it is proposed to give additional prizes in the various tournaments—viz., for the highest score made by open games, for the two best or most brilliant games, and for the highest score with the smallest number of draws. It will be interesting to see how these regulations work; but, unquestionably, they will serve either to attract combatants who otherwise might not expect to have much chance of a prize, or to reward unsuccessful but brilliant players who have succumbed to superior soundness. With such inducements to play open games, close debates will be rather at a discount at this meeting.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated Feb. 1, 1876) of Mr. John Christian Frederick Engelhardt, late of Nos. 18 and 19, Fenchurch-street, and of No. 6, Pembroke-square, who died on Sept. 16 last, was proved on the 27th ult. by Mrs. Emma Susannah Engelhardt, the widow, and sole executrix, the personal estate being sworn under £100,000. The testator leaves legacies and annuities to many of his own and his wife's relations, to several of his clerks and servants, and to the following "hospitals"—viz., to the German Hospital, £200; to the "British Orphan," the "Infant Orphan," the "London Orphan," and the Home for Incurables, £100 each, all free of duty. Provision is made for testator's two younger sons joining his eldest son in his business, and there are bequests in favour of his daughters; the residue of his property is given to his wife for life and then to his six children.

The will and two codicils (dated April 17, Aug. 30, and Oct. 5, 1877) of Mr. Joseph Benskin, late of Watford, Herts, who died on Oct. 30 last, were proved on the 4th inst. by Thomas Cottrell, Augustus Great Rex, and James Bean, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £80,000. The testator bequeaths legacies to his executors, and legacies and annuities to his sisters, Mrs. Gain and Mrs. Fisher; the rest of his testamentary dispositions refer exclusively to his widow, Mrs. Maria Benskin, and his children.

The will and codicil (dated Jan. 23, 1871, and May 30, 1876) of the Rev. Elborough Woodcock, late of No. 6, Clifton-place, Hyde Park, who died on Oct. 28 last, were proved on the 1st inst. by Rowland Nevitt Bennett and the Rev. Elborough Woodcock, the son, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £70,000. The testator bequeaths upon the trusts of the marriage settlement of his daughter, Mrs. Sophia Stuart Johnson, £18,000; to his son-in-law, Edmund Charles Johnson, £500; to his housekeeper, Kate Fry, £800; to his executors and trustees, £250 each; and some other legacies. The residue of his property he leaves upon trust for his said son.

The will (dated July 4, 1870) of Miss Eliza Bowman, late of No. 6, Maitland-place, Clapton, who died on the 4th ult., was proved on the 23rd ult. by John Henry Lees, the Rev. Henry Arthur Giraud, and Frederick William Oliver, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £30,000. The whole of testatrix's property is left upon trust for her brother, Charles Bowman, his wife and children.

The will (dated Sept. 9, 1874) of Mr. Richard Henry Towneley, of No. 76, Eaton-place, Belgrave-square, who died at Rome on April 20, 1877, was proved on June 27 last by Charles George Barrington, Esq., the acting executor. The testator's personal effects were sworn under £70,000. After stating the effect of certain transactions between himself and his father on which he assumes there may at his death be a balance due to him from his father, testator gives that balance to his father. His father being entitled for his life to the income of whatever funds might come to testator under the provisions of the settlement executed previous to the marriage of his father and mother (formerly Lucy Ellen Tichborne), testator gives his mother, if she survives his father and himself, such income for her life; the capital to form part of his residuary personal estate. The will contains no other legacies. The real estate (if any) and the residuary personal estate, whether arising under the above-mentioned marriage settlement, or from a charge in testator's favour on the Towneley family estates, or otherwise, are given to trustees (the Earl of Rosebery and Mr. C. G. Barrington) upon trusts, for the benefit of his three sisters, Theresa Harriet Mary, Lucy Evelyn, and Mabel Anne, in equal shares, with an explanation that, although his love and affection for his other sister, Mary Elizabeth, were the same as for his three first-mentioned sisters, he had not given her any participation in his property because he considered her otherwise sufficiently provided for.

The will (dated Nov. 13, 1874) of Mr. Samuel Sharman Dancocks, late of Harcourt House, Finborough-road, Fulham, and of No. 177, Fulham-road, who died on Oct. 10 last at Carlsbad, in Bohemia, was proved on the 28th ult. by Edwin Moore and Mrs. Lucy Dancocks, the widow, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £30,000. The testator, after giving legacies to his wife and children, leaves the residue to his wife for life, and then to his two sons, George Wingfield Dancocks and Charles Harcourt Dancocks.

The will (dated Nov. 22, 1876) of Mr. John Cropp, of No. 4, Foxton-villas, Richmond, Surrey, who died on Oct. 27 last, was proved on the 27th ult. by his nephew, Thomas William Davies and Thomas Bicker, two of the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £30,000. Subject to legacies to the two acting executors, testator's estate is disposed of for the benefit of his wife and two daughters.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

With the approach of the season of Christmas and New-Year festivities dance music cannot fail to be largely in demand; and there is accordingly a plentiful supply forthcoming from various publishing sources. It is impossible to notice all the myriad productions of the kind, but we may specify some as likely to meet the various requirements in this respect.

Messrs. J. B. Cramer and Co. publish two sprightly sets of quadrilles, one entitled "La Créole," by Olivier Métra, based on subjects from Offenbach's opera; the other, "Sea Nymphs Quadrille," by C. Godfrey, founded on themes from Lecocq's operetta. The same publishers also issue "The Clang Valse," by C. Godfrey, after Molloy's popular songs; and a spirited waltz entitled "Cleopatra's Needle Waltz," by Albert Hartmann.

From Messrs. A. Hammond and Co. we have "The Drummer-Boy's Polka" and "Le Tortorelle Waltzes," both by Signor Arditi, of each of which we have spoken in reference to their successful performance during the recent season of Promenade Concerts at Covent-Garden Theatre. Messrs. Hammond also issue "Le Pastel Waltzes," by G. Monnier, and "Les Castagnettes, Valse Espagnole," by Georges Lamothe, both sprightly pieces.

"The Shilling Dance Album," published by J. Barth, gives a liberal return of six pieces in the various forms of the quadrille, the schottische, the waltz, the polka, and the galop, contributed by Strauss, Coote, Montgomery, Marriott, Hobson, and Drane. "The Adeline Waltz," by G. J. Rubini, and "The Sleigh-Bells Galop," by G. Richardson (also published by J. Barth), are lively pieces of dance music.

Mr. J. Williams, of Berners-street, also contributes to the music of the class now referred to. "Les Clochettes de Corneville, Polka," by Arban, is founded on some piquant themes from Planquette's opéra-comique; as are a "Polka Mazurka," a set of quadrilles, and a "Suite de Valses," by the same adapter.

A vocal piece, appropriate to the approaching season, is "An Englishman's Song for Christmas," by F. Marshall Ward (published by J. Williams, of Berners-street). The melody is well marked, and the rhythm forcible and clear.

MR. and Mrs. GERMAN REED'S ENTERTAINMENT.
ONCE IN A CENTURY, A MUSICAL ALMANAC, by Mr. Corney Grain; and HER NEW DOLL'S HOUSE, next Wednesday, at Three and Eight; Thursday at Three; Friday, at Three and Eight; and Saturday, at Three.—ST. GEORGE'S HALL, Langham-place.

MASKELYNE and COOKE. Daily at Three and Eight o'clock. EGYPTIAN HALL, Piccadilly. Fifth year in London. The present programme embraces Psycho and Zoe, the twin automatic myriades; the sensational dance, in expiure of so-called Spiritualism, in which Mr. Cooke floats about the room asking the cabinet with him—the most astounding feat ever accomplished; and many other illusory items of novel and original character. Such is the success of the entertainment that it is advisable to book seats in advance, for which there is no charge. Admission 6s., 2s., 1s.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS.—ST. JAMES'S HALL.
NOTICE.—An EXTRA MORNING CONCERT will be given on SATURDAY, JAN. 5; and the First EVENING CONCERT on WEDNESDAY, JAN. 16. The usual distinguished Artists will appear on each occasion. Early application for Tickets should be made to Boosey and Co., 25, Regent-street; or Mr. Austin St. James's Hall.

EVANS'S, COVENT - GARDEN. — NOTICE. — These celebrated Supper-Rooms are now open for the reception of Ladies. Evans's Choir Boys, specially trained by and under the direction of Mr. F. J. Jennings; and the best available Comic Talent. Supper after the Theatre.—Proprietor, J. B. Evans.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

LONDON: SATURDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1877.

Parliament is to meet on Jan. 17 "for the dispatch of business." To that date it had been formally prorogued but a few days before without any intimation, and, presumably, without any intention of engaging it in the actual exercise of its functions. The announcement has excited no little speculation in the mind of the public. Why this sudden change of purpose? What new facts will explain it? Is it the declaration by Servia of war and independence? or is it the hasty invitation of Turkey to the Neutral Powers to mediate between herself and Russia? or is it that the view of the British Cabinet is changing, or may probably change, in regard to that "conditional neutrality" which has been its policy since the commencement of hostilities? Is Parliament to be asked to share, and so to lighten, the responsibility of her Majesty's Government at this crisis of affairs between Russia and Turkey; or have the Government already arrived at some resolution, the carrying out of which will require the sanction of her Majesty's faithful Commons by providing the necessary supplies? Such questions as these—natural, almost inevitable—are not likely, perhaps, to elicit an immediate answer. The actual state of the facts can only be guessed. It is shrouded in a haze of uncertainty; and, unfortunately, there is nothing more undesirable at this period of the year for the revival of business than a general conviction that something serious is at hand, and a general ignorance of what that may chance to be.

It can hardly be pretended, we think, that the relation of this country to the belligerents in South-Eastern Europe furnishes adequate grounds for an alteration of its policy. "British interests," as specifically described by Mr. Cross, Lord Derby, and Sir Stafford Northcote, are not more threatened at the present moment than they have been since the crossing of the Danube by the Russians. The fall of Plevna has merely removed an accidental obstacle to the invasion of Roumelia. The Servian declaration of war, upon whatever ground it may be condemned, or justified, does nothing to modify the conditions upon which we have publicly professed our neutrality. The Circular Note to the Neutral Powers in which they are somewhat coyly asked to shield Turkey from the effects of her own obstinacy, offers no concession but such as might have been made during the Session of the Constantinople Conference nearly twelve months ago. The tone of it is still the same. The justification of Turkish misrule is put upon the same grounds of untruthfulness. The promises of amendment are without any guarantee that they will be performed. The "integrity and independence of the Ottoman Empire," so far as they were secured by the Treaty of Paris, are assumed as bases which upwards of twenty years of misrule in Turkey have done nothing to modify. Of course such a diplomatic document was little likely to win favour with the Neutral Powers, nor, if reports current can be relied upon, has it done so. Germany has not stirred. Austria sees nothing in it to affect the line of policy she has adopted. France is probably too absorbed in the happy settlement of her internal affairs to give any serious attention, just at present, to the Eastern Question. Italy alone has intimated a disposition to join with other Powers in consideration of the diplomatic movement appealing to their judgment. What Great Britain has done in the matter remains to be seen. It is not probable that Lord Derby looks upon the Circular Note of the Turkish Government as presenting an adequate basis for European action; but he may regard it as an indication on the part of Turkey that she feels herself to be unequal to the defensive task which she may have to perform. And he may regard, and perhaps rightly regard, such an indication as a good reason for conference among the Powers as to what they may unitedly recognise as reasonable and practicable terms of peace.

It would seem to be far from improbable that before the date appointed for the meeting of Parliament Russia may be in a position to prescribe conditions of peace to Turkey, or that Turkey, anxious to stave off impending ruin, may incline to negotiate with Russia alone. There are many reasons which might induce the Turk rather to submit to the dictation of her foe than to put herself under the protection of Europe, and thereby to surrender her political independence. It may be with a view to such a possibility that Parliament has been summoned for "the dispatch of business." It is much to be desired in any case, and more especially in the case supposed, that the utterance of the British people in the pending crisis should be clear and determinate. A thorough debate in both Houses of Parliament on the present position of the Eastern Question and on the relation in which the country chooses to stand towards it, might go far to strengthen the Ministry in case their policy is unchanged, or to guide them in the event of their wishing to substitute for it one of enterprise. At any rate, we are inclined to think that it is a hopeful sign of Ministerial sense of responsibility that the early assembling of Parliament has been resolved upon. If there had been any intention on the part of the Cabinet to commit the country to a policy which it would be likely to resent—a policy of war instead of one of neutrality—one can hardly surmise that it would be in haste to meet the representatives of the people. It seems somewhat more probable that, in this instance, it is really anxious to ascertain, upon the best authority, what line of action England should take in circumstances of no little difficulty and of paramount importance. It is hardly credible that her Majesty's advisers should deem themselves authorised to strike out a new direction of policy without giving free play to the opinion and will of the legislative bodies. The public, we think, are not entitled to presume that the intention of the Cabinet is, or will be, to forestall the National judgment. There are members of it who, if they are not in a majority as to numbers, being a minority of great moral weight, would refuse, we think, to take the country by surprise, and would rather retire from office than be parties to any arrangement by which the Foreign Policy of England should be materially shifted from one foundation to another before consulting the great Council of the Kingdom.

Nothing, however, it is to be feared, can be hoped for from the discretion of the Turkish Government. It is their interest—at least, so they believe—to identify England as much as possible with what they still describe as the integrity and independence of the Ottoman Empire. There can be no doubt that they have powerful supporters in these dominions; and it will be well for the public to ascertain, through Parliament, how far the anticipations and wishes of the Sublime Porte are to be justified by the determination of the English people.

THE COURT.

The Queen was joined at Windsor Castle on Thursday week by the Prince and Princess of Wales. The Royal dinner party included also the Dean of Windsor and General Sir T. M. Biddulph. On the previous day Princess Christian and Princesses Victoria and Louise of Schleswig-Holstein visited her Majesty; and Lady Frances Baillie, the Very Rev. the Dean of Westminster, and the Rev. Canon Pearson dined with the Queen.

Yesterday week was the anniversary of the death of the Prince Consort. Princess Louise of Lorne and the Marquis of Lorne arrived at the castle. The Queen, the Prince and Princess of Wales, Prince and Princess Christian, Princess Louise, Princess Beatrice, and the Marquis of Lorne went to the Mausoleum at Frogmore at half-past eleven o'clock, when a short service was performed by the Dean of Windsor, and the choir of St. George's Chapel sang, under the direction of Sir George Elvey, Mus. Doc. By her Majesty's commands, the Mausoleum was opened from half-past twelve to half-past three p.m. for the ladies and gentlemen and servants of the household and their families to visit it. Several residents in Windsor and the neighbourhood were also admitted, by special permission. The Princess and Princess of Wales left the castle in the afternoon for town. Princess Christian dined with the Queen.

Her Majesty, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, went to Hughenden Manor on Saturday last, on a visit to the Earl of Beaconsfield. Princess Louisa of Lorne and the Marquis of Lorne left the castle for London. Prince and Princess Christian dined with the Queen.

Princess Beatrice attended Divine service on Sunday in the private chapel of the castle. The Rev. James Fleming, B.D., Residentiary Canon of York, Vicar of St. Michael's, Chester-square, officiated. Princess Christian visited her Majesty.

The Judge-Advocate-General had an audience of the Queen on Monday.

The Earl of Beaconsfield arrived at the castle on Tuesday, and had an audience of her Majesty. He, with the Right Hon. W. H. Smith, who had also arrived, dined with the Queen. The Hon. Lady Biddulph and Lieutenant-General H. Ponsonby were also included in her Majesty's dinner party.

The Court will pass the Christmas at Windsor.

Lady Abercromby has succeeded the Duchess Dowager of Athole as Lady in Waiting, and Viscount Hawarden and Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. Charles Lindsay have succeeded Lord Bagot and Mr. John F. Campbell of Islay as Lord and Groom in Waiting to her Majesty.

The Prince and Princess of Wales returned to Clarence House, St. James's, after visiting the Queen at Windsor Castle. Their Royal Highnesses went to the Gaiety Theatre on Tuesday evening. The Prince left London on Wednesday on a visit to Mr. W. A. Tyssen-Amherst, at Diddington Hall, near Brandon. The Princess remains a few days longer at Clarence House.

Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein left Cumberland Lodge on Monday on a visit to the Earl and Countess of Normanton, at Somerley, Ringwood.

Princess Louise and the Marquis of Lorne dined with Lord and Lady Howard of Glossop last week at Rutland-gate.

The Duke of Cambridge has been on a visit during the week to Lord and Lady Aveland at Normanton Park.

The Duchess of Teck has recovered from her recent indisposition.

The Crown Prince of Hanover dined with the Prince of Wales at Clarence House on Saturday last. His Royal Highness left the Alexandra Hotel on Sunday for Paris; he drove in one of the Prince of Wales's carriages, and on his way to the station called at Clarence House, whence the Prince of Wales accompanied him to Charing-cross, and there took leave of him.

The Prince Imperial went on Monday to Wimpole, on a visit to the Earl and Countess of Hardwicke.

Her Majesty's new powerful armour-plated ship Northampton concluded on Saturday last a series of steam trials in the Channel, under the inspection of Vice-Admiral Sir Houston Stewart. They proved entirely satisfactory, a speed of over fourteen knots per hour being attained.

THE ROYAL VISIT TO HUGHENDEN.

On Saturday her Majesty the Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, and attended by General Ponsonby, Colonel Du Plat, and the Marchioness of Ely, left Windsor Castle for Hughenden, on a visit to Lord Beaconsfield. At the Windsor station of the Great Western Railway a special train of saloon carriages had been prepared for the journey to High Wycombe. This train left Windsor at 12.40 p.m., and passed through the "west curve" at Slough on to the main down line, and thence by the village of Cookham, crossing the Thames at Bourne End, to Woburn-green. Here the first signs of loyal welcome were seen, a flag hanging above the ancient church tower, while a crowd of residents clustered near the station. A run of a few minutes more brought the train into High Wycombe station, where her Majesty arrived at 1.15 p.m., and was received with a hearty burst of cheering. The Great Western station was prettily decorated, and some of the inhabitants of High Wycombe, including Lord Carington and other gentlemen, had succeeded in turning the waiting-room of a very ordinary building into a charming boudoir, with palms and ferns on all sides. The platform was carpeted and the walls draped with crimson cloth, a reserved space being railed off for privileged spectators and the Mayor and Corporation of the place. A lofty triumphal arch of evergreens, surmounted by the words "God Save the Queen," spanned the entrance to the station-yard, along one side of which were Venetian masts carrying festoons of flags. Drawn up in a line facing the booking-offices was a guard of honour composed of the permanent staff and band of the Royal Bucks Militia, under Captain F. Powell, with Lieutenant Rose bearing the Queen's colours, and the Bucks Volunteers, commanded by Colonel Wethered, the school children occupying the west end of the yard. Crendon-street, a narrow, steep thoroughfare leading into the town, presented a vista of arches and flags, while High-street was a blaze of colour. The Mayor's invitation to the townspeople to show their loyalty in a becoming manner had been interpreted in this way. Wherever a balcony could be draped, wherever a motto could be attached or a flag could be hung, the enthusiasm of High Wycombe had seized the opportunity of showing itself. Along the line of route it seemed hardly possible to hang another flag. High Wycombe has for its staple manufacture the making of chairs from the beech woods so abundant hereabouts. An archway of these materials was improvised along the Queen's route. It was made up of chairs of all kinds, and bore the words, "Long Live the Queen." Her Majesty's attention was specially attracted by this curious structure, and the Royal carriage was stopped that its occupants might have a better view. Most of the shops were closed, the little town kept holiday, and was thronged with visitors, while the bells rang merrily from the church steeple.

Lord Beaconsfield, attended by Mr. Montagu Corrie, his private secretary, reached the station at about one o'clock to await the arrival of her Majesty. Among those present on the platform were Lord Carington, Colonel Carington (M.P. for High Wycombe), Sir C. L. Young, Mr. A. Gilby, J.P., Mr. A. Vernon, M.P., Mr. R. H. Crewe, M.P., and Mr. C. W. Phillips (Mayor of Wycombe), with several Aldermen and Councillors, and the Town Clerk. Her Majesty, upon alighting from the Royal saloon, was received by Lord Beaconsfield, who introduced the Mayor. The latter presented an address, which was beautifully illuminated on vellum and bore the seal of the Corporation of Wycombe. The Queen, having accepted the address, handed it to the Prime Minister, who thanked the Mayor. The Queen and Princess Beatrice accepted beautiful bouquets of flowers presented to them by Miss Emily Phillips, the daughter of the Mayor. They walked through the waiting-room to an open carriage, drawn by four horses, the Guard of Honour saluting and the bands playing the National Anthem. As the Royal carriage passed out of the station-yard, amid the cheers of the spectators, the children sang "God Save the Queen." The journey through High-street to the Hughenden road was one long-continued scene of loyal enthusiasm. Never has the Queen received a heartier welcome. A drive of about a couple of miles brought the Queen to Hughenden. The Premier had preceded the Royal party in his own carriage, and was at his door to receive her Majesty. At Hughenden the Queen and Princess Beatrice lunched with Lord Beaconsfield and remained about two hours. Before leaving, the Queen planted a tree on the lawn in front of the house to serve as memorial of her visit, and Princess Beatrice planted another tree close by. Lord Beaconsfield attended the Queen on her return to High Wycombe station. Her Majesty was received with renewed demonstrations of loyalty. The station and line of route were kept by the borough police and a detachment of the metropolitan force. At the departure of the Queen the Guard of Honour was again in attendance. At 3.45 p.m. the Royal train left High Wycombe, and after a rapid journey arrived at Windsor shortly after half-past four o'clock. The Queen and Princess Beatrice drove to the Castle.

CHRISTMAS CARDS.

The great variety of beautiful designs, pictorial, decorative, and poetical or literary, presented by such eminent manufacturers of artistic fancy-ware as Messrs. De la Rue, Marcus Ward, and others lately named with approval, should be enough to please every taste in the choice of Christmas cards. Our page Engraving, from drawings by Mr. George Cruikshank, junior, exhibits a collection of grotesque and humorous devices, bearing reference to the customs of this festive season, and suitable by the form and size of the drawings, if not by their spirit and character, to appear on these missives of personal greeting which people send by post to their acquaintance in the last week of the year. It is true that some of them are rather too satirical for human self-esteem to accept without displeasure; and we should not recommend their adoption for cards to be addressed to friends who are of a sensitive disposition. It would be a sad mistake to convert any form of social compliment, especially upon this occasion of the sacred festival of "peace and good will," into what might be likely to give offence; but we are perfectly sure that this is far from being the intention of the clever artist, who has merely indulged a vein of comic invention and a genuine love of fun in such harmless gambols of capricious imagination. The reader is therefore invited, with a safe conscience, to enjoy the general drollery of these caricatures, and to take notice that they are not to be copied or extracted for the purpose of hitting any particular foibles in the circle of his real acquaintance.

"NEVER MIND! CHRISTMAS IS COMING!"

The two little girls overtaken in the street by a disagreeable fit of bad weather, any time in December or November of this or any other year, may well console themselves for the absence of summer sunshine by remembering that the genial glow of Christmas festivity, with all its innocent frolics and almost consecrated dainties of the feast, is drawing nearer to them day by day. It is certainly a happy compensation for the bodily discomforts and the gloom and chill of on-coming winter, that we are invited by social custom, at the instance of an immemorial appointment of the Church, to make merry and rejoice with our friends, both great and small, in the last week of the departing year, when the outward aspect of nature does not usually seem very cheerful. "Christmas is coming!" has often proved a watchword of wholesome efficacy and potency to dispel the vapours of ill-humour in a simple or juvenile mind; and we should be loth to see the progress of the age, in whatever direction, at all diminish the esteem that is commonly cherished for a festival with so many pleasant associations, not to speak of its religious character.

The Bishop of St. Albans reopened the parish church of Witham on Tuesday, after restoration.

The church of Holcombe Rogus, Devon, has been restored at the expense of Mr. W. C. Rayer, of Holcombe Court.

The Duke of Rutland has given the site for the intended new church at Ilkeston, Derbyshire, and has promised £500 in aid of the building fund.

An iron church was on Tuesday opened at Stechford by the Bishop of Worcester. Stechford has largely increased in population, and the parish church of Yardley is a mile distant.

The Bishop of St. Albans has reopened Christ's Church, Warley, which had been enlarged by the addition of a north aisle containing 100 sittings.

It is announced in the Gazette that the Venerable Edward Trollope, M.A., Archdeacon of Stow, has been nominated to be Bishop-Suffragan of the see of Nottingham, in the room of Dr. Henry Mackenzie, resigned.

St. Matthias's, West Brompton, has been much improved by two beautiful Munich windows, one representing the Nativity and the other the Flight into Egypt. They come from the studio of Mayer and Co.

At the meeting of the Royal Institute of British Architects on Monday Mr. James Neale read a paper on St. Albans Cathedral. He stated that practically the whole of the Norman building of the abbey was constructed from Roman tiles from the ruins of Verulam.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, in distributing the prizes to the students of the Ripon Diocesan Female Training College, expressed the opinion that a thoroughly perfect education cannot be attained without reference to religion, and urged that it is our bounden duty to foster all institutions which conduce to the spread of a real religious education.

At a Cabinet Council held on Tuesday it was decided that Parliament shall be summoned to meet on Jan. 17, instead of the usual time in February. Several Speeches out of Parliament have been given during the past week, but we have not room for even a brief summary of them—a circumstance which our readers, perhaps, will not deeply regret at this season.

The Duke of Cambridge inspected the cadets at the Military College, Sandhurst, last Saturday, and at the conclusion of the ceremony briefly addressed the young officers, expressing his great satisfaction at the result of their training.

The Army and Navy Gazette says that Major-General Sir Archibald Alison, Bart., K.C.B., Deputy Adjutant General in Ireland, succeeds Major-General E. B. Hamley, C.B., on Jan. 1 as Commandant of the Staff College.

In reference to the Engravings of prize dogs at the Birmingham Dog Show, given in our last issue, Mr. W. Thomson, of Morden, Surrey, writes stating the dog Hero, lately belonging to him, won the first prize and cup for sheep-dogs.

The Corporation of Exeter has decided to buy the water-works of that city, on the basis of payment of 8 per cent on the capital of the water company. The terms involve an immediate expenditure by the Corporation of £94,000 in buying up the old company, and a further sum of £50,000 to £100,000 to be laid out in procuring a fresh supply of water for drinking purposes.

The Syndicate appointed to consider the requirements of the University of Cambridge in various departments of study have made a report to the Senate, wherein they recommend many additions to the present course.—The "Little-Go" list was issued on Monday morning. In Part I., the classical part of the examination, 139 have passed in the first class and 175 in the second class, while 149 have failed. In Part II., 172 have gained a first class and 159 a second class, while 147 have failed. In the additional subjects, out of 419 candidates, 332 have satisfied the examiners.—Several items of intelligence relating to the Universities and Public Schools are unavoidably omitted.

At an early hour on Thursday morning part of the upper flooring of Mr. Milne's hotel, Edinburgh, at which there was a fire on the previous evening, gave way, and carried with it seven other floors. Three of these, being in the hotel, were unoccupied, the fourth was used as shops, but the three flats below were occupied as dwelling-houses. The alarm of fire being past, most of the inhabitants returned to their dwellings, and several of them were buried in the debris, while others made narrow escapes. Three persons were taken out dead.

THE WAR.

Since the surrender of Plevna and Osman Pasha's army on Monday week, the Russians in Bulgaria have been strengthening their advanced positions towards the Balkans and preparing for a conflict with the Turkish army in the Kamarli Pass, near Orkhanieh, on the road to Sofia. They will have to overcome an obstinate resistance in those localities before they can reach Adrianople. The disposal of their many thousand prisoners of war has occupied them several days. A rumour of the suicide of Osman Pasha by poison has been contradicted. The illustrious captive is treated with great respect by the Russians; while, at Constantinople, the Sultan has conferred an honorary appointment on the son of Osman Pasha, though a mere boy. The Emperor of Russia left Bucharest on Monday night, on his return to St. Petersburg.

There is little actual news of the progress of the campaign since our last. The Turks have abandoned Elena, a town south-east of Tirnova, and near the Hainkioi Pass of the Balkans, which they had lately recaptured from the Russians. This place has now been reoccupied by General Deltinghausen, whose advance guard also holds Bebrova. Nothing has been done as yet by the army of the Czarévitch between the Jantra and the Lom; and it is supposed that Suleiman Pasha will fall back on the Quadrilateral of fortresses in Eastern Bulgaria. The immediate contest is between General Gourko's force and that of Chakir Pasha, who has succeeded Mahomet Ali Pasha, in the fortified positions south of the Etropol Balkans, on the road to Sofia.

Prince Milan of Serbia has finally issued his declaration of renewed war against the Sultan. The Servian troops have crossed the frontier between Alexinatz and Nish, and captured the fortress of Prokolopje and the position of Mramor. They are preparing also to besiege Widdin on the Danube. General Leschjanin commands their forces against Nish, and General Horvatovich against Widdin.

In Asia, so far as we can learn the position of affairs, the Russians have suspended for the present any direct attack on Erzeroum. They have retired from the Deve Boyoun Pass, which could scarcely be occupied during the wintry weather that has now set in, and their head-quarters are being formed at the village of Zoumahmad, seven miles to the north-east. They are making a road to get round to the western side of Erzeroum.

The Turkish Imperial Parliament was reopened last week by the Sultan, with a speech from the Throne in which he made no allusion to the fall of Plevna, but announced a fresh conscription for the army, which is to include the non-Mussulman population. These have lately been amenable to serve in the Civic Guard, but not among the regular troops.

A diplomatic Circular Note has been addressed to all the European Powers by the Turkish Government, expressing a general readiness to negotiate for terms of peace, but declining to admit the establishment for Bosnia, Herzegovina, and Bulgaria of any exceptional form of government, and still insisting that the common franchises and liberties granted by the present Sultan to all his subjects are quite sufficient for the protection of the Christians. It is understood that the German and Austrian Governments have refused to join in a mediation upon this basis.

We give some Illustrations of the War, from sketches by our Special Artists.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The crisis is at an end. Marshal MacMahon has submitted on every point, and signed decrees naming a Ministry of the Left. The new Cabinet is composed as follows:—Minister of Justice and President of the Council, M. Dufaure; Interior, M. de Marcère; Foreign Affairs, M. Waddington; Finances, M. Léon Say; Public Education, M. Bardoux; War, General Borel; Marine, Admiral Pothuau; Public Works, M. de Freycinet; Commerce, M. Teisserenc de Bort. The names of the new Ministry were officially published yesterday week, and in the afternoon, at the meeting of the Chambers, a message was read from Marshal MacMahon on the subject. It is of a conciliatory character, and intimates that he intends to conform to the will of the country, as the interest of the nation demands that the crisis through which it was passing should be appeased. He promises that there shall not be another dissolution, and expresses a hope that the end of the present state of things will be the beginning of the new era of prosperity. M. Dufaure, who read this message to the Senate, was warmly greeted, and for once the scene there was more animated than in the Chamber of Deputies. After the reading of the address in the Lower Chamber, the verification of the elections was resumed. A warm discussion arose upon that of M. Kerjegu, a Legitimist. The election was ultimately declared valid, as was that of M. Villiers (Right).

In the Chamber on Saturday last M. Léon Say, the Minister of Finance, stated that, as it was impossible now to vote the Budget in its entirety, the Government thought that the clauses relative to the direct taxes should be detached. He hoped the House would authorise the collection of the other items of revenue in accordance with the existing laws. A credit sufficient to last for two months would be asked for. Two bills were then presented by the Minister in accordance with the statement he had made, and these were at once adopted, after protest had been read in the name of the Legitimists and Bonapartists declaring that their votes were not to be regarded as expressing confidence in the Ministry.

M. Bardoux, the Minister of Public Instruction, introduced two bills in the Chamber on Monday—one for affording gratuitous instruction in elementary schools and another for the building of school-houses. In the Senate the death of General Aurelles de Paladines was announced by the President, who spoke in high terms of the deceased. The Budget Bills were then declared urgent.

On Tuesday M. Dufaure presented in the Lower Chamber a bill for the repeal of the law upon press offences, and for granting an amnesty to persons convicted of such offences since May 16. Almost without an expression of opposition the Senate gave its assent to the Budget scheme proposed by the Government and approved by the Lower House on Saturday. Both Chambers were then prorogued till Jan. 8 ne

An election was held on Sunday in the ninth arrondissement of Paris for a deputy in the room of M. Jules Grévy, who had elected to sit for the Jura, and M. Girardin was returned by a large majority.

An official decree was published on Wednesday appointing the opening of the Councils-General for the 21st inst.

The appointments of eighty-five Prefects were gazetted on Wednesday morning. The resignations of a certain number of the Prefects appointed by M. de Fourtou are accepted, while in other cases these functionaries have been dismissed from their posts.

The death of M. de Royer, First President of the Court of Accounts, aged seventy, is announced.

SPAIN.

The members of the Diplomatic Body presented congratulations to King Alfonso on his approaching marriage last Monday. The marriage is to be celebrated in the Basilica of Atocha at Madrid. The Princess Mercedes and her family will sojourn at Aranjuez till Jan. 22. She will arrive at Madrid only one hour before the ceremony. The fêtes are to last five days, during which time theatrical representations, horse-races, and bull-fights are to be provided for the people free. A banquet is to be given to a thousand of the poor of Madrid in the Prado, and there are to be historical processions in the Plaza de Toros; the nobles of Spain being invited to take part in the cavalcades. All children born on the 23rd are to be dowered, and 50,000 pesetas are to be distributed among the poor.

At Seville the mules of a carriage containing the Duc de Montpensier, his son, and Princess Mercedes, ran away, and the coachman was thrown from the box, but nobody was hurt.

ITALY.

In the Chamber of Deputies yesterday week a debate took place on the liberty and secrecy of private telegrams, which led to a vote of confidence in the Government being proposed by Signor Salaras. The motion was carried by 184 to 162 votes. In Sunday's sitting Signor Depretis announced that, in consequence of the present position of parties, the Ministers had tendered their resignations to the King, who had accepted them, and that Signor Depretis had been charged with the formation of a new Cabinet. The House was prorogued on Wednesday.

The Official Gazette announces the prolongation, until March 31 next, of the treaties of commerce and navigation between Italy, on the one hand, and Great Britain, Austria, Belgium, and Switzerland on the other.

SWITZERLAND.

The State Council has rejected the convention concluded with Great Britain for the mutual protection of trade-marks.

BELGIUM.

An interesting ceremony took place at Brussels last Saturday. The Palais Ducal, near the Royal Palace, which was originally built to serve as a residence for the Princes of Orange, and was used at last as the Museum of Modern Art, which is now joined to the great Museum, has been handed over to the Royal Academy and the Academy of Medicine of Belgium, and will henceforth bear the name of Palais des Academies. The inaugural sitting of the Academies took place in the great hall. The King and Queen and the Count and Countess of Flanders were present. After the termination of the sitting the King and Queen visited the collections of the two Academies.

GERMANY.

The Standard's correspondent at Berlin states that the Emperor William has agreed to accept Dr. Hermann's proffered resignation, but he will probably replace him by Dr. Sydow, the Under-Secretary in the Ministry of Religion and Education, who candidly supports the ecclesiastical policy of Prince Bismarck and Dr. Falk.

The German Government has presented the Estimates for the next year to the Federal Council for approval. There is a deficit of 35,000,000 marks, which will have to be made good by matriculatory contributions from the several States.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

Pesth was the scene of a violent popular manifestation in favour of the Turks on Sunday night. In the afternoon some seven thousand persons assembled, and speeches of a highly inflammatory nature were delivered, in which the policy of Count Andrássy was condemned in unmeasured terms. A deputation was sent to Herr Tisza, and, upon his refusing to receive more than ten or twelve persons, the mob broke into his private house, while the crowd outside smashed the windows and raised shouts of "Down with Andrássy!" "Down with Tisza!" and it was not until the troops had been called out and threatened to charge the assemblage that it could be dispersed. In Monday's sitting of the Lower House of the Hungarian Diet, Herr Sontag asked that an inquiry should be instituted into the circumstances attending this demonstration. Herr Tisza, the Minister-President, in reply, stated that the Government could not suffer either the foreign or home policy of Hungary to be determined by street demonstrations. It was the duty of the Government to maintain confidence in Hungary, and he (the Minister) counted upon the patriotism of every citizen to aid them in their task. In conclusion, Herr Tisza declared that proceedings would be taken with all due severity against the authors of the manifestation. Herr Sontag's motion, calling upon the Minister of Justice to institute an inquiry, was adopted. The Indemnity Bill proposed by the Common Ministry for detraying the common expenditure of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy during the first quarter 1878 was then agreed to, and the bill prolonging the treaty with England on the basis of the most-favoured-nation clause also passed.

By a vote of 125 against 63, the Austrian Chamber of Deputies on Monday rejected a motion for the appointment of a committee of twelve to inquire into the manner in which the press law and the law on associations have been administered by the Government.

Count Andrássy is reported to have made a long speech on Tuesday on foreign affairs before the Budget Committee of the Austrian Delegation. The committee determined to observe the most rigorous secrecy as to the communications of the Government, but they elected two delegates to draw up in concert with the Government a report, which is to be published.

After an exhaustive debate, the Compromise Committee of the Austrian Lower House adopted yesterday week, by 29 against 8 votes, the Government bill for the prolongation of the Commercial Treaty with Great Britain.

GREECE.

A popular demonstration in favour of war with Turkey occurred at Athens on Sunday evening. A Cabinet Council was held the same evening, at which it was determined that the Government, in concert with the Chamber, should adhere to the policy of maintaining peace.

AMERICA.

Congress has adjourned for the holidays without taking action on the silver question. The House of Representatives has finally passed the Paris Exhibition Bill by 124 against 89 votes. Ex-Governor M'Cormick, late Assistant-Secretary to the Treasury, has been appointed Chief Commissioner at the Exhibition.

There have been troubles at El Paso, in Texas, growing out of the disputed possession of certain salt ponds.

Mr. Farley, Democrat, has been elected senator for California, succeeding Mr. Sargent, a Republican.

The Hon. J. V. L. Pruyn, of Albany, Chancellor of the University of the State of New York, died on Nov. 21 at Clifton Springs, where he had gone for the benefit of his health, in his sixty-seventh year.

INDIA.

A telegram, dated the 15th inst., from the Viceroy of India respecting the famine, states that in Madras the number of persons receiving relief on the works was 208,507, and receiving gratuitous relief 317,001. In Bombay there were none on the works, but 13,750 were receiving gratuitous relief. In Mysore the numbers were 66,277 and 19,480 respectively.

We continue to receive good accounts of the success of both the Jowaki expeditions. The Times Calcutta correspondent, writing on the 16th, says that tribes have been unable to make any stand against artillery, and the complete destruction of Jammu and Bori, and of the other fortified hamlets in their territory, has apparently entirely cowed them. The last report states, however, that a large Jowaki council was held at Jammu on the 12th, the result of which was a determination not to treat as long as English troops remain in Jowaki territory. The Government, on the other hand, have resolved not to withdraw the troops until the tribes send in their unconditional and unqualified submission.

Another item of news sent by the Times' correspondent is that the Advocate-General, Mr. G. Paul, has been appointed an official member of the Legislative Council.

AUSTRALIA.

A Reuter's telegram from Sydney states that shortly after the New South Wales Parliament was opened the Ministry resigned in consequence of a defeat in the Legislative Assembly upon the address in reply to the Governor's opening speech. Mr. Parkes, leader of the Opposition, was then (Dec. 8) engaged in forming a new Ministry.

The Agent-General for South Australia (Sir Arthur Blyth, K.C.M.G.) has received the following telegram from the Government at Adelaide, dated the 16th inst.:—"Total amount remitted by the colonists of South Australia in aid of the Madras Relief Fund, £10,000. The emigrant vessels Queen of Nations and Rodney had arrived safely at Port Adelaide, all well. The harvest prospects were fair, and there would be about 240,000 tons of breadstuffs for exportation."

From a report presented to the "Parliament of Queensland and issued under authority," it appears that the "birth-rate for the year 1876 was 3.74," "marriage-rate persons, 1.51," and the "mortality 1.88 per cent of the population."

A riot arising out of a strike has taken place in Montreal, one man being killed and three wounded.

Mdlle. Victorine Benoit, already Bachelor of Sciences and Letters, has passed with success her examination for the end of the first year at the School of Medicine at Nantes.

The ex-Queen Isabella of Spain has ordered from one of the principal jewellers of Paris a splendid diadem of brilliants for the Infanta Mercedes.

An elephant, five tigers, and as many apes have arrived at Marseilles from India. They are intended for the Jardin des Plantes. The only giraffe at the Marseilles Zoological Gardens died recently.

The ship Robert Lees, 1200 tons, Captain Rose, sailed from Gravesend on the 14th inst., bound for Brisbane, Queensland, and had on board sixty-six married people, 143 single men, seventy-two single women, thirty-one children between the ages of twelve and one, and five infants.

The Gazette announces that the Queen has appointed Mr. Ralph Milbanke to be a Second Secretary in her Majesty's Diplomatic Service; and Mr. Henry Stewart Cunningham to be a Judge of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, in the room of Mr. A. G. Macpherson, resigned.

The diamonds shipped by the European have been recovered. They were contained in registered letters, which have been received at the Post Office. There were 104 letters in a bag for London; sixty have been identified and forwarded to their destinations, but fourteen were found beaten into a pulp, and the diamonds from them loose in the bag.

The Egyptian Minister of Finance has issued a notice that it has been thought advisable to postpone the payment of the intercalary coupon for a fortnight, in order to complete the £250,000 still wanting for that purpose without touching next year's revenues. The Minister says that all obligations created by existing decrees are thus respected.

Don Carlos, who is travelling incognito in Italy, has been robbed of his Collar of the Golden Fleece, which is not only of great pecuniary value, but is believed to be the ornament made for Philip, Duke of Burgundy, in 1430, on his rounding the order in celebration of his third marriage. It is uncertain whether the theft was committed at Venice or at Milan, but it was discovered at the latter place.

At a meeting of the Birmingham and Midland Institute the council has been empowered to apply to the Charity Commissioners for permission to raise £25,000 on mortgage for the extension of the institute, for which a site, at a cost of £15,000, has already been obtained, or to obtain a special Act of Parliament for that purpose.

At a Town Council meeting at Gravesend, on Wednesday morning, the Mayor (Mr. Troughton) presented four prizes for saving life at sea. The prizes were a pair of silver-mounted glasses and three first-class silver medals, presented to Captain W. Freshwater and the crew, named Peters, Bottle, and Pottan, of the steam-tug Reliance, of that town. They were forwarded to the Mayor by the French Government, through the Board of Trade, with the request that they should be suitably presented for saving the crew from the French ship Jean Baptiste, which became a wreck at the Nore on Nov. 14, 1876.

The National Reform Union held its annual meeting in Manchester on Wednesday. In the evening Mr. Cowen, M.P., presided over a public meeting in the Free Trade Hall. He hoped that improved organisation of the Liberal party would not be allowed to supersede free thought and free action. The objects which the party would seek in the future were an equalisation of the borough and county franchise, the enlargement of municipal institutions, control by the ratepayers of the liquor traffic, and disestablishment of established churches. A resolution was passed in favour of extending the county franchise in connection with a redistribution of seats; and, in regard to the Eastern Question, a resolution was adopted urging the Government to observe strict neutrality.

A revised scale of charges for inland money orders will come into operation on Jan. 1 next, and will be as follows:—For sums under 10s. twopence; 10s. and under £2, threepence; £2 and under £3, fourpence; £3 and under £4, fivepence; £4 and under £5, sixpence; £5 and under £6, sevenpence; £6 and under £7, eightpence; £7 and under £8, ninepence; £8 and under £9, tenpence; £9 and under £10, elevenpence; £10, one shilling. Also on Jan. 1 next the charge for registering letters will be reduced from fourpence to twopence. It will be important to note that the new envelopes, bearing twopenny stamps for the payment of the registration fee only, must be affixed to them the necessary stamp or stamps for postage, and must not be dropped into a letter-box, but must be given to an agent of the post-office.

MUSIC.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

As mentioned last week, the performances at this establishment were prolonged until Tuesday, instead of terminating, as previously announced, on Saturday last. The only specialty during the past week was the debut of Signor Celada, who was favourably received as Manrico in "Il Trovatore," the cast of the opera having been, in other respects, the same as before. On Monday "Martha" was given, with Mlle. Marimon's refined performance as the Lady Enrichetta (Martha), and the first and only appearance here this season of Madame Trebelli, who repeated her well-known representation of Nancy. The cast was also efficient in other respects, having included Signor Del Puente as Plunketto, Signor Urio as Lionello, and Signor Zololi as Lord Tristano.

On Tuesday, the closing night, selections were given from "Un Ballo in Maschera," "Dinorah," and "Rigoletto"—sustained by most of the principal artists of the company—the occasion having been for the benefit of Mr. Mapleson.

The experiment of a series of performances of Italian opera at largely reduced prices is understood to have been, as it certainly deserved to be, thoroughly successful. Sixteen operas have been performed, with a general efficiency of cast that was highly satisfactory.

The production of Verdi's "La Forza del Destino," with alterations of the libretto and the composer's recent modifications of the score, has been postponed to the early part of the regular season of next year, in consequence of the attraction exercised by the past series of performances. Her Majesty's Theatre will be reopened by Mr. Mapleson on Boxing Night with "The Swiss Cottage," a version of Adolphe Adam's operetta "Le Châlet," followed by a new grand ballet, "Rose and Marie; or, the Reward of Filial Love," in which 300 children will appear, including the students of the National Training School for Dancing. Mr. H. Weist Hill will be the musical director and conductor during the forthcoming series of performances.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

With the concert of Saturday last, the series of those performances terminated for the year, to be resumed on Feb. 9. Saturday's programme was appropriated to Mr. Hatton's new sacred drama, "Hezekiah," which was heard for the first time in public on this occasion. The text—based on the well-known incidents in the career of the King of Judah—has been written by Miss Beatrice Abercrombie. The principal characters in the supposed action are—Hezekiah, a messenger from Isaiah, Hephzibah (wife of Hezekiah), and Abi (mother of Hezekiah). Their vocal representatives on Saturday were—Mr. Santley, Mr. Lloyd, Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, and Madame Patey, some incidental passages for a Jewish woman having been sung by Miss Emma Reimar.

The work is divided into two parts, each of which is preceded by an orchestral introduction. The music is throughout written with that knowledge of vocal requirements which might be expected from one who has produced so many successful songs, ballads, and part-songs. There is, however, a want of distinct character and a lack of sustained power that induce an effect of monotony, which is felt at the end of the first part, and still more at the close of the whole. The most effective portions are those in which passages from Handel and Mendelssohn are reflected. Among the numbers that were best received were the airs "O, let thy heart, and "O, day of trouble," finely sung by Madame Patey; the cup-bearer's air, "Come ye out to me," admirably given by Mr. Lloyd, and "Say ye, O Israel," excellently declaimed, as were other portions of Hezekiah's music, by Mr. Santley. Of the several choral movements, by far the best are the chorus of the people, "Judah rejoice," the chorus of Assyrians, "Assyria, shake thy proud banners out," "O God! keep not Thou silence," and the chorus of Assyrian warriors, "This people trusteth in their God." The performance—ably conducted by Mr. Manns—was, on the whole, an efficient one, including the co-operation of the Crystal Palace choir.

The Saturday afternoon concerts will be resumed on Feb. 9.

At the second concert of the new season of the Sacred Harmonic Society, yesterday (Friday) week, Handel's "Judas Maccabæus" was very effectively performed, the orchestral score enhanced by the copious additions made some years ago by Sir Michael Costa expressly for the society. The solos were efficiently rendered by Madame L. Sherrington, Misses Julia Wigan and Elton, Mr. Lloyd, Mr. M. Smith, and Mr. Lewis Thomas. Many of the pieces, choral and solo, were much applauded—Mr. Lloyd having been encored in the declamatory air, "Call forth thy powers."

"The Messiah" was given by the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society on Thursday evening, and by the Sacred Harmonic Society yesterday (Friday) evening.

"The Messiah" is to be given at the Alexandra Palace this (Saturday) evening, being the last of the present series of Handel concerts.

The Popular Concerts close for the year with the afternoon performance of to-day (Saturday). At last Saturday's concert Miss Dora Schirmacher was again the solo pianist; Miss Zimmermann having reappeared in that capacity on Monday evening. Madame Norman-Néruda was the leading violinist on both occasions.

Professor G. A. Macfarren's oratorio "Joseph" was performed by the Brixton Choral Society—conducted by Mr. Lemare—on Monday evening, when the choruses were well sung by the choir, and the solos efficiently rendered by Misses Ellen Horne and Coyte Turner, and Messrs. J. T. Hutchinson, C. Tovey, and Welby Wallace.

A performance of Bach's "Christmas Oratorio" (parts one and two) was given by the Royal Academy of Music last week.

The competition for the Thalberg Scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music was held on Monday. There were twenty-three candidates, and the scholarship was awarded to Alice Heathcote. The competition for the Novello Scholarship was also held on Monday. There were seven candidates, and the scholarship was awarded to William Sewell.

The competition for the Novello Scholarship at the National Training School for Music was held on Wednesday; and it was awarded to James Farquharson Walens. At the same time Miss Charlotte E. Cobb was elected to the vacant scholarship of the Clothworkers' Company.

The Gloucester Chronicle states that the accounts of the Three Choirs Festival have been made up. The total expenses were £4263 10s. 9d. The sale of tickets realised £4094 17s., thus leaving a deficiency of £169 2s. 9d. A call of £1 has therefore been made on each of the 171 stewards, and this, with a balance of £32 7s. 4d. from the festival of 1874, leaves £34 4s. 7d. to be carried forward to the next Gloucester Festival. The Chronicle is unable to state the exact sum to be paid to the Clergy Charity, but it will amount to between £1800 and £1850.

The postmastership at Plymouth has been conferred on Mr. J. B. Ellen, at present postmaster at York.

THEATRES.

Mr. J. L. Toole, having returned from the provinces, appeared at the Globe on Monday as Spicer Komford, in "Artful Cards." He had a most cordial reception, and was throughout enthusiastically applauded. In "Trying a Magistrate," he next illustrated his ability to adapt himself to a variety of humours, as also the extent of his mimetic powers. The fun of a police court, incarnated in his single person, caused boundless amusement. Mr. Hollingshead's "Birthplace of Podgers" concluded the entertainment, and exhibited the comic actor in some of his most genial characteristics.

There was a special festival last Saturday at the Royal Aquarium for the benefit of the Royal General Theatrical Fund. The entertainments were of a highly diversified character, comprising, besides the usual attractions of the establishment, two vocal and instrumental concerts—the one in the morning, the other in the evening—and a dramatic performance in the theatre. The programmes included, among other favourite pieces, the overtures "Gazza Ladra" and "Masaniello;" a pastoral fantasia on "A Summer Day in Norway;" selections from Gounod's opera "Faust," and Rivièr's grand march, "The Queen's." The dramatic performances were varied and attractive, consisting for the most part of selections from some of the most popular plays now in course of representation at the West-End theatres. Many distinguished actors gave their services.

CHRISTMAS PANTOMIMES.

We give in due course such particulars as have reached us concerning the forthcoming Pantomimes. Beginning with our national theatre.

The pantomime at Drury Lane Theatre will be distinguished by illustrations of remarkable variety and beauty. The elaborate production entitled "Harlequin and the White Cat" is founded on the celebrated fairy tale by the Countess d'Aulnoy, and is written, as usual, by Mr. E. L. Blanchard. The story opens at the hunting château and country palace of Myrtama, Queen of Neveroverre, in Burgundy, who is celebrating the coming-of-age of her daughter, the Princess Blanchette. The Queen, personated by Miss Harriet Coveney, has, it seems, promised the fairy Violante that when her daughter (Mrs. F. Vokes) was born and had attained her eighteenth year she should be given in marriage to Psycho, the Goblin Dwarf, who is the fairy's son. In the midst of the festivities—which are graced by the presence of King Colorado (Mr. F. Moreland) and his three sons, Prince Natty the Neat (Miss Victoria Vokes), Prince Nectar the Nimble (Miss Jessie Vokes), and Prince Tremor the Nervous (Mr. Fred. Vokes)—the old fairy appears, and, indignant at the promise not being fulfilled, causes Psycho (Mr. Walter Vokes) to bear off the Princess, in the form of a white cat. The friendly fairies of the Wild Flowers, who meet by moonlight at the Lake of Water-Lilies, unite in a grand ballet, in which Mlle. Pitteri is the principal danseuse. The three Princes, travelling through the Forest of Enchantment, encounter the Cats' School of Cookery in the wood. Finally, after the White Cat's head has been cut off and her proper form restored, the Princess Blanchette marries Prince Natty, and the good fairies celebrate the nuptials by giving them in the transformation scene magnificent bridal gifts. Mr. William Beverly has excelled his past pictorial triumphs in the production of beautiful scenery and most magical effects, and the costumes, from the designs of a clever young artist who is to be known by the name of Wilhelm, are singularly tasteful and brilliant. Herr Karl Meyder has arranged the music, Mr. Bradwell has taken care of the tricks, changes, and appointments, and Mr. John Cormack, the experienced ballet-master, has arranged the action and trained the very numerous corps of juvenile auxiliaries. In the harlequinade, Messrs. Edward Dean and F. Sims are harlequins, Miss Fanny Lauri and Miss Kate Hamilton columbines, Miss A. Rosalind is Harlequina à la Watteau, Messrs. H. Lauri and Turtle Jones are pantaloon, and Messrs. Charles Lauri and F. Evans clowns.

No particulars of the Covent Garden pantomime have reached us, but we see that "Puss in Boots" is announced, and that the Raynors, Romaines, Furneaux Cook, Levite, Mlles. Alice Cook, Champneys, Lee, M'Alpine, Pasco, Nina, Gunniss, and Signora Cavalazzi will figure in it, with ballet of 300.

The Christmas novelty at the Alhambra will be a spectacular and musical version of "Le Diable à quatre," written by H. B. Farnie and K. Reece, entitled "Wildfire; or, the Village Bewitched."

The subject of the pantomime at the National Standard Theatre is founded on a popular Persian story, to the main incidents of which the writer has generally adhered, only occasionally departing from them for the purpose of spectacular display. The title is "The Enchanted Prince; or, Harlequin Beauty and the Bears." It is written, invented, and produced by Mr. John Douglass, author of the Standard pantomimes for the past thirteen years.

Still further east the Albion Theatre, Poplar, claims due registry for "Little Tom Tucker, who Sang for his Supper," a pantomime provided by Frank W. Green and Oswald Allan, which is subtitled "Harlequin Lord Mayor's Show, and the Fairy Bells of Limehouse, Poplar, and Bow."

The Surrey Theatre makes a direct appeal, through Mr. W. Holland, for support. We are told that Frank W. Green, Esq., has been very successful with his pantomimes, and that the present is by this gentleman. The subject is Dick Whittington and his Cat. Among the artists engaged "the inimitable Tom Lovell" is named as Clown.

The Christmas arrangements at the Alexandra Palace are unusually extensive. The pièce de résistance of the programme will be a very elaborate pantomime, written by the Brothers Grimm, upon the favourite story of St. George and the Dragon. The scenery and the general arrangements of the pantomime have been confided to Mr. Henry Emden. The composition and arrangement of the music has been placed in the hands of Mr. Frank Musgrave. The subject chosen for the transformation scene is "Vertumna and the Swallows," in which some novel effects will be developed. The ballet corps has been formed and superintended by Mr. John Lauri. The chief ballet is entitled "a Fête Champêtre à la Watteau." The comic scenes have been arranged and will be played by the Payne Family. Besides the pantomime, the hippodrome will be rendered especially attractive by a spectacular representation of an Eastern character, introducing processions of elephants, dromedaries, zebras, buffaloes, horses, ponies, &c. The pantomime will be played daily at three performances in the hippodrome (located for the holidays in the central hall) preceding and following it. On Boxing Day the pantomime will be played at three o'clock, performances in the hippodrome taking place at alternate hours from morning till night.

At the Crystal Palace the subject of the pantomime is "The Sleeping Beauty," written by Augustus Harris and W. R. Ouman, and announced for performance this day.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

"Concert-Stück for the Organ," by William Spark, Mus. Doc. (Metzler and Co.). This is an effective piece, in three movements, which was composed expressly for the recent Leeds Festival, and performed by Dr. Spark, who is organist of the Townhall there. As mention was made of this piece in the notices of the festival, we need now only record its publication.

King Henry's song, "Youth will needs have dalliance," by Arthur Sullivan (Messrs. Metzler and Co.). This is a portion of the incidental music composed for the performance of the play of "Henry VIII." at the Manchester Theatre, under the spirited management of Mr. Calvert. We have already spoken of this music on the occasion of its performance at a Crystal Palace Concert in October last, when the song produced a great impression, and had to be repeated. The words are said to have been written by the bluff King himself. Mr. Sullivan's music is full of character, with a very effective reflection of the old English style. It is printed with the choral refrain, which is, however, ad libitum.

"Across the Far Blue Hills, Marie," song, by Jacques Blumenthal (Metzler and Co.), has an effective melody, which is well contrasted by a characteristic accompaniment.

Messrs. Novello, Ewer, and Co. have added to their valuable series of "Octavo Editions of Operas" Richard Wagner's "Der Fliegende Holländer" ("The Flying Dutchman"). The work is given with the original German text, and an English version by the Rev. J. Troutbeck; and the musical portion has been carefully edited by Mr. Berthold Tours.

Music Primers (Novello, Ewer, and Co.). Under this general title the eminent firm of music publishers named above are bringing out a cheap series of instruction-books on the theory and art of music in their various applications—some at the price of one shilling, others at two shillings. The earlier numbers promise well for the whole undertaking, these including a succinct yet comprehensive "Treatise on the Art of Pianoforte-Playing," by Ernst Pauer; a similar work on the organ, by Dr. Stainer; and an essay, by Herr Pauer, on "The Elements of the Beautiful in Music," dealing with the aesthetics of the art rather than its practice.

Another series of books of musical education is the series of works, written by Louisa Gibson, especially for the use of the high schools for girls, and published by Messrs. Weekes and Co. The first of these little books has met with much commendation; and the second and third (recently issued) are worthy continuations thereof.

"Jack's Bequest," "Oh! chide me not for loving," and "Sweet Rosabelle" are three songs composed by C. H. R. Marriott, each with a distinct character; the first in the nautical style, the second in the Scotch manner, the other of the sentimental order. The melodies are pleasing, and devoid of difficulties. They are published by Messrs. J. B. Cramer and Co., as are "Roses of the Stream" and "Fare thee well," two effective songs by A. D. Duviol, the first to some pleasant verses by H. Hersee, the other a setting of Byron's lines.

"Mazurka à l'Espagnole," and "Sunset, a Rhapsody," by Paul Vivian (Messrs. J. B. Cramer and Co.), are showy, although not difficult, pianoforte pieces; the first in a somewhat brilliant style, the other of a more sentimental kind.

"Graziella," by J. Cheshire (the same publishers), is a pianoforte adaptation of a spirited "Entrée Dansante," which has been performed at Her Majesty's Opera.

"Biddy Malone" is a very characteristic Irish song written and composed by W. Clark Russell, and published by Messrs. R. Cocks and Co.

"The Old Parish Clerk," song; poetry by E. Capern, music by A. C. Bartrum (Shepherd and Co.). The words of this song, by the Devonshire postman, are very characteristic, and they are set to a bold melody well suited to them.

"Il mio Beppin," by F. Schira (C. Jefferys) is a setting of words from "Tuscan Popular Songs." The music has much characteristic grace and piquancy, and will suit a voice of any calibre.

A series of "Operatic Arrangements for Four Hands," by Adrian de L'Orne (Messrs. Duff and Stewart), will be widely welcomed by pianists who desire to make an effective display without the necessity of any great strain on their executive powers. The six numbers now referred to are based on themes from Weber's "Oberon," Donizetti's "La Favorita," Auber's "Fra Diavolo," Bellini's "I Puritani," Verdi's "Il Trovatore," and Rossini's "Il Barbiere di Siviglia," the prominent subjects from which are effectively strung together.

"Maritana, Grande Fantasia de Concert, pour le Piano, par Carlo Tieset" (Hutchings and Romer), is an elaborate piece, containing much brilliant passage writing, the practice of which will largely conduce to facility of execution.

Lecocq's opéra-bouffe, "La Marjolaine," has furnished the materials for some pretty quadrilles and waltzes, and the Coucou Polka, adapted, the first two by M. Arban, the others by Georges Lamothe; published by Messrs. Enoch and Sons.

"Hammond's Music Portfolio" (Messrs. A. Hammond and Co.) is a series of shilling numbers containing some of the most popular dance music by many of the most prominent composers in that style. The selection is of a varied nature.

Six pieces for the pianoforte by James Lea Summers (Goodwin and Tabb). These pieces consist of "Andante Grazioso," "Allegretto Scherzando," "Minuetto espressivo," "Cantabile e Legato," "Mazurka," and "Allegro Brillante," in each of which there is much distinctive character. The movements not only contain passages that are highly pleasing in themselves, but also many that are well calculated to improve the student's executive powers; particularly the closing piece, which is a well sustained study for arpeggios in the right hand and cantabile phrases in the left.

The first election of Verderers under the New Forest Act of 1877 was held on Monday within the forest boundary. The three vacancies were filled by the election of Mr. Eyre, 717 votes; Mr. Shirub, 649 votes; and Mr. Esdaile, 593 votes. The successful candidates are gentlemen resident in the forest who had promoted the interests of the commoners and the public.

The London Stereoscopic and Photographic Company, in their optical and scientific department, 54, Cheapside, and Bow-churchyard, have made up a guinea box of wondrous and ingenious apparatus for the entertainment of Christmas parties. It comprises a "Houdin Cabinet," with instructions for the performance of half-a-dozen good conjuring tricks; an "iridescent mammoth top," with twelve prismatic disks, capable of a variety of beautiful combinations; also glass tubes containing "fluorescent liquids," which appear of totally different colours when viewed alternately by reflected and by transmitted light. It further contains several interesting mechanical puzzles, a toy telephone of simple action without electricity, a distorting pocket-mirror for the face, and a tube of Æolian melody, through which you simply breathe to produce the tuneful whistle. Here is science in sport with many amusing tricks, and each of the special apparatus can be separately purchased.

THE CHRISTMAS CONJUROR.

A CRITICAL MOMENT.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

According to the last advice received by his innumerable friends, Mr. W. J. Thoms was as well as could be expected. Not that (happily) there was or is anything the matter with the genial scholar and antiquary, who bears his seventy-four years as lightly as though they were so many feathers; only in some quarters it was feared that Mr. Thoms might (morally) "feel bad" at the announcement that an indubitable case of centenarianism had just been verified. Her Majesty the Queen has caused a communication to be addressed to the Rev. Frederick Beadon, a Canon of Wells Cathedral, on his having completed his hundredth year; and the Royal felicitations have been followed by a complimentary address from the Board of Management of the Southampton Savings Bank, of which the venerable gentleman is president. He is the sole survivor of the original thirty-five founders of the establishment, with which he has been connected for upwards of sixty years.

There is not, however, any reason that Mr. Thoms should distress himself in any way about the matter; for it is quite erroneous to suppose that the whilom conductor of "Notes and Queries" is an utter sceptic—an uncompromising disbeliever in centenarianism. He is quite ready and willing to pin his faith to Old Parr, if the Old Man will produce his proofs. But he refuses to accept mere assertion for evidence or loose tradition for fact. In the case of the Rev. Canon Beadon the proofs are plain. Apart from the valuable testimony of the registers of his birth and baptism comes the conclusive circumstance that he was ordained seventy-seven years ago, and that he must have been twenty-three years of age before he was admitted to the rite of ordination.

At a meeting of the Southampton bank managers held to draw up the address of which I spoke anon it was incidentally stated that Canon Beadon's "recipe" for the preservation of health and the prolongation of life was comprised in the four following maxims:—Never to be out of bed after ten at night; never to be in bed after seven in the morning; never to do any "brain work" after dinner (I am writing this at three a.m.; but then dinner was such a long time ago); and never to wear a great coat. These recipes are obviously all arbitrary; but their value must depend on the temperament and the avocations of the individual. Statesmen and actors, for example, are systematically compelled to keep the very latest of hours; yet actors and statesmen live, on the average, much later than authors or doctors do. As for wearing a great coat, I never remember to have seen the great Duke of Wellington (who lived till eighty-four) wear one; but, on the other hand, it is certain that Duke Arthur, when the weather was cold, wore a cloak. For the rest, the victor of Waterloo followed Canon Beadon's rules. He went early to bed; he rose early; and he never worked (when he could help it) after dinner. For instance, he won Waterloo before he dined.

Mem.: A famous Comedian, now deceased, but who lived to a very advanced age, once told me in perfect seriousness that he ascribed the longevity so frequent among the members of his own profession to the simple fact that actors and actresses are compelled to wash their faces and hands and to change their clothes thoroughly at least three, and often half a dozen, times in the course of every evening. "It keeps the pores open, Sir," quoth the famous comedian. And yet a theatre, behind the scenes, is full of draughts, which might be supposed to breed bronchitis and consumption.

What is Truth in Art? The Duke of Somerset in distributing the prizes at the Torquay Science and Art School last Saturday dissents from the proposition that Truth in Art is "everything." Per contra, the Right Hon. R. A. Cross, M.P., has just delivered at a prize meeting of the students of the metropolitan drawing-schools an address on artistic truth, which oration, with the honestest possible intention on the part of the speaker to be logical, is, in reality, full of the most amazing paradoxes, and which, unless distinctly controverted by those who are practically as well as theoretically familiar with art, would be calculated to do great mischief to the cause of technical education: the fostering and advancement of which are among the main objects of the Art-Schools in connection with South Kensington.

Mr. Cross indignantly protests against the employment of any imitative process in art when the result of that process is to convert one material into the semblance of another. He holds that it is in the highest degree reprehensible in a workman to paint and grain a piece of deal so as to make it look like oak; and, ceteris paribus, this would apply to the simulation of other kinds of costly woods, to the ingenious art of veneering, and to the delicate craft of veining wood in imitation of marble. There are three essentially "technical" callings which would be at once swept away if the Right Hon. Home Secretary's whim were gratified. I will tell him of another industry which would be utterly destroyed if his doctrine prevailed. Iron is now enamelled with so much dexterity, with such beauty of design, and with such brilliance of hue as to resemble the best painted pottery. It has come to be an article of almost universal use, as, although its colours are as imperishable as those of porcelain, it is not fragile. But it is iron and not earthenware, and must consequently come under Mr. Cross's ban. Again (among a hundred instances of which had I space I could speak) our manufacturers at Birmingham and elsewhere do business to the amount of some millions sterling every year in an article called electro-plate for home and foreign consumption. If Mr. Cross's dicta are to be accepted, electro-plating must become a reprobated and prohibited art; since an electro spoon or fork is not True—it is not silver—but a mere piece of nickel or Chinese copper plated with the precious metal. It is (on the deal-oak principle) a Sham, and should, according to Mr. Cross, be put down. Call you this backing of your friends? Is this helping the cause of technical education?

A little controversy has cropped up concerning the "Fighting Téméraire" the famous war-ship which Turner made the subject of an equally famous picture. One correspondent of the Times denies that the Téméraire ever did much in the way of fighting, and another controverts the propriety of the title of the picture which describes the Téméraire as being "towed to her last moorings" up the river Thames, the fact being that, wherever the old man o' war's moorings may have been, she was not towed up the Thames until some four or five years back when she was brought to a shipbuilder's yard not far from Deptford, and there finally demolished. Another authority declares that she was broken up at Rotherhithe five-and-twenty years since. Our ancestors had more reverence for ships that had done good service; and, unless I am much mistaken, the vessel in which Sir Francis Drake accomplished his great voyage was extant at Deptford, and the delight of cockneys and country cousins so late as the reign of Queen Anne. Touching Turner's splendid picture, I don't think it matters much if the artist, when he placed the stern of the Téméraire to the westward, departing into the sunset soon to be followed (as one of the Times' correspondents prettily puts it) "into the shades of night," had in his eye Deptford or Devonport, Portsmouth or Sheerness. Joseph Mallord William Turner was a poetical painter, and the Liberty of Westminster is not so vast as the license which the painter-poet may claim, and which should cheerfully be conceded to him. If Turner, in painting a picture of St. Paul's from the river had thrown the Rialto over the Thames instead of London Bridge, who would have had a right to grumble? And what a glorious Rialto it would have been.

An old lady of eighty-four, examined the other day at a trial before Mr. Baron Huddleston, deposed that in her youth she had been lady's maid to Lady Lowe, the wife of General Sir Hudson Lowe, Governor of St. Helena during the captivity of Napoleon, and that the Exile of Longwood used playfully to call her the "Painted Lady" in consequence of her juvenile rubicundity of countenance. I have studied the history of "Prometheus Bound" long and earnestly; but I confess that this anecdote of the Painted Lady is quite new to me. Can any correspondent deeply read in the Napoleonic Legend tell me anything about it? I can find no mention of Lady Lowe's maid in Mr. Forsyth's three volumes; and I have unhappily mislaid my copy of the charming Napoleonic Reminiscences of Mrs. Abell (née Miss Elizabeth Balcombe), the daughter of Napoleon's purveyor on the Rock, and with whom (when she was a little girl) during his temporary sojourn at the Briers, the captive used to romp.

At the same time, I cannot forget that Napoleon never saw Lady Lowe; that he had, altogether, only five personal interviews with Sir Hudson; and that for the last four and a half years of the ex-Emperor's life the prisoner and his guardian never met. Is it probable that Napoleon, in his sulky seclusion at Longwood, should have come in contact with or have grown familiar with the personal appearance of one of the domestics at Plantation House? It is, by-the-way, a curious fact, of which sufficient note has not hitherto been taken, that about the only officer in the British service who ever succeeded in giving a few hours' real pleasure to the Samson Agonistes of St. Helena was the late Admiral Rous. About 1819 the Hon. Mr. Rous, then a young Lieutenant in the Navy, was serving on board one of the vessels forming the squadron of observation stationed in the harbour of James Town. Lieutenant Rous was, even in 1819, a passionate devotee of the turf; and, to the intense delight of the inhabitants of the Rock, he got up some horse-races at Deadwood, the camp of the regiment specially appointed to guard Longwood House. Deadwood Races were a brilliant success, and were witnessed from a neighbouring coign of vantage with great satisfaction by Napoleon. I wonder whether there were suggested to his mind any associations between the high-mettled racers (probably Arabs from India or ponies from the Cape) on the St. Helena race-course and "les terribles chevaux gris" that he had seen six years before trampling the tall corn down on the field of Waterloo?

A correspondent writing from Petersfield draws attention to a grievance which, to my thinking, calls earnestly for the notice of the authorities of the General Post Office. My correspondent tells me that he frequently posts the Illustrated London News and other pictorial publications to his sons in New Zealand, but that they never by any chance come to hand; whereas copies of the Times and other newspapers never fail to reach their destination. It must surely be held incredible that the mails should be tampered with on board ship; therefore the fault must lie (I suppose) with the Post Office clerks in New Zealand. In any case, the circumstance noted demands inquiry at head-quarters.

G. A. S.

It is officially intimated that the public would render great assistance to the Post Office by posting letters, Christmas cards, &c., on the 24th and 31st instant early in the day.

The "Year-Book of Facts," and the "Annual Summary," or chronicle of events, both edited by Mr. James Mason, are published in due course by Messrs. Ward, Lock, and Co., and will be useful to those who wish for a record of notable public affairs during the past twelvemonth.

As we have noticed the publication of several other pocket-books and almanacs for the ensuing year, it is well to observe that "Punch's Pocket-book," issued by Messrs. Bradbury, Agnew, and Co., at the office of that famous comic journal, keeps up its character for literary drolleries, with illustrations of ludicrous kind, in the second part of its contents. The first part consists of the ordinary calendar, the diary, and the official and statistical information, usually to be found in yearly pocket-books. "Mr. Punch's Reading Party" is the coloured frontispiece; our old friend sits amidst a fair bevy of bright young ladies, and is only too happy.

Christmas parties, with all the children of larger and smaller growth, must have their own proper playthings for the supple and other harmless fun of a social evening, where rank and age forget their gravity, and the best wisdom perhaps takes refuge in a merry frolic of active practical nonsense. We have received from Messrs. W. S. Cadman and Co., of Hatton-garden, a number of pasteboard boxes containing many varieties of pretty and ingenious trifles, to be distributed for the amusement of the company upon these pleasant occasions. It is expected that we should say what we think of them; and we can, without pretending to criticism in such matters, honestly express our admiration of their beauty, in some instances, and of the skill and taste, and fertility of invention, shown in preparing them. The staple article, or the principal object designed and provided in most of these fancy commodities, is the supply of "crackers," to be pulled asunder by young ladies and gentlemen, with a detonating report, and to display, when the paper covering is unrolled, either some kind of sweetmeat, or a scrap of verse, comic or sentimental, or a shrewd proverb or phrase of compliment, or a fantastic head-gear for the lucky winner to put on. But Messrs. W. S. Cadman and Co. have improved upon these customary devices by ornamenting the crackers externally with mounted figures of really elegant design; some of moulded white cardboard, in the round or in relief, having the appearance of plaster; others painted on a flat surface. There are some of floral pattern, in which tufts of grass and artificial blossoms are introduced; in others we have feathers or shells. The articles are discharged on opening the little packages. These articles are not unrequently inscribed with the French name "Cosques," and one case may hold a dozen or half a dozen, according to size. The most available, however, for prolonged entertainment will be those of which the contents—that is to say, the mottoes or readable sentences inside the wrappings—are arranged for playing a round game of questions and answers, or to form, when pieced together, an intelligible history. Among the subjects thus dealt with are the stories of Robinson Crusoe, Little Red Ridinghood, William Tell, and others familiar to youthful minds; the strategy of the Russian and Turkish war, the geography of the Suez Canal route to India, and an imaginary lawsuit in some modern Court of Love.

FINE ARTS

We are compelled to defer till next week the insertion of an article on Beham's Engravings, at the Burlington Club, and another on the Guardi Gallery, Haymarket.

Messrs. Pilgeram and Lefèvre have issued as their latest publication for Christmas an excellent print entitled "My Neighbour." "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me."—Matt. xxv. It is admirably engraved by J. B. Pratt, from the picture by Mrs. M. E. Staples (née Edwards), which, as many will recollect, was exhibited at the Royal Academy Exhibition of 1876. The picture exhibits a matron, a charming personification of Charity, attended by her sympathising little daughter, standing at the threshold of her cottage, administering to the wants of a half-frozen boy who has been buffeted by a snow-storm, and seemingly well snowballed by some malicious urchins. The lad is eagerly drinking a bowl of hot milk or soup, and the lady is cutting a huge slice of bread-and-butter for him. It might have heightened our notion of the lady's kindness if the artist had not left the boy out in the snow to take his mess of pottage; but then the lady, who is now gracefully framed by the doorway, would not pose so well, perhaps, in any other position, and the requirements of art must be considered.

The Right Hon. R. A. Cross, M.P., took the chair at a large meeting held on the 13th inst. at the Cannon-street Hotel, and distributed the Queen's prizes and the certificates to the successful students in the metropolitan drawing classes in connection with the South Kensington Museum. He made a vigorous attack upon false art in building, in furniture, and in dress—contending that brick and plaster should not be made to look like stone, that iron should appear for what it was, and not be disguised as wood, and that in every way society should get rid of shams.

On Saturday last was concluded a three-days' sale by Messrs. Christie, Manson, and Woods, of the collection of Mr. C. G. Lewis, the well-known engraver, who is giving up the profession. There were 620 lots, which realised a sum of £1576.

At the College for Men and Women, Mr. Newton, C.B., delivered, on Saturday last, his fourth lecture on Greek art, taking as his subject the period from a.c. 460 to a.c. 400, when art flourished at Athens under the auspices of the great Athenian statesman, Pericles, and when Phidias, the pupil of Ageladas, and other distinguished sculptors flourished.

The prospectus for the next annual drawing of the Printer's National Art-Union has been published. The prizes have been increased both in number and value. What has hitherto been the first prize, consisting of books and a work of art value £50, has become the second prize on this occasion, the place of honour being occupied by an oil painting (painted expressly for this art union) entitled "Signing the Marriage Contract," a scene from Longfellow's "Evangeline." The total number of prizes is 700.

A committee of the city companies has been for some time at work elaborating a scheme for founding a Technical University in London. The last step taken by the committee was to procure reports and suggestions from six specially nominated referees—viz., Professor Huxley, Colonel Donnelly (of the Science and Art Department), Captain Douglas Galton, Mr. H. T. Wood (Assistant Secretary of the Society of Arts), and Mr. Bartley (of the Science and Art Department). After having decided on these names, the committee adjourned to allow time for the preparation of the reports. On Thursday last they met again, and the reports were laid before them. After some discussion, the further consideration of the subject was adjourned till Jan. 17.

The Duke of Somerset distributed the prizes last Saturday to the students of the Torquay Science and Art Schools. In the course of his address he criticised the recent speech on art delivered by the Home Secretary. His Grace dissented from the proposition therein laid down, that truth in art was everything. As art was intended to raise and elevate the mind, it was essential in its cultivation to employ the imagination. There was something more in science than the mere gratification of the mind, for the very progress of the country depended on the advancement of science. Scientific men he regarded as the real benefactors of their country. His Grace dwelt briefly on the labour question.

In distributing the science and art prizes, at the Hartley Institution, Southampton, on the 14th inst., the Hon. Evelyn Ashley, M.P., contended that, without the cultivation of science and art among the masses, we should be left behind by nations on the Continent that were in competition with us.

A meeting of the general committee of the Rowland Hill Memorial Fund was held at Kidderminster on the 13th inst. It was reported that since the movement was started, twelve months ago, £1560 had been subscribed and promised, of which £461 was collected by postmasters and £339 by Mr. Albert Grant. The balance in hand was £1179, and there was £150 promised yet to be collected. The report was adopted; and it was resolved to invite subscribers of £5 and upwards to join the executive committee in considering the question of a sculptor and a site.

The Cardiff Corporation has authorised a local architect to prepare plans for a new free library and science-and-art schools. The cost of the building is estimated at £13,000.

The Glasgow Herald reports a meeting of the committee entrusted with the work of obtaining subscriptions for the erection of a bronze statue to the memory of the late Dr. Norman Macleod, at which it was stated that £800 had been received, and that £600 more was required.

The National Museum of the Society of Antiquaries in Scotland has been recently enriched by the addition of a collection of rare relics of the bronze age, discovered in a cairn in Fifehire, and a collection of the most remarkable series of relics ever formed in Scotland belonging to the Viking period of Norse heathendom.

The annual exhibition of works of art by the students of the Queen's Institute in Molesworth-street, Dublin, was opened on Tuesday by the Duchess of Marlborough.—Next day the statue of Dr. Robert Graves, lately erected in the hall of the College of Physicians, Dublin, of which he was the President in 1843, was unveiled by the Duke of Marlborough, in presence of a large and distinguished assemblage. The statue is by Mr. Bruce Joy, a pupil of Foley. Among the speakers were Dr. Duncan, Sir Robert Kane, the Provost of Trinity College, and the Bishop of Limerick.

Mr. F. G. P. Nelson and Mr. R. Denny Umlin have been elected by the council honorary general secretaries to the Social Science Association and Law Amendment Society.

Last Saturday evening the ceremony of presenting a second-service clasp of the Life-Boat Institution to the coxswain at Margate of the Quiver life-boat (Mr. W. Grant) was performed by Mr. Egerton Isaacson, the honorary secretary of the Margate branch. Grant has long had one of the society's medals, and this clasp was presented in recognition of services he rendered during the recent gale.

NEW BOOKS.

In the Russo-Turkish War the Daily News has won a high reputation for the graphic power of its special telegraphic correspondence from the Seat of War, and for the promptitude with which its voluminous telegrams have been published, from the time the Russians and Roumanians crossed the Danube up to the recent surrender of Osman Pasha after his heroic and prolonged defence of Plevna. The vigorous narrative of Osman Pasha's final sortie (telegraphed to the Daily News last week by Mr. J. A. MacGahan, of Khiva celebrity), is not included in the seasonably-issued volume (Macmillan and Co.) containing the bulk of "The War Correspondence" of our daily contemporary for the present year; but the book brings the campaign down to the fall of Kars, leaving, probably, to a future volume the record of the continuation or conclusion of the war. The diplomacy, which signally failed in solving the Eastern Question, is dispassionately disposed of in the opening chapter, and therein the casual reader will find the meaning of the "Andrassy Note" and the "Berlin Memorandum" made clear in a few words. There is also a useful chronology of the war; and the many letters of Mr. Archibald Forbes, Mr. MacGahan, and their colleagues, are connected by an impartial statement of the salient events in order to form a continuous history of the campaign. Preserved in the handy form of the volume before us, these war letters (the majority of them written amid the confounding bustle of the camp, or on the battle-fields themselves, and most of them transmitted to the Daily News by telegraph) cannot fail to be referred to with interest. Reading again the strong nervous prose in which Mr. Forbes described the crossing of the Danube at Sistova, the luckless assaults of the Muscovites on Plevna in July and September, and the critical duel between Suleiman Pasha and General Radetzky in the Shipka Pass, one cannot help comparing many of the passages, especially the Shipka narrative, to some of the most stirring chapters in Napier. And it is fair to acknowledge that Mr. MacGahan fully equals Mr. Forbes in power of vivid description, particularly in his spirited biography of General Skobelev, and in his animated account of that daring young Commander's intrepid assaults on the southern redoubts defending Plevna. Though less known to fame than Mr. Forbes and Mr. MacGahan, the Daily News Specials in other parts of Bulgaria and in Armenia have contributed praiseworthy work to this valuable chronicle of the war, which could not have been republished at a more timely period than the present.

A very pleasant book, and a book of an uncommon sort, is North Italian Folk, by Mrs. Comyns Carr, illustrated by Randolph Caldecott (Chatto and Windus), however derisively anybody may be inclined to smile at the assertion, after looking at the title, and to ask whether anything new for a writer to say can come out of that Northern Italy with which the pen of the scribbler has made us familiar even to the verge of contempt. It may be answered decisively that something, if not quite new, at any rate sufficiently fresh to be interesting and exhilarating, may come out of even those well-worn regions. For, though in the present instance Italy, the people of the Riviera and the Apennines, are the writer's theme, it is "not the Italy of Popes and priests and controversies, of civic struggles and new kingdoms, nor the Italy of tourists or guide-books, of fame and fashion, nor even the Italy of art and artists." It is the Italy of the flower-girl, of the shopman, of the servant-wench, of the fisher-folk, of the husbandman, of the villager, of those who make up what is properly termed the people, and whom, though the tourist and the ordinary writer know but little of them, our author has had good opportunities of studying in their very midst. The author's style may be in parts a little more high-flown than the subject or the occasion seems to have required; but, on the whole, the simple scenes are described with a simplicity as attractive as it is appropriate. Let it be remarked, also, by-the-way, that the illustrations, which are numerous, are many of them charming, although some of them appear to verge, without any necessity, upon caricature. The contents are divided into two "parts," and a "conclusion." The first part deals with the Riviera, and the second with the Apennines; and the concluding chapter is occupied with an account of matters appertaining to "the feast of the Corpus Domini." We commence, naturally enough, with a glance at Genoa "the proud," and we are soon among the merry-makers at the Carnival. We have a little sketch of a flower-girl and her method of trading, and then we are in the thick of the "festival of palms." And so we go on, with here a picture of customs and there a group of persons, until we arrive at fashionable Pegli, where sea-nymphs in "broad-brimmed Leghorn hats" take their pastime of flirtation in the blue waters. Hence we move up to the mountains, and look down upon the "loveliest of North Apennine valleys, which is between Giove's mountain and the more cloven peaks of Antola hills." Before long we are watching the peasants engaged in the chestnut harvest, and anon we are spectators of a rustic wedding. The parish priest and his serving-maid are in turn introduced to us; we are witnesses of the manner in which the under priest, or "cappellano," who is "just nothing more than a peasant," is treated by his fellow-peasants; we go in and out among the various "characters" of a village, we investigate their proceedings, and we listen to their conversation. Then we follow Virginia on her way to confirmation; and, before we join in the "feast of the Corpus Domini," we stroll about among the "town folk in the country," and mark the roses coming back to the cheeks of city-bred children "in the wild, free life and the good air of this Apennine villeggiatura." Of such material is the book made up; and the effect of the composition is extremely agreeable.

It is somewhat difficult to know how to deal with such a book as In the Levant, by Charles Dudley Warner (Sampson Low, and Co.), for it has no date on the title-page, and, although it strikes one as a new acquaintance, it appears to have reached a "fifth edition." But as it is clearly an American work written by an American author, the fifth American edition may, of course, be the first English. At any rate, it may be worth while just to mention that the notes which formed the groundwork of the volume were taken during "the winter and spring of 1875" (presumably the winter of 1875 and the spring of 1876), when "the writer made the tour of Egypt and the Levant." Memory seems to call dimly, but with a certain sensation of pleasure, the volume in which the author recorded his adventures "among Mummies and Moslems;" and he has narrated his impressions of the Levant in the same bright and lively, thoroughly American, style. From Jaffa he commences, and then he gossips, in entertaining and by no means uninteresting fashion, about Jerusalem, Jericho, Bethlehem, Beyrout, Damascus, Cyprus, Rhodes, Smyrna, Ephesus, Mitylene, the Dardanelles, Constantinople, Athens, Eleusis, and the Gulf of Corinth. Of course, as the author himself remarks, his notes were taken "before there were any signs of the present Oriental disturbances, and the observations made are therefore uncoloured by any expectation of the existing state of affairs." It redounds to his honour that there is a copious index.

CHRISTMAS BOOKS.

The fairy romances and other literary and artistic creations of pure fancy designed for the entertainment of the juvenile mind at this season have had a share of our notice. We have yet to speak of Prince Ritto; or, The Four-Leaved Shamrock, by Fanny W. Currey (Sampson Low and Co.), which is an elegant small volume, printed on fine and thick paper, with ten autotype reproductions of original drawings by Helen O'Hara. Both those ladies, whose names we are not enabled to announce with their due conventional titles, have thrown a dash of what may almost be called genius into their frolicsome work. It is the tale of a little brother and sister, the children of good King Hermin—somewhere in Ireland ages before the Curse of Cromwell—who were left under the guardianship of a treacherous and cruel Lord Deputy and his wife, during their father's absence at the wars. The persecutions and ill-treatment of poor Ritto and Lina engage our full sympathy, till the young Prince fortunately gets a specimen of that rare botanical variety which commands for him the aid of powerful elfin allies, and admits him to the enchanted realm of fairyland. The final discomfiture of the wicked old pair, and the happy return of King Hermin to his dear little son and daughter, are related with equal spirit. It is all very droll and very pretty, but the drawings are exceedingly clever, humorous and lively in conception, and most effectively rendered by the Woodburytype process, as by the fair artist's pencil.

We do not suppose anybody who made his acquaintance two or three years ago, thanks to Ennis Graham, will have forgotten dear little "Carrots—Just a Little Boy." It will therefore be good news to many readers that there is a new book of that class, by the same pleasing writer, which is called The Cuckoo Clock (Macmillan and Co.). It is a little girl named Griselda who has the privilege of holding converse with the wonderful cuckoo in the curious old clock, and she is enabled to travel into far-away regions, and to learn a great many remarkable things, by the assistance of this wise companion. "Children, try to be good!" is the end and aim of this agreeable piece of fiction. The illustrations, drawn by Walter Crane, are graceful and quite in character. Miss Clara Matéaux, in her Woodland Romances (Cassell, Petter, and Galpin), has versified a long series of "Fables and Fancies," with no slight degree of humour and vivacity; one of the first she takes in hand is that ancient Homeric parody, "The Battle of the Frogs and Mice." Almost every page is adorned with spirited illustrations engraved on wood; this book is one of the best for little boys and girls. In a small volume entitled Topo (Marcus Ward and Co., publishers), which is a tale about some English children in Italy, by G. E. Brunellie, we find many charming illustrations, engraved from Miss Kate Greenaway's pen-and-ink drawings; the narrative also of these children's adventures is worth reading. "Topo" is the Italian for "Mouse," and is the nickname given to a certain little girl, who is always in small mischief, but is not so very naughty after all. The Tales, Poetry, and Fairy Tales of Walter Brown (published by the author, 220, Great Portland-street) are illustrated by a large number of Bewick's designs, printed from the original blocks of his engravings, which will doubtless recommend the little book to many persons of taste.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

We regret that we have not space for numerous appeals received on behalf of charitable institutions.

After an interval of five years, the "Adelphi" of Terence has been this year placed upon the stage by the Queen's scholars at Westminster.

Professor Huxley gave a lecture at the London Institution last Monday on "The Extinct Animals termed Belemnites, and their Ancient and Modern Allies."

The banquet to inaugurate the year of office of the new Sheriffs, Messrs. Nottage and Staples, was given on Tuesday evening at Stationers' Hall.

The annual dinner of the Society of Engineers took place on Tuesday evening at the Guildhall Tavern, under the presidency of Mr. Thomas Cargill, C.E.

The annual distribution of prizes to the 48th Middlesex Volunteers took place on Wednesday at St. James's Hall; and the prizes of the 4th Middlesex (West London) will be presented this evening, at St. George's Hall.

Sir Andrew Lusk, M.P., presided on the 14th inst. at a public meeting in Myddelton Hall, Islington, for the purpose of giving information on the scope and operation of the Public Libraries Acts, and on their proposed adoption in Islington.

The Rev. Stopford Brooke gave, in connection with the Working Men's Club and Institute Union, a lecture on "Wordsworth and Shelley as Influenced by the French Revolution," last Saturday, in the Theatre of the Society of Arts.

The annual meeting of the committee of the Metropolitan Hospital Sunday Fund was held on Tuesday. The fund had realised £26,082, a slight decrease upon last year, and this circumstance was attributed to the depression in trade. June 30 was fixed as the date of the collection next year.

The metropolitan annual market, which is to furnish the supplies of meat for Christmas, was held on Monday. The number of beasts exhibited was 7510, the number last year being 7020. There was a thin representation of foreign stock; and as regards sheep the supply fell considerably short of that of twelve months ago.

Speech-day at Merchant Taylors' School was celebrated on Monday, and in the evening the master and wardens of the company entertained a distinguished circle of guests at dinner. On the same day the Lord Mayor presided at the distribution of exhibitions and prizes to the pupils of the Haberdashers' Hoxton School.

Sir John Bennett, in acknowledging receipt of a cheque for £800, the first instalment of subscriptions received towards defraying the expenses he has incurred in the recent contest in the ward of Cheap, proposes to apply that and any further sum he may receive to the founding of a scholarship to be contended for by the children in the board schools of the City.

At Wednesday's weekly meeting of the School Board for London—Sir Charles Reed in the chair—the annual reports of the board inspectors were presented, and their consideration was postponed till after the Christmas recess. Various recommendations made by the by-laws committee as to the duties and the salaries of visitors were agreed to; and the board adjourned over Christmas, till Jan. 9.

Mr. John Holms, M.P., presided at the twenty-third anniversary festival of the Warehousemen and Clerks Schools, which was held on the 13th inst. at the Freemasons' Tavern. He explained that, as the new wing would accommodate one hundred additional children, the annual income would require to be raised to £9000 or £10,000. He therefore made a special appeal, and about £800 was contributed.

A court of the Worshipful Company of Turners was held on Thursday in the Egyptian Hall, Mansion House, when the freedom and livery of the Company were presented to the Rev. Robert Moffatt, D.D., F.R.G.S., the African Missionary, in consideration of his services to civilisation and geographical discoveries in Southern Africa. The Lord Mayor presided.

The Court of Common Council has adopted a scheme for placing hydrants in the streets of the City, with a view of throwing jets of water upon fires without the intervention of fire-engines. Some new streets have been already supplied with hydrants, although the requisite pressure has not yet been provided by the New River Company, and what remains to be done will cost upwards of £14,000.

The Mansion House Indian Famine Fund has reached £490,400, and at a meeting of the committee on Monday a further remittance of £5000 was ordered, making £495,000 which has been sent to India. Attention was called to the work being done at Colar, Mysore, by Miss Anstey, an English lady, who has undertaken the care of 500 caste children, rendered orphans by the famine. The committee adjourned for a month.

At a recent meeting of the Royal Society the following were elected foreign members:—Marcellin Berthelot, of Paris; Joseph Decaisne, of Paris; Emil Dubois Reymond, of Berlin; Adolph Wilhelm Hermann Kolbe, of Leipsic; Rudolph Leuckart, of Leipsic; Simon Newcomb, of Washington; and Pafnutij Tschebyschew, of St. Petersburg. By this election the foreign list of the society is made up to its full complement of fifty members.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers at the end of the second week of December was 82,550, of whom 39,978 were in workhouses, and 42,572 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding week in the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, these figures show a decrease of 784, 5194, and 13,329 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 764, of whom 544 were men, 177 women, and 43 children.

Among the most recent additions to the "special shows" of the Aquarium, is the exhibition, by M. Farini, of a collection of monkeys, including a chimpanzee. The exhibition is completed by the performances of Louala, an Abyssinian female snake tamer or charmer, who coils a boa constrictor, about ten feet in length, round her waist, and plays with three anacondas, holding them out at arm's length, allowing them to wind round her arms and swing themselves about.

A meeting of the Stafford House Committee was held on the 14th inst., at which Mr. Barrington Kennett was present, and gave a full and most satisfactory account of the work of the committee in Central and Asiatic Turkey. Upwards of 30,000 sick and wounded soldiers have been attended by the surgeons of the committee, and have received food on their way from the front; and at the present moment upwards of 1000 men are under treatment in the permanent hospitals, independently of the field ambulances.

Lord Sandon received on Monday a deputation representing provincial school boards on the subject of the certificate of birth. It was stated that there were twenty large provincial boards which agreed in asking for delay in the enforcement of the certificate of birth in the child's school-book. The requirement would tend to keep children away from school and cast an additional burden upon the ratepayers. Lord Sandon thought that sufficient time had been given for the consideration of the question. The department would determine what should be done in regard to children who had not been registered.

The Metropolitan Board of Works received on the 14th inst., from its general purposes committee, a report in reply to the recommendations of the Select Committee of the House of Commons upon the Metropolitan Fire Brigade. The board adopted the report, which urges that no sufficient reason has been alleged for withdrawing the duty of extinguishing fires from the board; and that what is wanted for the greater efficiency of the brigade is that both it and the water supply shall be under one management. Sir William Codrington, K.C.B., having tendered his resignation as member, a resolution expressing regret at the loss of his services was passed.

The Westminster Hospital, closed last May for the thorough repair of the building and for some structural adaptations to the advanced sanitary requirements of the present day, is reopened, and its ordinary work resumed in all the various departments. Thus renovated, it has recommenced a career of public usefulness, begun in 1719, as the pioneer of the voluntary principle of support of medical charitable institutions now universal throughout the kingdom; and the committee venture to anticipate during the approaching Christmas season, some additional help towards this work of undoubted and enduring public utility.

There were 2542 births and 1613 deaths registered in London last week. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 110, and the deaths were 184 below, the average. The deaths included 31 from smallpox, 92 from measles, 54 from scarlet fever, 10 from diphtheria, 25 from whooping-cough, 26 from different forms of fever, and 10 from diarrhoea. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs, which had been 417 and 397 in the two previous weeks, rose again to 415 last week, but were 81 below the corrected average: 265 resulted from bronchitis and 104 from pneumonia. In Greater London 3018 births and 1890 deaths were registered. The mean temperature was 39.0 deg.

A long room in one of the western galleries of the Kensington Museum was on Friday and Saturday last filled with specimens of needlework done in London elementary schools, and exhibited for the prizes of the "London School Association for the Improvement of Elementary Needlework." The first exhibition of the association was held last year, and opened by Princess Louise. Mrs. Dudley Rider opened the exhibition, and Lady Reed distributed the prizes. The examination of the large collection of objects exhibited had previously occupied the judges two entire days. They have adjudged the prize for the greatest number of successful pieces of work to Mrs. Harvey, of St. Mary's School, Putney, who won the same distinction last year. The mistress of an infant school who earns a similar honour in her class is Mrs. Brasseur, of St. John's School, Chance-square, Stratford.—A different kind of needlework exhibition is announced for this week. Those who are curious in such matters had an opportunity of seeing a bazaar which was held on Tuesday and the two next days at the Royal Normal College for the Blind, at Sydenham—a portion of the late Miss Linwood's celebrated art-needlework picturer.

At a meeting of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce on Wednesday, the following resolution was passed:—"That, in view of the present deplorable state of trade in the country, and as the commerce of this district is in great measure suspended, owing to the threatening aspect of affairs, a special meeting of the directors be summoned for Friday next to consider if a memorial shall be sent to Government in favour of continued neutrality in the war between Russia and Turkey."

TEMPLE BAR AND THE NEW LAW COURTS A MONTH AGO.

TEMPLE BAR.

The contractors, Messrs. Mowlem, Burt, and Co., who have commenced the removal of Temple Bar, agreeably to the resolution of the Common Council of London, will not be long in doing their work. We present illustrations of the appearance of the infirm old structure, with the adjacent New Law Courts building, as they were about a month since, and a view of Temple Bar, looking west, in the condition in which it was before the propping, which alone has enabled it to stand during the last year or two. Everybody knows that Temple Bar, now being demolished, is the last of the old postern gates of the city of London. It marks the boundary of the Liberty of the City westward. This was formerly marked by posts, rails, and a chain, as was the case at Holborn, Smithfield, and Whitechapel, where the old Bars have long ceased to exist. The antiquary Strype records that, after the posts and rails were removed, a house of timber was erected across the street, with a narrow gateway and an entry on the south side of it, under the house. It is supposed that, so early as the first few years of the sixteenth century, a custodian or governor was appointed to reside at Temple Bar. For full particulars of the history of this archway and of Fleet-street, our readers cannot do better than peruse Mr. Noble's "Memorials of Temple Bar," which is full of interesting anecdotes concerning it. The old wooden structure of Temple

Bar stood until after the Great Fire, in 1666, when it was taken down, being considered dangerous, partly on account of its age and partly by reason of its being constructed of wood. Even at that time, we read, there was considerable delay and opposition to the removal. This was effected, however, about 1670; and in 1672 the present archway, of Portland stone, which was designed by Sir Christopher Wren, was completed. An illustration of the original wooden bar was given in the Illustrated London News on March 28, 1863. The building of 1672 is familiar to every Englishman or foreigner who has visited London. On the east side, in niches, are the statues of King James I. and his Queen, Anne of Denmark; on the west side, those of King Charles I. and Charles II.—all sculptured by John Bushnell, for which the Corporation paid him £480. There are some points of historical interest. One of the old and curious customs of the City is, that whenever the Sovereign paid a visit to the citizens the gates were to be closed. A herald must then sound a trumpet before the gate, and another must knock. A parley would ensue; the gates would then be thrown open, and the Lord Mayor would hand the sword of the City to the Sovereign, who would graciously return it. This ceremony has been repeatedly observed down to our own time. Temple Bar used formerly to be disfigured with the heads and quarters of traitors. Those of Sir Thomas Armstrong, Sir William Perkins, and Sir John Freind were exhibited upon Temple Bar. The two latter suffered death upon a charge of having plotted to assassinate King William III. But the last heads which were spitted upon Temple Bar were those of Townley and Fletcher, after the Jacobite rebellion of 1745. The room over the Bar has been rented on lease by Messrs. Child and Co., from the Corporation, ever since it was built. It was used by them, up to the time that the keystone slipped, and the Bar began to crack, in July, 1874, as a receptacle for their old ledgers and other books—a vast number of interesting and valuable papers, including old cheques, bank-notes, and letters, many of them bearing the autographs of persons of historical interest, such as those of Nell Gwyn, Titus Oates, the Duchess of Cleveland, &c. There was only one entrance to the room over the archway, and that was approached through the first floor front room of the adjacent house.

THE POOR SEAMSTRESS.

Lonely poverty, when the common observance of a sacred festival has for one day brought a pause to its ill-rewarded toil, presents a condition of human life to our view that claims the respectful sympathy of those in happier or easier circumstances. This is the sentiment which our Artist has designed to express by representing the attitude of a young person who has risen on the morning of Christmas Day to a solitary and retired acceptance of its simple boon of rest, accompanied by the recollection of its "hallowed and gracious" associations with the only true source of religious consolation. Her modest preparations for the adornment of her little chamber upon this occasion with a few sprigs of holly, and, we would fain hope, also for some little addition to her scanty repast at noon or eve, will not be contemplated without an emotion of tenderness, amidst the jovial bustle and lavish display of Christmas cheer in more comfortable households. It is touching, indeed, to reflect that she may have left or lost a home of her childhood, in which this glad season was formerly wont to be kept by her parents, brothers and sisters, and many kind friends, in a free and hearty outburst of social glee, softened by family affection. Her lot in life, whether by unavoidable misfortune, by the cruelty and injustice of others, or by such an error of conduct on her own part as is seldom forgiven to a woman, has become a hard and sad lot indeed, and it is as much as we can hope for her now that she should be able merely to earn her bread. There are too many "poor seamstresses" who cannot even do that.

JUNKS IN NAGASAKI HARBOUR.

We published last week an Engraving of the picture representing Junk in Nagasaki Harbour, Japan, painted by Lieutenant-Colonel Walter Fane, C.B., commandant of H.M.'s 18th Bengal Lancers, an officer who is as celebrated for gallant conduct on the field of battle as for his talent with the pencil. Lieutenant-Colonel Fane began his military career as a cadet in the Queen's Indian Army, in 1845. He soon showed himself to be an officer of great promise. Shortly after his arrival in India he was appointed Adjutant of the 3rd Punjab Irregular Cavalry, and was afterwards second in command of the 1st Punjab Irregular Cavalry. With these two regiments he was present at several affairs against the Hill Tribes on the North-West Frontier. He received the Frontier medal for those services. On his return to India, in 1858, from sick leave in England, he was immediately nominated to the Acting-Commandantship of the 4th Sikh Irregular Cavalry. At the head of that corps he formed a part of the column, under General Showers, which successfully followed up, and eventually captured, the renowned rebel leader Tantia Topee. For his services during this period Colonel Fane was specially mentioned in despatches. At the outbreak of hostilities with China, in 1860, this officer was selected by Lord Clyde, then Commander-in-Chief in India, to raise a regiment of Irregular Horse for service in China. This corps, recruited from the soldier-like classes of the Punjab, and from the wild and warlike tribes of Afghanistan, was raised, armed, equipped, and ready for service in three months, and within that time performed a march of many hundred miles from Delhi to Calcutta, the port of embarkation. During the campaign in China, in 1860-61, this regiment, thenceforward known by the soubriquet of "Fane's Horse," was ever to the front. It was present at the taking of the Taku Forts, the action of Chan-Ki-a-Wan, and the final capture of Peking. For his services there Colonel Fane was rewarded with a Brevet-Majority, also with medal and clasps. In 1868, he was again employed on active service in the Huzara campaign, on the North-West Frontier, under General Sir A. Wilde. In 1871, for his long and gallant services, he was rewarded with the Companionship of the Order of the Bath. During his career in India, and whilst on service in China, Colonel Fane occupied his spare moments in transferring to canvas his recollections of many of the stirring scenes which he had witnessed. We believe his lifelike and faithful sketches cannot fail to prove as interesting to all lovers of art as they have hitherto been to those who were present with him during those exciting periods of his life.

We hear it announced that Colonel Fane may possibly, ere long, be induced to quit the country in which he has hitherto gained such renown, and devote himself more exclusively to his pencil in quieter scenes at home. If this should prove the case, we offer him our best wishes, and trust that the success may hereafter attend him which his undoubted talent deserves. Colonel Fane won the highest prizes at a competitive exhibition of the works of amateur artists in the Indian services. The picture from which our Engraving was taken was purchased by the Earl of Northbrook, late Viceroy of India.

A Grand Provincial Lodge of Freemasons of North Wales and Shropshire was held at Shrewsbury on the 14th inst., when a presentation was made to Sir William Watkin Wynn, M.P., who has held the office of Provincial Grand Master for twenty-five years. The presentation consists of an address, an album, and the sum of £500, with which a vice-patronship will be obtained for Sir Watkin in the Royal Masonic Institution, enabling him to obtain the admission of a boy without the usual votes. A banquet, numerously attended, subsequently took place.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S STUDENT'S PIANOFORTE.

Five Octaves, F to F, Check Action, Trichord Treble. Price FIFTEEN GUINEAS. Designed by Mr. John Hullah, expressly for the use of Students, and will be found invaluable where space or portability is an object. The compass is quite sufficient for classical music—the whole of Mozart's and contemporary works being written within the five octaves F to F, the piano of that date not exceeding that compass.

For practice in Schools or Colleges they will be equally welcome, as more economical than using larger and more expensive instruments.

50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S YACHT PIANINO.

with Folding Keyboard, 6½ Octaves, Check Action, Trichord Treble, Solid Mahogany or Canadian Walnut Case, THIRTY GUINEAS; or in Rosewood or Walnut, THIRTY-FIVE GUINEAS; Maple, THIRTY-EIGHT GUINEAS. Constructed for Ships' Cabins. Superficial space required only 5 ft. 3 in. by 1 ft. 2 in. Will stand the damp of a sea voyage. The back is strengthened with iron bars and metallic plates.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S MIGNON IRON GRAND PIANOFORTE. Seven Octaves. Transverse String Bass. Length only 5 ft. 9 in. Rosewood or Walnut, from 75 guineas.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S NEW IRON GRAND PIANOFORTE. Length, 6 ft. 10 in. Transverse String Bass. Seven Octaves. Price, Rosewood, 110 guineas; Walnut, 135 guineas.

CHAPPELL'S CROSS-STRUNG IRON-FRAMED OBLIQUE GRAND. Patent Check Action, Metal Stand, Trichord, Seven Octaves. Rosewood, 30 guineas; Walnut, 35 guineas; Solid Wood, extra screwed for extreme climates, 100 guineas.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S COLONIAL MODEL PIANOFORTE. Trichord Check Action, Extra Strong Bracings, Iron Plate, Solid Panelled Front, &c. Rosewood, 45 guineas; Walnut, 50 guineas; Solid Ebony or Solid Wood, Iron Pin Plate, and extra screwed, for export to extreme climates, 80 guineas.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S ORIENTAL MODEL PIANOFORTE. Iron Frame, Trichord throughout, Check Action, Seven Octaves, Solid Walnut Case, FIFTY-FIVE GUINEAS; or in Solid Mahogany and Black Walnut Case, and Check Action, FORTY-THREE GUINEAS; with Plain Action, THIRTY-EIGHT GUINEAS.

Made expressly to withstand the heat and moisture of extreme climates. Every part that is liable to swell or shrink is secured by the use of the hammer, &c., is fastened with pins. The back and silk frame are lined with perforated zinc to keep out damp and insects; and every precaution taken that has been suggested by persons who have many years' experience in the care of musical instruments in India and China.

Testimonials of the durability of these instruments can be seen at 50, New Bond-street.

The price includes 100 lbs. Packing-cases of tin and wood; 2. A suitable tuning hammer or key; 3. A tuning fork; 4. Some additional strings; 5. A Book on Tuning and Preserving the Instrument; 6. And the Carriage to the Docks.

CHAPPELL'S English Model COTTAGE PIANOFORTE.

To amateurs preferring the pure English tone of the Broadwood and Collard quality, the English Model will be found the most satisfactory instrument, at a moderate price.

Compass 7 Octaves, Trichord Treble, Rosewood Case, Full Fret, Italian Walnut, 45 guineas.

Carved Trusses, 5 guineas extra. With Improved Scale and extra Tracings, 5 guineas extra.

50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL'S ENGLISH 20-GUINEA or SCHOOL-ROOM PIANOFORTE, with Check Action, in Canadian Walnut, Mahogany, also in Solid Oak or White Ash, 25 guineas; and in elegant Rosewood or Walnut Case, 27 guineas. This instrument combines good quality of tone and excellence of workmanship. It has the merit of standing well in tune, and is capable of enduring hard school practice without going out of order.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S MODEL PIANETTE, in Italian Walnut or Rosewood Case, 7 Octaves, Check Action, Trichord Treble, and newly improved Oleate Pedal. Price 35 guineas; with elegant Carved Trusses and Plinth, 3 guineas extra. The above will be found more powerful and effective than the smaller instruments termed Pianinos. The touch is smooth and elastic, and the tone sufficient to fill an ordinary-sized drawing-room.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S ALEXANDRE ORGAN, Modèle Français pour Salon, 10 Stops, 2 Key-Pedals, Automatic Swell, 10 Rows of Vibrators, &c. Entirely adapted for private use, possessing most charming varieties of tone, great facilities of expression, and ease in blowing. Price 30 guineas.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S NEW ORGAN HARMONIUM, by Alexandre, 7 Stops, 14 Rows of Vibrators, in handsomely-carved Gothic Oak Case. Price 15 guineas; polished, 16 guineas; or 6 guineas per year for three years.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S ORGAN-HARMONIUMS on the THREE-YEARS' SYSTEM.—These instruments have the round tone of the Organ without the disadvantage of requiring tuning, with much quicker articulation than the American Organs, and at half the cost.

PIPE ORGANS for DRAWING-ROOMS or CHURCHES, from 50 guineas to 500 guineas, for SALE or HIRE, on the Three-Years' System. Specifications for Organs suitable for any building or climate sent on application to CHAPPELL and CO.

THE DIGITORIUM; or, Miniature Dumb Piano (Patent).

Recommended by all the leading Professors of Music. This instrument materially assists any person to play on the Pianoforte, Organ, Harmonium, Violin, &c., strengthening the fingers, giving elasticity to the touch, and greatly assisting any student anxious to gain proficiency. Price 10s. or, with Ivory keys, 12s. (including the Exercises for practice), sent to any part of the country, carriage-free, on receipt of Postal Note Order.

The Digitorium is an invention for strengthening and equalising the power of the fingers. It consists of a dumb keyboard of five keys only, which are sprung lightly, heavily, or to medium strength, as may be required by these using the apparatus. At the bottom of the instrument a slide is made to draw out, which supports a small block of wood, intended as a rest for the wrist, and to relieve the muscles of the arm, which are not required to be brought into action. This slide may be drawn out to suit the length of the arm, so as to accommodate the direction of the touch. Small blocks of wood, in half circles, are fastened upon the sides of the instrument, which are used to produce great tension of the fingers.

HER MAJESTY RETURNING THROUGH HIGH WYCOMBE FROM HUGHENDEN MANOR.

HUGHENDEN MANOR HOUSE, THE SEAT OF LORD BEACONSFIELD, VISITED BY HER MAJESTY.

OUR CHRISTMAS CONJUROR.

BY PROFESSOR HOFFMANN.

AUTHOR OF "MODERN MAGIC," &c.

Among the many family circles assembled to do honour to Christmas in English homes, I doubt if a merrier could well have been found than was gathered under my grandfather's roof in the year 187—. The house, a large and roomy one, just on the outskirts of London, afforded ample accommodation for a numerous party, and its resources were employed to the fullest extent. It was a time-honoured custom that all the children and grandchildren of our host, not to mention sundry more distant relatives, should assemble for a week at Christmas under the paternal roof-tree. Many of the party only met at this annual gathering, which was always looked forward to with joyful anticipation by young and old. On the present occasion we were, if possible, even merrier than usual, for we numbered among our party an indefatigable promoter of fun and frolic in the person of Mr. Richard Leslie, more familiarly known as "Uncle Dick." He had but just returned from China, where he had been sojourning for several years, and so was a comparative stranger to the younger members of the family; but his inexhaustible spirits and unflinching fun had won all hearts, and even little three-year-old Maggie developed distinctly flirtatious propensities whenever she could get hold of Uncle Dick. Christmas Eve was always kept with special honour, and on the present occasion it promised to have even more than usual attractions, for not only was Uncle Dick (who had been kept away by business for two days) coming himself, but he was to bring with him a wonderful German conjuror whom he had met with in his travels, and the report of whose marvellous doings had formed the stock topic of conversation among the young ones for several evenings past, and had gradually acquired almost a ghost-story flavour.

Tea was over, and we had already arranged rows of chairs in the front drawing-room to seat the expectant audience, with a line of hassocks in front for the smallest spectators, when a thundering rat-a-tat was heard at the door. "There he is! There's Uncle Dick!" said a small cousin, clapping his hands. "No, he isn't," said another, with the calmer judgment of one size larger. "That isn't Uncle Dick's knock." Further speculation was suspended by the entrance of Mary, the parlour-maid, bearing a card with the inscription, "Herr Schwindel," and a letter in the well-known handwriting of Uncle Dick. A painful foreboding fell upon the whole party, and there was quite a shout of relief when my grandfather, having glanced at the note, said, "It's all right, boys and girls. Uncle Dick is detained in the City, but not for long. He says he will be sure to be with us in the course of the evening, and meanwhile his friend, Herr Schwindel, will amuse us till he comes. Show the gentleman in, Mary." All eyes were turned towards the door. The wonderful magician proved to be a man of about fifty years of age, with an enormous white-brown moustache, and eyebrows to match. He wore blue spectacles, and a coat with fur collar and cuffs, and carried a little black bag, on which the younger members of the company gazed with awe, as the probable receptacle of death's-heads and cross-bones, and other articles of a ghostly description. He entered with his hat, a high-crowned felt, in one hand, and the mysterious bag in the other, bowing on all sides with Continental profuseness. There was no need to proclaim his nationality; he was German from the crown of his head to the soles of his boots. On his entrance our little Skye terrier, Smut, the pet and plaything of the party, set up a frantic barking. "Ah! ze leetel vee tog!" said the Professor. "Vat for you make row-row-row? Come here, and I will conjure you!" and forthwith he began to make mesmeric passes at the dog, which, strange to say, after a few moments ceased to bark, and wagged her tail with every appearance of satisfaction. There was a distinct sensation, even among the elders. Ordinary conjuring they were prepared for, but there was something "no canny," as the Scotch say, about this sudden taming of a dumb animal, particularly one who, like Smut, was noted for her inveterate hostility to strangers. "Von, two, tree!" said the Herr, with a final sweep. "He will not bark at me not never no more. Ich bin traurig!" he continued, "I am sorry zat mine so good frent Herr Leslie vas not come mit me, but he tell me he come so soon as no time at all. He ask me to show (this word he pronounced as if it rhymed to 'cow') ze younk ladies and gentlemen von, two, tree leetel trick of die taschenspieler—vat you call jump-a-bank. No; zat is not right. Vot you call him? Mountabank—zat is it. I speak ze English ver pretty vell, but von time I forget von leetel vorte. You vas all sit down, and I begin." So saying, he took off his heavy fur coat, and appeared in evening dress, with an extensive embroidered shirt-front, in the centre of which blazed an enormous diamond breast-pin. "Won't you take a glass of wine before you begin?" said my grandfather. After a little pressing, the Professor accepted a glass of claret, which he sipped with great gusto. The cork was lying on the table, and caught the conjuror's eye. "Ach! here is von cork," he exclaimed, picking it up. "I show you mit him von leetel pizzle. Bot ze von cork is not enof. No matterre; I make anoder." And, rolling the cork between his hands, forthwith it became two. "Das ist sehr gut—dat is nice! Now I take de von cork between my finger and thumb, like so, and de oder mit de oder finger and thumb (see Fig. 1); den, mit dis finger and thumb I take dat cork, and mit dat finger and thumb I take dis cork, and it is finish. De corks is change."

The corks had certainly changed hands, but there did not seem to be any difficulty about the matter. "Not much puzzle in that," remarked cousin Augustus—a haughty young man, fresh from the grandeur of his first term at Oxford, and who had acquired a weird and awful reputation among the young ones by remarking that he knew how all the tricks were done, and he should like to see the conjuror who could take him in. "Ha! vat you say? Not moch pizzle!" exclaimed the conjuror. "Not moch pizzle! Den you do him yourself!" Nothing loth, the haughty Augustus took the corks, as Herr Schwindel had done, nipped each between the opposite finger and thumb, and endeavoured to draw his hands apart. But, to his shame and confusion, they declined to come apart. Each thumb and finger, with the cork they bore, formed one link of a chain (see Fig. 2), and there was no breaking the chain save by letting go one or other of the corks.

After Cousin Augustus, others of the party, procuring a further supply of corks, commenced experiments on their own account, with no better success. "Not moch pizzle! I tink he is too moch pizzle for you. I show you vonce again;" and, taking the corks, the Professor again waved them apart with airy grace. There was no show of sleight-of-hand, but each to all appearance passed completely through the other. "You haf not find him out! Den I show you anozzer. Vill von of the so kind younk ladies lent me von taschentuch—vat you call hankerfish?—Ich danke—I tank you!" He spread the borrowed handkerchief so that about one fourth of its width lay along the edge of the polished oak dining-table, the remainder hanging down, and secured it in that position by placing a wine-glass on each of the two upper corners (see Fig. 4). He then filled each glass to the very brim with claret. "Dere is anozzer leetel pizzle," he said, addressing himself particularly to the haughty Augustus.

"You take away de hankerfish vidout to spill de goot Rheinwein, and you sall drink him, efery drop." Augustus put forth a hesitating hand and tried to coax the handkerchief away; but the only result was to spill a portion of the wine. Nobody else would venture to attempt the seeming impossibility. "Ha! you gif him up?" said the Professor. "Es ist sehr leicht—it is ver easy!" So saying, he gathered up with his left hand the hanging portion of the handkerchief, and, making a sort of downward "chop" with the right (see Fig. 5), the handkerchief was thereby jerked away, without disturbing the glasses in the least. "I haf take away de hankerfish, and now I tink de vine"—which he did accordingly. "But dis is nothing—noting at all. You sit yourselves down, and I show you de vonderful vonders of die taschenspieler-kunst—de art magique; how you call him?—conjuror-trick." The audience were quickly marshalled to their seats, and the Professor began, turning back his sleeves in the approved professional manner.

"Mein Herren und Damen!—Ladies und Jentlemens,—I come before you to show you conjuration-trick ohne apparat—mitout apparatus. No prepare—no mechanik, no nothing. I haf only one two tree leetel ting in mine leetel bag." Here he rummaged in the bag, and produced an ebony wand covered with cabalistic characters. "Here is mine leetel stick, mine magic wand. If you take hold dis leetel stick, and I say 'Go away!' you go, go, go, and never stop no more, away to de ewigkeit. Aha! you lauf? Mine vort, it is true, so true as nothing. Nevare mind; I will not mine so great power abuse. Who is dere vill lend me von schelling and von leetel hankerfish? Dat is goot." He spread the handkerchief on a small round table which stood ready to hand, and laid the shilling, carefully marked by the great Augustus, in its centre; then folded over the four corners in succession upon it, making us feel at each stage that the coin was still there. Then, inserting two of the fingers of each hand within the nearest fold of the handkerchief (see Fig. 6) he said, "Von, two, tree—pass!" and, drawing them rapidly apart, lifted the handkerchief from the table, and gave it a smart shake. The coin had utterly disappeared. "Aha! you no see him go. I see him. He go to de shoe of dis young lady;" and, kneeling down before our little Maggie, who occupied a reserved hassock in the front row, whipped off one of her shoes, and, shaking it, out dropped the shilling, the mark upon it attesting its identity. "Ah! it is ver fly-away money. I gif you von leetel box to keep him safe." He dived into the black bag, and produced therefrom an ordinary pill-box, which was freely passed from hand to hand. It was a good honest common card pill-box. "You keep your monies in dis leetel box," continued the Professor, when it was returned to him; "and no tief he steal dem nevere no more. I pray you, look mit all your eyes. I put de leetel shilling in dis leetel box" (which he did accordingly in the most unmistakable manner). "I shut him up. I haf no lock, no key, no nothing; but I take mine leetel stick and I say, 'Money, mine nice bright schelling, go hide yourself! Do tief he come; and when de tief he come, de money he hide away, and de tief no find him." So saying, he shook the box. There was no sound. He opened it, and showed it empty. Again he shut it, and a score of eager eyes could testify that he introduced nothing; but he resumed, "De tief he find nothing; he gone away. I say, mine leetel shilling, come back!" He shook the box once more, and the coin rattled within it. He opened it, and turning it over, the shilling fell out into his hand. He passed it to the owner, and with it the marvellous pill-box. A sceptic whispered "false bottom," and forthwith both top and bottom of the box were poked completely out by eager fingers. But all in vain—each was but a single thickness of card, and the marvel remained wholly unaccounted for.

The handkerchief borrowed for the purpose of the former trick still remained on the table. Herr Schwindel took it up by its middle, letting the four corners hang down. "Aha! ze leetel hankerfish, ze nice leetel hankerfish, I mesmerise him, and you sall see vat you sall see. I take him, so! I kiss him for his moder, I stroke him for his fader!" (suiting the action to the word), "and he give me nice leetel sweetmeat for de younk ladies and jentlemens." So saying, he passed backwards and forwards in front of the spectators, at every step shaking from the handkerchief, into the outstretched hands and laps of the youngsters, bonbons of various descriptions.

Ere the applause called forth by this last feat had fully subsided, the Professor dived into the mysterious bag, and produced therefrom a little black bottle, of champagne shape, and about four inches in height. He said, "Here is de vonderful Bottle Imp, vat never lie down for nobody, till I conjure him, and den he lie down as quiet as de littel vee dog." Smut, who was watching the proceedings with great interest, conceiving herself appealed to, responded with a short, quick bark of approbation. Herr Schwindel laid the bottle on its side, but it instantly rose again to an erect position, and we then perceived that it was rounded at the bottom, as the manner of the dancing dolls of the toy-shops, and so weighted as always to keep upright. The bottle was handed round for inspection, and we all did our utmost to make it lie down, but without success. "You no make him lie down?" said the Herr. "I show you; look!" So saying, he took out the cork, blew into the bottle, and again corked it; when, behold, it lay down in the most obliging manner.

"I know how that's done," exclaimed the lofty Augustus, who had not forgiven the Professor his former discomfiture, and now proceeded, as he thought, to pour confusion on his head. "What about the little piece of wire inside?" "Vire," responded the Professor, "vat you call vire? It is not soda-wasser bottle. I haf not got no vire." "No," said Augustus, "what do you call this, then?" and taking out the cork he inverted the bottle, but nothing fell out. He shook it, but it was obviously empty. The haughty Augustus was completely dumfounded. "I thought—" he stammered. "I mean, I didn't think—" and there he stopped. The Professor beamed at him benevolently through his blue spectacles. "Mine younk frent, it is not goot to know too moch. It is as say your own the never-enof-to-be-praised, ze immortal Williams, 'Zere are more tings in de heafen and de earth dan you vas dream of in your philosophic.' Once more he blew in the bottle, which again obstinately refused to be laid down. Again he blew, and the bottle assumed the horizontal position without a murmur. We, too, blew and blew in every possible manner, but without the slightest result. The bottle would obey no one but its owner.

The Professor's next feat was an illustration of his powers of divination. Taking a handful of counters, he arranged them in the form of the letter Q on the table. He then requested that one of the company would, in his absence, count from the tip of the tail to any counter he pleased, and then back again from such counter round the circle in the opposite direction, when he would tell us by some magic process the last counter touched. The process was gone through accordingly, the Professor meanwhile retiring to the hall, where, as we afterwards learned, he kissed Mary, the parlour-maid, and added insult to injury by telling her that he could not help it, she was so like his poor dear mother. When recalled, he advanced to the table, and touched sundry of the counters with his magic wand. There was no result until he reached the counter which we had last touched, when his whole frame was convulsed by (apparently) a violent electric shock, and he announced that we had terminated with that particular counter. The experiment was twice repeated, the Q being made to consist each time of a different number of counters; but Herr Schwindel was infallible, and pointed out the terminating counter on each occasion with unerring accuracy.

This feat produced a decided sensation. We had felt that the preceding tricks were probably dependent on some clever sleight-of-hand, but this bordered on the supernatural. We were quite sure that the Professor had no confederate among ourselves; and the drawing-room doors were of the most substantial make; and yet by some mysterious faculty he appeared to know what was done in his absence, just as well as if he had remained in the room the whole time. Dear old grandmamma was heard to murmur that she "hoped it was all right;" and Aunt Letty, an elderly spinster of a romantic turn, and suspected of spiritualistic tendencies, whispered to her next neighbour that the Professor was evidently a powerful clairvoyant. "You tink dat is vonderful?" said the Herr; "Mein Gott! dat is noding at all. I show you de genuine spiritism. Ach so! Dat is vonderful. Yes; who is dere will lent me schelling—goot silber schelling?" Shillings were offered in various quarters, but Aunt Letty's was accepted, to her evident gratification. She was requested to mark it, which she did with great minuteness. Taking a champagne glass of the tall, old-fashioned kind in his right hand, the Herr dropped the shilling into it, and then, holding it high in sight of all, made mesmeric passes towards it. We waited in breathless expectation, none the less exciting that none of us knew what was likely to happen. Nothing did happen, and, at Herr Schwindel's request, the gas was turned down to a "dim, religious light." After a few more minutes of expectation and renewed passes on the part of the performer, the coin began to "clink" in the glass. "Aha!" said the Professor, "he wake up at last. Now you vill all please ver moch silence." There was a general hush. "Is dere any spirits in de glass?" The coin clinked violently. "How vas you say 'Yes'?" The coin clinked three times. "How vas you say 'Nein'—what you call 'No'?" The coin clinked twice. "How vas you count de numbers?" The coin rang out several strokes in regular succession. "Now ve see vedder you tell true," said the Professor. "Vich younk lady vill be marry first? Is it dis lady? Is it dis lady?" indicating one after another with his wand. At each question the coin rang out twice, till he reached cousin Amy, a fair damsel who had just achieved the dignity of being "engaged," when it struck "three" with great distinctness. "Ah! mine pretty fraulein, de spirits haf find you out. Now ve vill demand if dey vill know de moch fortunate younk jentleman. Ist er hier? Is he of de now present company?" The coin responded in the affirmative. Several candidates were suggested and rejected, the real Simon Pure doing his best to look as unconscious as possible, but being picked out by the coin in the most unhesitating manner. Matters now began to be serious. Grandmamma again expressed her hope that it was all right, in a tone which conveyed that she decidedly feared that it was not; and sundry others of the elders began to question in whispers whether this kind of thing was "quite proper for the children." The Professor, apparently quite unconscious of the sensation he was creating, proceeded with his queries. "Haben sie—is dere any spirit dat haf for dis company any message?" There was a prompt reply in the affirmative. A question was next asked as to the person for whom the communication was intended, and the coin ultimately designated Aunt Letty, who was thereby thrown into a flutter of pleased excitement, not unmixed with nervousness. "Would you mind asking the spirit what his name is?" she simpered. There was a general smile at Aunt Letty's decided assumption that the spirit was a "he;" but the magician proceeded with the utmost gravity to put the question as desired. He then requested Aunt Letty to repeat the alphabet slowly, telling her the spirits would make the coin sound when she reached the right letter. There was a breathless silence. Aunt Letty repeated her alphabet as far as the letter P, when the coin sounded. With increasing emotion she began again, until the spirits had spelt out the word "Podger." Now there was a family tradition that Aunt Letty had been in earlier life beloved by a Captain Podger, a naval gentleman of surpassing bravery. He had never actually proposed, but it was understood in the family that he would have done so had time permitted, but he unfortunately came to an untimely end, having died of gout in the stomach at the age of sixty-five. Aunt Letty was known to cherish his memory accordingly, and always intimated that she remained a spinster for his sake.

The excitement was tremendous. Aunt Letty nerved herself to proceed. "Can you give me any proof of your identity?" she asked. The coin struck thrice, in the affirmative. The spelling process was repeated, and the coin, to the astonishment of all present, spelt out "Wooden Leg." Now, it was a curious fact that the departed Podger had lost a leg, and the proof of his identity was therefore of the completest character. Notwithstanding the somewhat peculiar character of the token given, nobody felt inclined to smile, till Aunt Letty exclaimed, with intense feeling, "Poor dear George! Then he wears it still!"

The idea of a spirit with a wooden leg was too much for the most determined gravity. There was a general shout of laughter, Aunt Letty looking very indignant, and finally bursting into tears. But the most startling effect was that produced on the Professor himself. For a moment or two he looked profoundly unconscious, but it was evident that even he was not proof against the infection of the general merriment. The muscles of his face worked convulsively, in the vain effort to control his features; but it was of no avail. After a few ineffectual struggles he exclaimed, in the well-known accents of Uncle Dick, "Oh, Letty, Letty! you'll be the death of me!" and sunk into an arm-chair, where he absolutely rolled with laughter, while the charmed shilling, which we now saw to be attached to a thread, escaped from the glass and dangled ignominiously against his waistcoat. In an instant all was confusion. Uncle Dick was abused on all sides for having taken us in so scandalously. Cousin Amy said he ought to be ashamed of himself; and Aunt Letty left the room, mortally offended. Grandmamma declared she could forgive him anything except cutting off his whiskers, which he had been obliged to sacrifice to the exigencies of his part. At last, it was proposed by Master Reginald (a youngster fresh from school), and carried unanimously, that Uncle Dick should then and there tell us how all his tricks were done, and that on that condition alone should he receive general forgiveness. The culprit demurred for some time, under all sorts of pretexts, among others that he had acquired the knowledge of these mysteries as a Rosicrucian, and would be liable to unheard-of horrors if he revealed them. But his excuses were over-ruled, and he finally capitulated. He pulled off the long-haired German wig and the enormous moustache (which were forthwith confiscated by the junior members of the party), and, leaning back in his chair, said, "Do your worst, ladies and gentlemen. To part with any one of these cherished secrets is like having out one's best double-tooth; but I am at your mercy. Proceed!"

Half a dozen questions were instantly asked. Uncle Dick gave Amy's the preference. "How did I conjure the shilling out of the pill-box? Well, in the first place, I changed the shilling. 'This is the one I really put in the box.' He took from his waistcoat-pocket a shilling, one side of which was completely covered with white paper pasted against it. 'When I put it in the box, this papered side was uppermost, so when you looked in you saw, apparently, only the bottom of the box. The shilling, you see, exactly fits the box, so when I did not want it to rattle I shook the box sideways. When I did want it to sound, I shook it up and down. The genuine shilling remained in my hand all the time.' 'But how did you make the shilling disappear from the handkerchief?' said a voice. 'You certainly put it fairly in the middle.'

"Quite so, and on the top of it I put a little piece of bees-wax. When I folded the corner of the handkerchief over the shilling, I took care to press a little, so that the shilling should stick to the handkerchief, and when I drew apart the two corners the shilling came of its own accord into my right hand, from whence I dropped it when I shook Maggie's shoe." "But where did the sweets come from, Uncle Dick?" said a little niece of five. "Out of the handkerchief, to be sure," said Uncle Dick. "Oh, yes, of course; but how did they get into the handkerchief? That's what we want to know." "Oh, dear—oh, dear! Here are all my pet secrets flying away, one after the other. Won't you let me keep just this little one?" We sternly answered, "No!" "Well, if you must know, they were kept in this little bag." Uncle Dick pulled out of his pocket a little bag of sugar-loaf shape, with a hook formed of a bent pin at its smaller end. We examined it minutely, but were none the wiser. "This bag is filled with sugar-plums, and then a piece of very thin tissue paper is pasted over the mouth. The bag is then hung mouth downwards behind the table, this bent pin being hooked into the table-cover." "But I don't see now how the sweets are brought into the handkerchief," said Cousin Augustus. "Probably not, most noble Augustus; but calm your emotion, and all shall be made clear. You may remember that I threw the handkerchief flat on the table. When I picked it up again I took hold, through the stuff, of the bent pin; so that when I lifted it, the bag was in the middle, though concealed by the folds which hung down around it. When I professed to mesmerise the handkerchief, I gave it a sly squeeze, which burst the tissue-paper, and caused the bag to shed its sweets. When they were all out, and you were all occupied in trying their flavour, I had plenty of opportunity to take the bag out of the handkerchief and pocket it."

"Dear me! how simple all these things are, when you know them," said Grandmamma. "But Dick, however could you tell which counters we touched?" "I did not know what counters you touched, my dear mother; but I knew what counter you must necessarily leave off at. However far you may count up the left-hand side of the circle, when you count the same number back again you must necessarily reach the same number beyond the tail on the other side as there are counters in the tail itself. That is the reason I changed the arrangement of the counters each time, or you would very soon have noticed that the process always terminated with the same counter." "I don't quite see why that should be," said Grandpapa. "I dare say not," replied Uncle Dick. "It is not quite obvious at first, but if you try it half a dozen times with the counters, you can't fail to see the principle. It's as plain as A B C." "But what about the two corks, and that remarkable little bottle?" asked another voice. "The bottle is simplicity itself. Our friend Augustus here was quite right as to the principle, but he was a little behind the age. These bottles were at first sold with a little piece of stout wire, which, being secretly introduced, served as a counterweight, and kept the bottle lying down. But that was a clumsy expedient, and constantly liable to discovery. In this improved bottle, which I got from Mr. Bland, of Oxford-street, the same effect is produced by having two corks to the bottle, one of which is loaded with a little pellet of lead; and, in the act of blowing into the bottle, the one is exchanged for the other, according as we desire to make the bottle obedient or disobedient. The puzzle of passing the two corks from hand to hand is about the only thing I have shown you in which there is really 'no deception.' Observe, I will take the corks again, as at first (Fig. 1). Now, I have to take hold of each with the thumb and middle finger of the opposite hand. If I do so in the most natural and obvious way—namely, with the palms of both hands turned inwards, towards the body, the corks become crossed (Fig. 2), and cannot be got apart without losing the hold of the fingers. But, if I turn the left palm outward, and the right inward, holding the former uppermost (Fig. 3), the corks are clear of each other, and the hands come apart without the least difficulty, so. See; I'll do it again, very slowly. Try again, Augustus, my boy! That's better; but there is no need to go into those violent contortions. The movement is the simplest thing in the world; but you'll have to practice a good bit before you'll be able to execute it with that delicacy of touch for which my friend Herr Schwindel is so justly celebrated."

"But, how ever did you manage to turn the one cork into two?"

"By the simple expedient of having taken a second cork from my own pocket, and holding it concealed in my hand, when I picked up the other from the table. And now, I think I've told you everything. If anybody wants to know anything else, let him speak now, or for ever hold his peace." "How about the talking shilling?" said Augustus. "Oh! I thought that was only too painfully obvious. All would have gone capitolly if it hadn't been for the unfortunate introduction of that 'wooden leg.' Poor dear Aunt Letty! I could have stood anything but that touching exclamation. A ghost with a wooden leg! Oh, my poor sides! It was '2 mutch,' as poor Artemus Ward says. It was a great shame, though; and I'm afraid it will take a long while to before I am quite forgiven. As to the working of the trick, it's absurdly simple, like most of the spiritualistic swindles. The whole thing, literally, hangs by a thread. You have a piece of black silk thread fastened to the front of your waistcoat. (Here it is, you see.) At the free end there is a small pellet of bees' wax. I squeeze this against the coin, which naturally adheres to it, and so becomes attached to the thread. In this condition it is dropped into the glass, which I hold so as to have the thread barely taut, when the slightest extension of the arm or withdrawal of the body suffices to raise the coin half an inch or so, and the reverse movement lets it fall again, with an audible chink. How on earth the shilling got to know that Amy was engaged to Charley Radcliffe, or that the deceased Captain Podger had a leg, I really can't pretend to explain." "You good-for-nothing tease," said Amy; "and if Aunt would forgive you, I won't. The only consolation you have had to sacrifice your whiskers, that you were sc of." "Whiskers! my dear child," said Uncle Dick, shaking his head; "I can assure you that the loss of whiskers is the very smallest of my sacrifices. If you knew the agony of having to smile and talk broken I with a folded table-cover inside the tightest part of one's suit, not to mention the loss of self-respect involved in wearing a sixpenny diamond brooch in a hitherto respectable front, I believe you would shed a tear of sympathy even the memory of Herr Schwindel."

THE KAFFIR WAR.

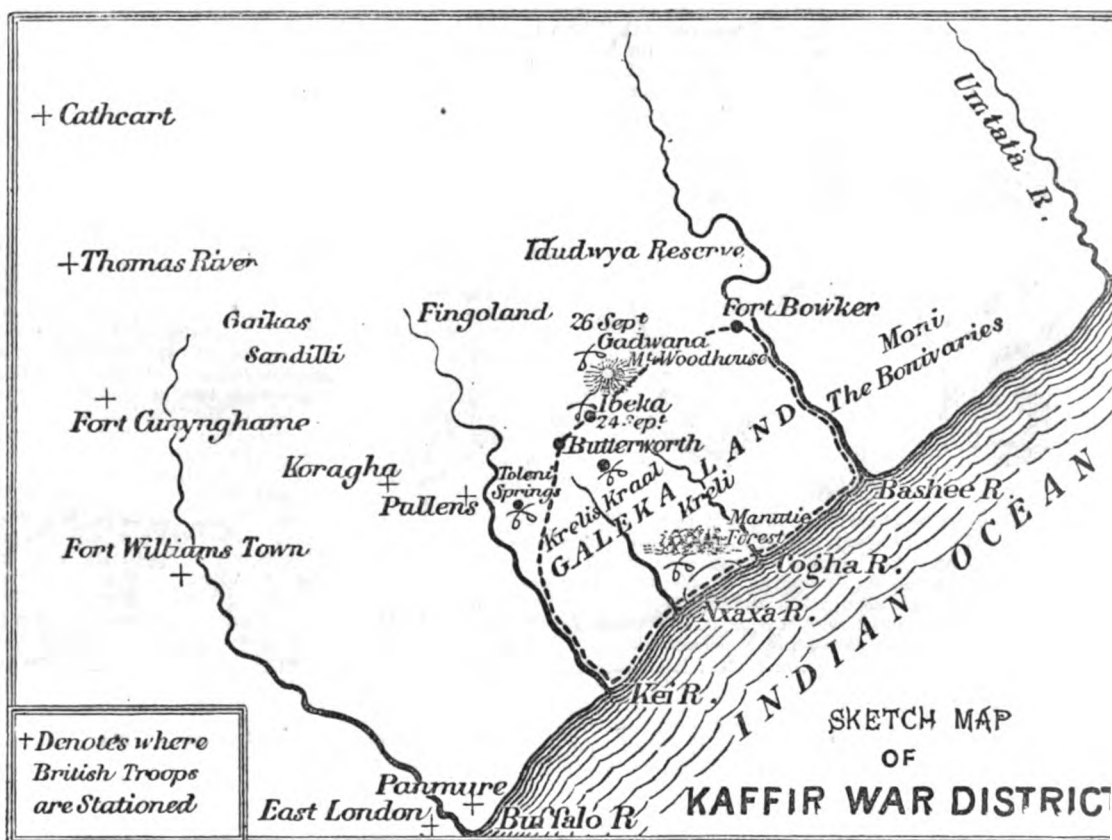

The recent campaign in the Trans-Kei territory, on the frontier of the British South African Dominion, is the subject of a few more illustrations. That territory is peopled by several independent Kaffir tribes, among which the Amaxosa Kaffirs or Galekas number about 60,000, occupying the district near the seacoast from the Great Kei to the Bashee river, a space of fifty miles long by thirty. The colonial militia forces, supported by regular troops under the direction of General Sir A. Cunynghame, K.C.B., went into the Galeka country, which they entered from Fingo-land by three routes—the Springs, Butterworth, and Ibeka, on Oct. 18 or 19. These places had been the scene of hostilities in the latter weeks of September, when parties of the armed Frontier Police, and of the loyal Kaffir auxiliaries, were engaged with the enemy, and Europeans were unfortunately killed. Amongst them, an officer of the Armed and Mounted Frontier Police, a Captain named Von Hohenen, an excellent soldier, who was at Gadwana Hill, or Mount Wodehouse, on Sept. 26, his allies having fled before an overwhelming host of the Kaffirs, who cut off his feet, and likewise his scalp, with the skin of his face, leaving the body in that state. The two brothers Goss, who were shot down, with eight of their Fingo followers, by a party of nine Galekas at a kloof or ravine, is another memorable incident of this warfare. Our sketches are by Lieutenant Nevill J. A. C. of the 24th Regiment, aide-de-camp to Sir Cunynghame. They include, besides the places which the scenes of the recent affairs we have mentioned, of "Mordners' Kop," on the Kei river, where five officers were killed in a former Kaffir war. The commandant Griffith at Luisizie, between the Mxogha rivers, where he halted after clearing the Mxogha bush of the enemy, is also shown in one of these sketches. Krelli has now been driven across the Bashee, into the territory of the Bomvana tribe. The British military headquarters are fixed at Fort Bowker, preparing a fresh attack upon the north.

The prizes were distributed on Tuesday to the general cadets of the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, by Sir C. Ellice, who represented the Duke of Cambridge report of the examiners was satisfactory in every respect.

The final trial of the Northampton, one of the most powerful war-ships afloat, was made on Tuesday, and proved satisfactory that the ship has been formally taken over by the Admiralty.

The last of a series of four lectures upon "War and Peace," in connection with the Trades Guild of Learning given on Monday night by Mr. R. Stewart Lane, the secretary to the Japanese Legation, at the Vestry-Hall, 1, road, Chelsea, the subject being "Our Relations with Japan."

Prizes were presented last Saturday evening to the Middlesex Rifles (who have increased their number of effectives to 885, the result of augmenting the establishment to 1,000), at their headquarters, the Freemasons' Hall, by Colonel Freemantle, of the 512nd being efficient), at their headquarters, Kensington, by Colonel Ransome, their commanding officer; a the 3rd London Rifles (having a total strength of 816 being efficient), at Guildhall, by the Lord Mayor. The prizes of the 23rd Surrey were distributed by (Payne, at the headquarters, Rotherhithe, on the 13th when it was stated that there were thirty-four proficient efficient, and fifty-two non-efficient. The 5th Essex received their prizes the same night at Plaistow, from the ha Colonel Birt, who stated that the shooting, drill, efficiency numbers of the corps all show an improvement on the last year.

THE STORMING OF KAI

STATUES FOR GLASGOW.

The bronze statue of Thomas Campbell, the poet, which has been erected in George-square, Glasgow, is to be unveiled on Friday next. We give an illustration of this statue of the author of "The Pleasures of Hope," "Gertrude of Wyoming," interest in the fame of both these eminent men as natives of the adjoining districts. The statues, cast by Messrs. Cox and Sons, founders, are highly to be commended as works of art. The Livingstone statue, pronounced the best likeness yet produced, is now on its way to Glasgow. But as the committee have not yet decided on the design for the pedestal, the date of its erection has not been fixed;—it will be probably about March, 1878. This commission was, like the one for Campbell, gained by Mr Mossman in open competition. It may interest readers to know that Mr. Mossman is a trained artist. His father worked in Chantrey's studio with Allan Cunningham. He was himself assistant in London to Baron Marochetti before commencing business with a younger brother of great promise (a student of the Royal Academy in London), who died some years ago. Mr. Mossman adds greatly by these two works to his local reputation.

THE LATE MR. SYDNEY SMIRKE, R.A.

We announced last week the death of this well-known architect, in the seventy-eighth year of his age. He was a brother of the late Sir Robert Smirke, R.A. He won the gold medal of the Royal Academy in 1810, and subsequently gained a distinguished position in his profession, from which he retired on the completion of the new Royal Academy buildings, Burlington House. Among the other works identified with his name are the Carlton and Conservative Club houses; the restoration of portions of Lichfield Cathedral and York

Minster; the restoration of the Savoy Chapel, and (in conjunction with Mr. C. Burton) of the Temple Church; the Reading-Room, Roman and Assyrian Galleries, and other works at the British Museum; and the dining-hall at the Inner Temple. Mr. Smirke was architect to Bridewell and Bethlehem Hospital and to the Inner Temple, and Surveyor-

General to the Duchy of Lancaster. He was elected Associate of the Royal Academy in 1848, Royal Artist in 1860, Professor of Architecture in the Academy in 1861, and Treasurer in 1862. He was a Fellow of several societies, and gold medallist of the Royal Institute of British Architects.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL A. C. BENTINCK.

Lieutenant-General Arthur Cavendish Bentinck died on the 11th inst., at Thomas's Hotel, Berkeley-square. He was born May 10, 1819, the second son of Lord William Bentinck, and grandson of William Henry, third Duke of Portland, K.G., and became, at the death of his cousin, Lord Henry William Bentinck, in 1870, heir-presumptive to the dukedom of Portland. He entered the Army in November, 1838, and for some years commanded the 7th (Princess Royal's) Dragoon Guards, and was subsequently Inspecting Field Officer in Dublin. He served with his regiment in the Kaffir war of 1847. His promotion to be Lieutenant-General dates only from Oct. 1 last. General Bentinck married, first, Feb. 18, 1857, Elizabeth Sophia, eldest daughter of Sir St. Vincent Hawkins-Whitshed, Bart., and by her, who died Jan. 4, 1858, leaves an only child, William John Arthur Charles James Cavendish Bentinck, born Dec. 28, 1857, now heir-presumptive to the dukedom of Portland. General Bentinck married, secondly, June 10, 1862, Augusta Mary Elizabeth, younger daughter of the Hon. and Very Rev. H. M. Browne, Dean of Lismore, by whom he leaves three sons and a daughter.

MR. WELD OF LULWORTH.

Edward Joseph Weld, Esq., of Lulworth Castle, in the county of Dorset, J.P. and D.L., died on the 8th inst. He was born June 8, 1806, the eldest son of Joseph Weld, Esq., of Lulworth Castle, by the Hon. Elizabeth Charlotte Stourton, his wife, daughter of Charles Philip, sixteenth Lord Stourton, and was nephew of his Eminence Cardinal Weld, the first Englishman who had a seat in the Conclave since the pontificate of Clement IX. The Welds of Lulworth, originally of Eaton, in Cheshire, have long held a leading position among the Catholic aristocracy of England, and still possess very extensive estates and influence. The gentleman whose death we record served as High Sheriff of Dorsetshire in 1872. He married, Aug. 9, 1838, Ellen Caroline, eldest daughter of Sir Bouchier Palk Wrey, Bart., of Tawstock Court, Devon, and by her, who died Oct. 13, 1866, leaves issue.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL TEDLIE.

Lieutenant-Colonel William Tedlie, late of the 60th Royal Rifles, whose death at Boulogne-sur-Mer on the 6th inst. was announced in our last issue, entered the service as Second Lieutenant first battalion 60th Royal Rifles, May, 1848, and retired in 1873. The services of this officer were chiefly in India. He was attached to the 53rd Regiment, and took part with it in the operations against the mutineers in December, 1857, including the actions of Khodagunge and the entry into Futtyghur. He served as Deputy-Assistant Quartermaster-General to the Roorkee field force under Brigadier-General Jones in the campaign of Rohilund in 1858, including the actions of Bugawalla and Nugeena, relief of Mooradabad, action in the Dojura capture of Bareilly, bombardment of Shahjehanpore, capture of the fort of Bunnai, pursuit of the enemy to the left bank of the Goomtee, and destruction of the fort of Mahomdee. Colonel Tedlie was Brigade-Major to the Shahjehan brigade in 1858 and 1859, including the action of Bunkagong, under Sir Thomas Seaton, and important operations in Oude. He married, in 1870, Emily Mary, only daughter of the late distinguished author and antiquary, Sir Frederic Madden, K.H.

MR. R. N. WORNUM.

Mr. Ralph Nicholson Wornum, the Keeper and Secretary of the National Gallery, died on the 15th inst., at his house in Belsize-square, in his sixty-fifth year. Having been educated at the University College, London, he went abroad in 1834 to study painting in the Continental galleries, returning in 1839, when he became a frequent contributor on art-subjects to periodical and cyclopaedic literature. He prepared the official catalogue of the National Gallery, and was subsequently lecturer on Art to the Government Schools of Design; librarian and keeper of the casts to the Schools of Design; and (from 1855) secretary and keeper of the National Gallery. Wornum was the author of numerous works on "Painting and Painters," and also of an essay on "The Exhibition of 1851," and various catalogues and reports on art-collections.

The deaths have also been announced of—

Dr. Francis Hawkins, physician to her Majesty's household, in his eighty-fourth year.

Herbert Norman Evans, M.D., late of Hampstead, on the 10th inst., at St. Leonards, aged seventy-five.

Arthur Robert Adams, Q.C., Recorder of Birmingham, suddenly, on the 13th inst., in his sixty-sixth year.

Henry Thomas Curtis, Esq., on the 10th inst., at Burfield Lodge, Old Windsor, Berks, aged seventy-eight.

The Rev. George Fereman, M.A., Vicar of Brize Norton, Oxfordshire, on the 8th inst., at St. Leonard's-on-Sea.

Major-General Edward Mortlock Studd, on the 6th inst., at Oxted, Devon, in his seventy-eighth year. He attained the rank of Major-General in 1854.

The Rev. Joseph Gattley, M.A., twenty-five years Vicar of Harford, and Rector of Ven Ottery, on the 7th inst., at the Vicarage, aged seventy-four.

Mr. Sergeant Tozer, LL.D., Fellow of Caius College, Cambridge, Recorder of Bury St. Edmunds, on the 8th inst., at James-street, Buckingham-gate, in his seventy-second year.

Robert Alexander Gray, Esq., J.P., Deputy-Lieutenant of the county of Surrey, on the 10th inst., at his residence, The Terrace, Camberwell, in his ninetieth year.

The Rev. William Laurence Eliot, M.A., Fellow of Eton College, Rector of Creting, Suffolk, and Rural Dean, on the 7th inst., at Welbeck-street, Cavendish-square, aged sixty-five. He was a direct descendant of the ancient and knightly family of Eliot of Busbridge.

Mr. James Ballantine, Grand Bard to the Scottish Grand Lodge of Freemasons, in Edinburgh, on the 18th inst., at the age of sixty-nine. Mr. Ballantine was the author of "Ilka blade o' grass kops its ain drap o'dew," and other Scottish melodies, and he wrote tales illustrative of Scottish life.

D. Alfred Ker, Esq., of Montalto, late Captain 12th Lancers, on the 8th inst., at Brighton, aged thirty-four. He was the only son of David Stewart Ker, Esq., of Montalto, J.P. and D.L., formerly M.P. for the county of Down, by Anna Dorothea, his wife, daughter of Hans, third Lord Dufferin, and was grandson of David Ker, Esq., of Portavo and Montalto, M.P., by Lady Selina Sarah, his wife, daughter of the first Marquis of Londonderry.

Colonel C. Wood, formerly of the 10th (Prince of Wales's Own) Hussars, one of the few remaining Waterloo officers, at his residence, Carleton Lodge, near Pontefract, on the 12th inst., after a few days' illness, in his eighty-eighth year. Colonel Wood was engaged in the principal battles of the Peninsular War, and was severely wounded in the shoulder at the battle of Busaco, when carrying the King's colours of the 52nd Regiment. He was present at Waterloo with the 10th Hussars, and was badly wounded.

CHESS IN MANCHESTER.

The following two very fine Games were, with five others, conducted simultaneously by Mr. J. H. BLACKBURN, without seeing the boards or men, against seven members of the Chess Club, Manchester, on the 3rd inst. All the seven games were over in about three hours. Mr. Blackburne having then won five and drawn the remaining two. The sparkling gambit which we first give hereunder was contested against Mr. E. H. Wood, one of the strongest players in Manchester.

(Evans's Gambit declined.)

CHESS INTELLIGENCE.

The following particulars have been furnished to us by Mr. J. H. Blackburne, who has just returned to London from a visit to the North of England. On the 28th ult. he conducted a simultaneous blindfold match against eight strong players at the Bradford Chess Club, and he won five games as against one lost, the other two being drawn. On the 1st inst. he played under similar conditions against eight members of the Manchester Chess Club, winning five of the games and drawing the other three. On the 3rd inst. he contested as above mentioned at the Chess Club, Manchester, defeating five of the players and drawing with the other two. These figures show a total of fifteen blindfold games won by Mr. Blackburne, seven others being drawn, and only one lost—a highly successful result, and the more creditable because all the three performances took place within the short period of six days.

A contest, consisting of two games to be conducted through the post, has been commenced between the Bermondsey Club and the recently established Chess Club at Dawson-street, Dublin.

On the 8th inst. a match took place between the Liverpool and Manchester Chess Clubs, at the rooms of the former. There were ten players on each side—viz., Messrs. Burn, Schull, J. Soul, Wellington, C. Soul, Dufresne, Ferguson, Allaire, Wood, and "Nemo"—on the part of Liverpool; Messrs. E. H. Wood, H. Jones, Fish, Von Zubern, W. Jones, Giltay, Boyer, Wilson, and Major-General Vials on behalf of Manchester. The score at the finish showed that each club had won seven games, with two draws; and, consequently, the honours were divided. The return contest is to be fought at Manchester at the end of the season; and we learn that there will be for the future two such "home and home" matches between these clubs every year.

In Division A of the City of London Handicap Tournament, Messrs. Huckle and Lord have each defeated their opponents, so that they will form two of the surviving eight combatants who in the next round will compete for first and second prizes. The contest between Messrs. MacDonnell in the same division still remains undecided. One game has been played between them, which was won by the last-named player.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will and seven codicils (dated respectively Aug. 4, 1875, Aug. 4 and Dec. 13, 1876; and Feb. 13, May 25, and Aug. 29, 1877, of the Hon. Mrs. Mary Howard, late of Ashstead Park, Surrey, who died on Oct. 19 last, were proved on the 6th inst. by General the Hon. Arthur Upton, the nephew, and Augustus Frederick Coe, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £250,000. The testatrix bequeaths to the Orphan Girls' Home, Kendal, Westmoreland, £2000; to the Westmoreland Diocesan Church and Parsonage Building Society, the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, and the Royal Hospital for Incurables, Putney, £1000 each; to the Lynn and West Norfolk Hospital, King's Lynn, Norfolk, and the Curates' Augmentation Fund, £500 each; to the Incorporated Clergy Orphan Society, £200; to the Surrey County Hospital, St. John's Foundation School, Leatherhead, the Society for the Relief of Distressed Widows, Sackville-street, and the Asylum for the Indigent Blind, Red Lion-square, £100 each; and £50 each to the Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb, Old Kent-road, the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, the Charing-cross Hospital, the Governors' Benevolent Institution, the Shipwrecked Fishermen and Mariners' Society, and the Asylum for Idiots, Earlswood; and she directs that her god-daughter, Miss Harriet Mary Paget, is to have for life all votes arising out of these charitable bequests. There are a large number of legacies, both pecuniary and specific, and many annuities to her relatives and friends; and her old and present servants are handsomely remembered. There are also a number of bequests for the benefit of the poor and to the local charities of the parishes in which she was interested; and a sum not exceeding £2000 is to be expended by her executors in the purchase of an organ for, and in the building of a porch, and in other restorations of the church at Castle Rising, Norfolk. The Fisherwick farm property, Staffordshire, is devised by the testatrix to Walter Alfred Bagot for life, with remainder to Admiral Henry Bagot for life, with remainder to his second son; the rest of her Staffordshire estates, including the mansion-house at Elford, she settles on Mr. Howard Paget; and her Norfolk estates, including the mansion and property at Castle Rising, have been settled on the Hon. Greville Theophilus Howard. There are also some other devises and bequests; and the residue of her property, real as well as personal, she leaves to General the Hon. Arthur Upton, George Frederick Viscount Templeton, the Hon. Greville Theophilus Howard, and Colonel Charles Bagot.

The will and codicil (dated July 22, 1872, and Oct. 9, 1877) of Mr. William Beardmore, late of Parkhead, Glasgow, who died at Brighton in October last, were proved and recorded in the books of Council and Session, &c., Edinburgh, on the 17th ult. by his brother-in-law, the Rev. William George Martin, Mrs. Sophia Beardmore, the widow, and Mr. William Beardmore, the son of the deceased, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £140,000. The testator, amongst other provisions, bequeaths to his widow all his household furniture, plate, pictures, &c., absolutely, together with an annuity of £1000, and a sum of £300 for mourning expenses, and a further sum of £500 for interim aliment. The residue of his estate he leaves to his children in equal portions; the shares of each, after deducting a liberal allowance for maintenance and education, he directs to be set aside and invested until they shall respectively attain majority.

The will, with two codicils thereto, of the late Rev. Robert Tritton, M.A., Rector of Morden, Surrey, has been proved in the principal registry, by his nephew, Mr. Joseph Tritton, his great nephew, Mr. Joseph Herbert Tritton, and his sons, the Rev. Robert Biscoe Tritton, and the Rev. William Biscoe Tritton, the personal estate being sworn under £120,000. Specific bequests are made of plate; the estate in Kent is devised to his eldest son, the Rev. Robert Biscoe Tritton, to whom are also given all books, manuscripts, letters, and pictures in testator's residence. Pecuniary legacies are given to two relatives, to the executors, and to servants. The residuary real and personal estate is vested in the trustees of the will upon trusts for sale and conversion, and, after payment of legacies to testator's four sons, and to the trustees of his three daughters' marriage settlements, for division between all his sons and daughters in equal shares.

The will and codicil (dated Aug. 29, 1874, and June 27, 1877) of Mr. William Ashmore, late of No. 11, Green Park, Bath, formerly Major of H.M. 16th Regiment, who died on Sept. 22 last, were proved on the 23rd ult. by Mrs. Harriet Ashmore, the widow, the sole executrix, the personal estate being sworn under £30,000. The provisions of the will are in favour of testator's wife and children.

The will and two codicils (dated March 27 and Oct. 3, 1867, and July 27, 1872) of Mr. James Henry, late of Blackdown House, and of Upperford House, Sussex, who died on Oct. 14 last, were proved on the 11th inst. by Mrs. Mary Frances Henry, the widow, and Simon Adam Beck, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £30,000. The only persons interested in the testator's testamentary dispositions are his wife and children.

The will (dated April 30, 1873) of Mr. Edmund Boyle Church, late of The Bank, Highgate, who died on the 24th ult., was proved on the 5th inst. by Edmund Francis Blake Church, William Edward Church, and Charles Grant Church, the sons, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £18,000. The testator gives legacies to his daughters, and the rest of his property between all his children.

The executors of the late Mr. George Moore, of Bow-churchyard, Kensington Palace-gardens, and Whitehall, in the county of Cumberland, have completed their trust by paying the bequests left under that gentleman's will, dated May 21, 1874, amounting in the aggregate to £216,500, the particulars of which were given in this Paper at the time. Of this large sum £94,500 has been left by the testator amongst the various charitable institutions and missionary societies of the metropolis, his native county of Cumberland sharing liberally in the distribution. The private legacies vary in amount from £1000 to £20,000 each. These payments are in excess of a large number of other bequests, varying from £5 5s. to £500, and amounting altogether to £33,000, which were paid over nearly twelve months since to the employés of the firm of Copestake, Moore, Crampton, Hughes, and Co., in rateable proportions according to seniority, and some friends.

The late Mr. James Wood, glassmaker, of Dudley, has made the following bequests:—£1395 5s. 7d. to each of the Home Missionary, Colonial Missionary, and London Missionary Societies, and £697 to each of the following—the British and Foreign Bible Society and the Religious Tract Society. He was a Congregationalist.

Upon the recommendation of Lord Beaconsfield, the Queen has conferred upon the widow of the late Rev. Richard Shilleto, of St. Peter's College, Cambridge, a pension of £150 a year from her Majesty's Civil List, in recognition of his eminent attainments as a Greek scholar.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1877.

Before the present year of Grace disappears behind the last ridge of Time that separates it from 1878, we naturally look back to take note of the main characteristics of its course. It has been a memorable year—memorable, however, for the gloomy shadow cast over the greater part of it by the Russo-Turkish War. It entered upon its career amid mingled hopes and fears. Its dawn was flecked with lights and shadows, in which the former were generally considered prevalent. The least sanguine of men looking thereupon began to anticipate a more hopeful state of things. The Christian Powers of Europe had not only moderated their demands upon Turkey, but, outwardly and visibly at least, had become thoroughly united. The hopes thereby excited were speedily overcast. The ruling caste at Constantinople, stimulated by illusions, the real source of which remains yet unaccounted for, rejected the mild recommendations urged upon them, and the work of the Conference issued in an unexpected conclusion. Thereupon, after a brief interval, Russia declared war. She took upon her to enforce by arms the decision of the Conference—such, at least, was her profession. She mobilised a large portion of her army. She made a convention with Roumania. She assembled her soldiers upon the banks of the Danube. She waited some weeks for the subsidence of the waters with which it was flooded. At length she effected the passage of that river with much less loss of life than even she had anticipated, and obtained a foothold in the Turkish province of Bulgaria. Almost simultaneously, she invaded Armenia, and for a month or two appeared to carry everything her own way. The first wave of victory, both in Asia and in Europe, which threatened to overwhelm the powers of Turkey for resistance, unexpectedly spent its force. In Armenia Mouktar Pasha, in Bulgaria Osman Pasha, obstructed, and, to a certain extent, rolled back the tide of invasion. The Turks, previously negligent, indolent, and incautious, borrowed courage from despair. At one time it seemed that the warlike purpose of Russia would be defeated. We all know the sequel. Kars and Plevna are the names which the present year have imprinted upon our memory in characters not soon to be effaced. We have come to the close of the year before we have any certain prospect of a close of the war. Winter intervenes to diminish, if not to paralyse, military activity on both sides; and whether we are to have another twelvemonth of devastating hostilities in the south-east of Europe, is known only to Him who presides over the movements and destinies of nations.

This war has flung an ever-deepening shadow over the face of Western Europe. Happily, as yet it has not involved the Neutral Powers, but it has occasioned more than one crisis, which threatened a large extension of its area. The uncertainty thus created has, of course, greatly affected the ordinary transactions of the neutral nations. Commerce cannot thrive save in an atmosphere of general confidence. Enterprise declines to embark for a distant voyage when it has nothing to look forward to but an angry sea and a continuance of storms. What the present year might have been but for the Russo-Turkish War it is impossible to say. What it has been none are at a loss to determine. We know not yet what is the full amount of the injury inflicted upon us by the collision in the East. If our trade and commerce have hitherto exhibited appearances better than we might have expected, we know not yet how far the strain which it has had to bear may have tried the substance upon which it pressed. An immediate peace, perhaps, might renew the springs of commercial vitality. As it is, we live from hand to mouth, rather dreading than relying upon the future. We have no certain data upon which to base our expectations of the time that is to come. This, however, is not the only ground upon which we have reason to desire peace. The War which has occupied public attention during so large a proportion of the year makes a very pathetic appeal to the sympathies of our common humanity. It has been savage beyond ordinary precedent. It has been attended by immense loss of life. Want of system on both sides has subjected both armies to sufferings not easily paralleled. Antagonism of faith, of race, and of purpose has done its worst, and has outraged the feelings of observant mankind. We see little, on looking back, but a vast and needless sacrifice both of treasure and of life. The glamour of victory more than ordinarily overhangs masses of pain, brutality, and misery beyond the power of imagination to conceive. What good may come of it time alone will show. But, be it what it may, the price at which it has been purchased must evermore be regarded as exorbitant beyond count.

The Famine in India adds another shade of darkness to the gloomy career of 1877. This has been, no doubt, a dispensation of Divine Providence which England has witnessed chiefly to deplore. The heavens have been as brass in some of the most teeming Provinces of India, and the fruits of the earth have been denied even to the hand of honest industry. There may have been faults in the antecedent Governments of that dependency, which have partly invited, partly aggravated, the dire calamity. There has been, perhaps, a loss of life and an accumulation of misery far greater than that which the War between Russia and Turkey has occasioned. But the unavoidable suffering has called forth both the energy of the Government and the beneficence of the people, in India and in England, which has done much to alleviate this terrible judgment of Heaven. The worst may be now considered as past. It has its lessons, which it may be hoped will be attended to. The event, however, whatever may be its ultimate issue, will serve to darken among future generations the memory of 1877.

Then there has been the Constitutional struggle in France; the policy initiated by M. de Broglie and his colleague, M. de Fourtoul, on May 16; the semi-legal but wholly unconstitutional assault made upon the framework of Government, under President MacMahon, by the men who derived from it their sole political authority; the outrages perpetrated with a view to influence the Elections; the issue of those Elections, notwithstanding, in favour of the Republic; the puerile resistance made by the President to the popular will; the gloomy forebodings which, as a matter of course, it occasioned; the firmness and forbearance of the Republican Party; and, finally, the almost unexpected collapse of this intrigue of a Monarchical coalition against the legitimately expressed determination of the French people. Happily, the present year has witnessed the utter failure of that miserable political plot. Marshal MacMahon has at length submitted to the views of the country. He has chosen a Government responsible to Parliament, and the chief actors of the political conspiracy which had dared to confront the fiat of the Nation have been relegated to private life. France is again light-hearted, has resumed her ordinary peaceful pursuits, and is making active preparation for the Industrial Exhibition of May, 1878.

Such are the main characteristic events of the year now drawing to its close. They have tended to throw a shadow over all its minor features. These have been much as usual. Under common circumstances they would have attracted some notice, though perhaps they would not have signalled in any conspicuous manner the now expiring year. We refrain from summarising the succession of domestic incidents—the accidents, offences, deaths, storms, and other changes—of the twelvemonth past. Less than another week will see it gone. We bid it a solemn farewell. Let us turn once again to the approaching heir of its fortunes; and, in doing so, our first duty and our genuine pleasure is to wish all our readers A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

THE COURT.

The Queen received the United States Minister, Mr. Pierrepont, at an audience on Saturday last at Windsor Castle to deliver his letter of recall; Mr. Welsh also had an audience to present his credentials as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary for the United States of America. Both Ministers were introduced by the Earl of Derby. Her Majesty held a Council, at which were present the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, the Earl of Beaconsfield, the Earl of Derby, and Lord John Manners. General Sir Thomas Myddelton Biddulph was sworn in a member of the Privy Council. The Duke of Richmond and Gordon, the Earl of Beaconsfield, and the Earl of Derby had audiences of the Queen. Princess Louise of Lorne and the Marquis of Lorne arrived at the castle. Lord John Manners dined with her Majesty.

The Queen, Princess Louise, Princess Beatrice, and the Marquis of Lorne attended Divine service on Sunday in the private chapel of the castle. The Rev. C. J. Vaughan, D.D., Master of the Temple, officiated. Princess Christian visited her Majesty. Mr. Theodore Martin and Mrs. Martin arrived at the castle and left the next day.

Prince and Princess Christian, with their children, visited the Queen on Christmas Eve. General the Right Hon. Sir T. M. Biddulph dined with her Majesty.

On Christmas Day, the Queen, Princess Louise of Lorne, Princess Beatrice, and the Marquis of Lorne attended Divine service in the private chapel. The holy communion was administered by the Dean of Windsor, assisted by the Rev. W. G. Edwards, Minor Canon of St. George's chapel. Prince and Princess Christian dined with her Majesty.

The Earl of Beaconsfield, accompanied by Mr. Montagu Corry, his private secretary, arrived at Windsor Castle on Wednesday evening, and had an audience with her Majesty. The Premier dined and slept at the palace, and left Windsor on the following morning.

The Queen, with the members of the Royal family, has walked and driven out daily. The Hon. Mrs. Wellesley and Madame and Miss Van de Weyer have dined with her Majesty.

The Queen has signified her intention of conferring on Lord Lytton, her Majesty's Viceroy and Governor-General of India, the honour of the Grand Cross of the Civil Division of the Order of the Bath.

The Hon. Mary Pitt has succeeded the Hon. Harriet Phipps as Maid of Honour in Waiting to the Queen. The Hon. Horatia Stopford has left the castle.

THE QUEEN'S BOUNTY.

Her Majesty's Royal bounty to the poor of the metropolis and its environs, and also to others in certain county districts who had been recommended by the resident clergy, was distributed at the Almonry Office, Whitehall, on Friday week and Saturday last, and continued on Christmas Eve. The number of individuals relieved in the sums of 5s. and 13s. each exceeded in the aggregate 1250. The ages of the recipients varied for the most part from sixty to ninety-five years. The candidates were selected by the Hon. and Very Rev. the Dean of Windsor, Lord High Almoner, and the Rev. Ernest R. Wilberforce, Sub-Almoner, assisted by Mr. John Hanby, Secretary and Yeoman of the Royal Almonry in Ordinary.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Princess of Wales, accompanied by her sons, Princes Albert Victor and George, arrived at Sandringham House on Saturday last from London. The Prince of Wales arrived from Dordlington. On Christmas Eve supplies of beef were distributed to the people engaged on the Sandringham estate. The recipients numbered 190. The Prince and his sons were present at the distribution.

Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein visited Bournemouth last week, and dined at Frontinell Lodge with Lord and Lady Henry Scott. They returned to Cumberland Lodge last Saturday from Somerley, Ringwood.

The Duke of Cambridge caused to be distributed on Christmas Eve winter clothing, blankets, &c., to the deserving labourers and poor on his estate at Combe.

The Duke of Teck dined with Mr. and Miss Lever at their residence, St. George's-square, on Saturday last.

The marriage of the Hon. Richard Anthony Nugent, youngest son of the Earl of Westmeath, to Theresa Henrietta, elder daughter of Mr. Richard Gradwell, of Dowth Hall, in the county of Meath, and Carlanstown, in the county of Westmeath, was celebrated on the 20th inst., at St. Mary's Church, Haddington-road, Dublin, by the Rev. D. Mulcahy. The déjeuner was given at Tullamaine, the residence of Sir Bernard and Lady Burke, the latter being the aunt of the bride. The bride wore a white satin dress trimmed with Carrickmacross point. The bridesmaids, six in number, wore white cashmere, trimmed with sky blue and white, and Gainsborough hats. Sir John Burke, Bart., of Marble Hill, was best man. After breakfast the newly-married couple left for Rome. The presents were handsome and numerous.

THE MEETING OF PARLIAMENT.

A supplement to the London Gazette, published last Saturday, contains the following notice:—

"By the Queen.—A Proclamation.—Victoria, R.—Whereas our Parliament stands prorogued to Thursday, the 17th day of January next, we, by and with the advice of our Privy Council, hereby issue our Royal Proclamation, and publish and declare our Royal will and pleasure that the said Parliament shall, on the said Thursday, the 17th day of January, 1878, assemble and be held for the dispatch of divers urgent and important affairs: and the lords spiritual and temporal, and the knights, citizens, and burgesses, and the commissioners for shires and boroughs of the House of Commons are hereby required and commanded to give their attendance accordingly at Westminster on the said Thursday, the 17th day of January, 1878.—Given at our Court at Windsor this 22nd day of December, in the year of our Lord 1877, and in the forty-first year of our reign.—God save the Queen."

We understand that the Address in answer to the Speech from the Throne will be moved in the House of Commons by the Hon. Wilbraham Egerton, member for Mid-Cheshire, and seconded by Mr. Robert Tennant, member for Leeds.

The Liverpool Chamber of Commerce has received an official notification from the Foreign Office that, under an arrangement come to between the German and the Austro-Hungarian Governments, the treaty of commerce concluded between the Zollverein and Austria on March 9, 1868, remains in force till the end of June next year.

A gift with a curious condition attached to it has been at last applied to its purpose by the Archbishop of Dublin. "An English Curate" had deposited with Dr. French a sum of £1000, to be paid over to the Irish Church Sustentation Fund whenever certain dangers which he saw threatening were fairly surmounted. This is understood to have referred to the question of revision, and the Archbishop considers this so far at least that he was warranted in handing over the amount.

The Extra Supplement.

"LE COUCHER."

"Yes, Baby, it is time for bed!"
So, having been well washed and fed,
Then kissed and dandled and caressed,
And with fond baby-talk addressed,
The mother chants a simple rhyme,
To which her babe awhile keeps time,
Each moment fainter his refrain,
Till sleep's sweet opiate lulls his brain.

1.
O rest thee, Baby, rest!
Rocked on thy mother's breast
No harm shall thee bested;
Enwrapped in slumber deep,
Good angels then will keep
Their vigil round thy bed.

2.
O rest thee, Baby, rest!
No wee bird in its nest
Is half so safe as thou.
Then why that start of fear?
And why that sudden tear?—
Thine eyes wide-open now.

3.
O rest thee, Baby, rest!
But hush! a gentler ditty, lest
I wake thee, darling boy;
Thine eyelids droop, they close—
Thou sinkest in repose—
My pride, my life, my joy!

Thus crooning many a low sweet song
The mother holds her baby long;
Then, moving with a noiseless tread,
She takes him to his little bed,
And hangs o'er him with tender pride;
Anon, sort-gliding from his side,
She goes about her household ways
With heart brimful of prayer and praise.—L.

"THE ANGELS' PRAYER."

On first thought it might seem that the artist has in this picture been injudicious in his choice of subject, seeing that the use of prayer is nowadays pooh-poohed by some of our scientific men—happily, only by a few, however—and also because praise, rather than prayer, is generally supposed to be the chief employment of angels. It is beyond the scope of these columns to treat of the former theme—how "prayer moves the hand that moves the world;" but it may be said, in passing, that there are marvels in the natural world which tend to make the misnamed supernatural seemingly less marvellous. Take, for examples, the fact of a message flashed with the speed of light across the Atlantic, being instantly answered by a kindred flash; and the perhaps still greater suggestiveness of the telephone, lisping only in baby stammerings as yet. Confining oneself, however, to the matter of the angels, it will be found that the artist is not in fault; or, if he be, that at least he errs in goodly company. "Are they not all ministering angels?" How universal this belief is need hardly be insisted on. There is abundant proof of it, from the line in the nursery hymn—"Four angels guard our bed," to the sublime passage of Milton beginning

A thousand liveried angels lackey her,
Driving far off each taint of sin and guilt.

Where is the difficulty, then, of supposing that these angels are the appointed guardians of two mortals going through a great tribulation? At any rate, poets having conceived of guardian angels, and popular opinion having fully endorsed their view, the painter may surely follow suit; and, granting the probability of their being engaged in this duty, there is surely obvious need for the most earnest beseechings on their part as they keep watch and ward over us. Without pursuing the matter further, we conclude with a stanza from Spenser:—

How oft do they their silver bowers leave,
To come to succour us that succour want.
How oft do they with golden pinions cleave
The fitting skies like flying pursuivants,
Against foul fiends to aid us militant.
They for us fight, they watch, and duly ward,
And their bright squadrons round about us plant;
And all for love, and nothing for reward:
O why should heavenly God to man have such regard!

RETURNING FROM CHRISTMAS FAIR, SAXONY.

It is well known that Germany is ahead of other countries in its celebration of Christmas, whether under the name of Weihnachten or Christfest or any other; and it is also well known that Saxony excels in the manufacture of toys. And both these facts are called forcibly to mind in our Illustration. There is authority, moreover, for stating that Christmas, though everywhere in Germany it is kept with zeal, is kept differently in different districts. The Illustration shows one aspect of the festival as it is celebrated in Saxony, where, no less than in other parts of Germany, it is evidently, as the birth-day of the Holy Child should be, the feast of the children par excellence. Nobody can look at the Illustration and fail to see that the small child considers, and is expected to consider, that the whole load of "fairings," except, perhaps, the boots, was collected with a special eye to her approval and gratification. Some persons may think that the dog believes the whole proceedings to have been arranged on his account, and a lively imagination may even claim to detect dog's-meat upon the string in the left hand of the "hausvater;" but it cannot be confidently asserted here that dogs in Saxony, any more than elsewhere, play so very prominent a part in the festivities of Christmas; and it may be more confidently predicted that, should that dog take any liberties with what hangs by that string, he would taste the flavour of the stick which depends from the wrist of the "hausvater."

Owing, probably, to the fact that the two sons of the Prince of Wales are amongst the cadets on board her Majesty's training-ship for naval officers—the Britannia, stationed at Dartmouth—special interest was manifested in the half-yearly distribution of prizes, which took place on the 20th inst., when the awards of the final examination were presented to the successful cadets by Sir Massey Lopes, Bart., M.P., Civil Lord of the Admiralty. In the course of his address the hon. gentleman remarked upon the necessity of naval officers receiving a higher scientific knowledge, and said the nation's prosperity and security were solely dependent upon our naval supremacy. Unless England maintained her supremacy on the seas her position as an European Power became a precarious one.

THE CHURCH.

FitzHerbert, Reginald Henry Castle; Curate of Huch Beauchamp.
Gwynings, George James; Assistant-Inspector of Schools.
Humphreys, Henry James; Vicar of Radey, Glamorganshire.
Jackson, Nathan, Vicar of Over, Cheshire; Vicar of Easingwold, Yorkshire.
Murray, Richard Paget; Curate of Baltonsborough.
Owen, Edward; Vicar of Farnham.
Phillips, H. F.; Vicar of St. Margaret's, Rochester.
Prescott de Coetlogon, C.; Rector of Stoke-Talmage, Oxon.
Russell, Richard N.; Honorary Canon of Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford.
Webb, R. B.; Incumbent of Clare, &c., South Australia.
Webber, William Alexander; Rector of Runnington.
Wheeler, Joseph Bishop; Assistant Chaplain, Convict Prison, Portland.
Whitmarsh, Edgar Dyke; Vicar of Sandford-on-Thames, Oxon.
William, R. Edgar; Curate of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields.

A school chapel, dedicated to St. Agatha, in the parish of St. Peter, St. George-in-the-East, was opened on St. Thomas's Day, by license from the Bishop of London.

The Bishop of St. Albans has reopened the parish church of St. Nicholas, Witham, after an efficient restoration, not merely of the interior, but of the tower and bells.

On the 21st inst., being St. Thomas's Day, Dr. French and Dr. Titcomb were consecrated at Westminster Abbey Bishops of the new dioceses of Lahore and Rangoon, which have been formed out of the diocese of Calcutta. At the same time and place, Archdeacon Trollope was consecrated to succeed Bishop Mackenzie as Suffragan-Bishop of Nottingham.

A large number of clergymen and county gentry assembled at Nottingham on the 21st inst. for the purpose of presenting a testimonial, in the shape of an illuminated address, a gold signet ring, and £1500 (which has been invested), to Dr. Mackenzie, who has just resigned the office of Suffragan-Bishop of Nottingham. Mr. Foljambe, M.P., made the presentation.

Lord Shaftesbury has announced to the Archbishop of Canterbury his withdrawal from the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, on account of a publication entitled a "Manual of Geology," which, in his Lordship's opinion, is in conflict with the Mosaic narrative. His Lordship expresses "active distrust" of the society's operations, "which at one time lead the people to Romanism and at another to infidelity."

The window erected by the Dean of Westminster in memory of Lady Augusta Stanley, over her grave in Henry VII.'s Chapel, has been unveiled. In the upper compartment the subjects are taken from events in the history of the Bruce family; and in the lower compartment the subjects represent Lady Augusta in the six acts of mercy. The window was executed by Messrs. Clayton and Bell.

On the 20th inst. the Bishop of Manchester consecrated a new church at Banktop, Blackburn, which has been built by subscription, and is capable of accommodating 702 persons, 436 sittings being free. It has been endowed by the Vicar of Blackburn out of the revenues of the vicarage with the annual sum of £25, and the patronage will be in five trustees. The cost of the structure is £6700. A magnificent and costly reredos has been put up in the chancel, at the expense of Mr. Joseph Harrison, Galligraives Hall.

A testimonial was presented on the 20th to Canon Garbett, on his retirement from the incumbency of Christ Church, Surbiton-hill. In the course of the proceedings Mr. Hancock, the parishioners' churchwarden, stated that during the fourteen years Mr. Garbett had been with them the church had been thrice enlarged and improved, and accommodation had thus been raised from 800 to 1400 sittings. Handsome schools for 400 children had also been built. The testimonial consisted of a silver vase, a pair of candlesticks, a purse containing £510, and an illuminated address with the names of the subscribers, numbering 208. The sums subscribed varied from £30 to 3d. At the same time, a gold watch and chain and an address were also presented to Mrs. Garbett by the teachers in the Sunday-schools.

The new church dedicated to Saint Mary, erected on a pleasant slope in the rapidly rising district of Burry Port, in Carmarthenshire, was opened for Divine service on Sunday, the 9th inst. It consists of a chancel, nave, and two aisles, with tower and spire; is of the Early English style, from plans by Messrs. Wilson, Wilcox, and Wilson, of Bath; and will accommodate about 600 persons. This handsome building, which has cost between £6000 and £7000, is the free gift of the Messrs. Elkington (five brothers), of Burry Port and Birmingham; and of so munificent a character is the gift that even the organ, coloured east window, with the whole of the fittings, furniture, and books, have been provided by the same family. It has been erected in memory of Mr. George Richard Elkington, and Sarah Auster, his wife, the parents of the donors. This respected gentleman was founder of the famous firm of electro-plate makers of that name at Birmingham, and was also possessed of extensive copper and coal works at Burry Port, which are now owned by his sons.

WOOD-CARVER OF SIMLA.

Simla is best known to most Europeans as a place of refuge from the intolerable heat of the Indian plains, and as a resort where the surroundings have been Anglicised to the greatest possible extent. It is not thither, one would say, that an Englishman would go in search of wood-carving; but he might, nevertheless, as the Illustration suggests, go farther and fare worse. Indeed, our fellow-subjects in Hindustan are by no means deficient in artistic design and execution. It is in their tools, principally, that they are at a disadvantage; and the wonder is that they can do so well with such sorry appliances. There are few of us who have not had opportunities of examining and admiring Indian workmanship, whether in the case of the celebrated chains from Trichinopoly, or of chessmen, or of curious boxes made of various woods; and some of us may possess specimens of the skill with which the wood-carver of Simla plies his vocation. He has, at any rate, wood enough and to spare in his neighbourhood; he has the magnificent deodar or Himalayan cedar, the pine, the oak, and the rhododendron. He may seem, in the picture, to set about his work in a style which would not recommend itself to the European wood-carver; and he may appear to be handling an implement such as is used in this country for the game of trap, bat, and ball; but he contrives nevertheless to turn out some good work.

An Order in Council has been published in which the counties of Norfolk, Suffolk, Huntingdon, Cambridge, a part of Essex, and the city of Norwich are united for the purposes of a winter assize, which is to be held at Chesterton, in Cambridgeshire.

A WOOD CARVER OF SIMLA.

RETURNING FROM THE CHRISTMAS FAIR, SAXONY.

GOING TO A CHRISTMAS PARTY A LONG TIME AGO.

THE WAR.

There has been a comparative lull in the Russo-Turkish War. In European Turkey, since the fall of Plevna (described as a chanel-house by Mr. MacGahan in the Daily News), the bear has been gathering himself up for a fresh spring, whilst Suleiman Pasha has made a prompt strategic movement to Constantinople, via Varna and the Black Sea, taking with him 10,000 men, in order to make preparations at Adrianople and south of the Balkans for the reception of the Russians. On this point the well-informed Vienna Correspondent of the Times telegraphed the following information on Christmas Day:—

It seems that the troops who came with Suleiman Pasha from Varna to Constantinople are but the first detachment from the Quadrilateral, and that most, if not all the forces to be sent thence into Roumelia are to follow by the same route, which is thought quicker and easier than that across the Balkans. The total number of men expected from north the hills is reckoned at between 60,000 and 70,000 men, destined to arrive at Adrianople in the first week of January.

In Bucharest it is believed that the head-quarters of the Grand Duke Nicholas will be transferred from Bogot to Selvi. This place is much nearer Timova and Gabrova, on the road to the Shipka, than Etropol and Orhanié; and it would therefore seem as if the main operations are to be carried out in the former direction. The troops under Skobelev seem destined to maintain the connection between the Shipka forces and those operating on the Etropol Balkans. This leader, it may be remembered, was supposed to have gone to Lovatz with one division, and to-day the news comes that he has already passed thence, and, with the Sixteenth Division, two regiments of cavalry, and half a brigade of artillery, occupied Trojan, near the pass of the same name leading down to the valley of the Giopsa, and along it to Philippopolis. Like the Tundja Valley, that of the Giopsa is one of those long, open depressions running parallel to the main chain of the Balkans. All these distributions of troops would seem to show that the Russians may be expected to advance in three columns, ultimately uniting at some point in the Maritza Valley. The Roumanian head-quarters are to return to Bucharest, and Prince Charles will only from time to time go to inspect the army in Bulgaria.

The Czarewitch's army has crossed the Lom, and the left wing is reported to have arrived in front of Rustchuk, which is to be invested by General Todleben. General Zimmermann meantime is to proceed with the siege of Silistria; but he must have been inconvenienced somewhat by the drifting ice on the Danube breaking the bridge at Braila, and so interrupting his communications. In the Balkans there has been desultory firing, shots having been exchanged between the Turkish and Russian redoubts in the Shipka Pass, and Baker Pasha having pushed forward his left flank and occupied more advantageous ground at Kamarli, where there has been a considerable arrival of Turkish reinforcements.

The Servians have opened their campaign with some slight success. On the 19th inst. they captured the Turkish works which protected the Stretchnia bridge, and destroyed the bridge, thus cutting off the Turkish communications between Nisch and the town of Leskovatz, on the road to Prischina. Babina-Glava, north of Nisch, has also been taken by a turning movement, and occupied by the Servians. According to official intelligence received at Belgrade, the Servians have carried the St. Nicholas Pass by assault. The losses on each side were probably considerable. The Serbian Javor detachment has captured Kladnitsa, which the Turks had intrenched. The troops under the command of Generals Lestijanin and Benitzki have occupied Leskovatz and Kurshumlia, where they found a great number of cattle and an abundance of provisions; it is thus unnecessary to send similar supplies from Servia Proper.

On Monday last the Servians captured Ak Palanka, with the surrounding fortifications, after eight hours' fighting. Three Krupp guns and a large quantity of ammunition and provisions were also captured. The Serbian losses are said to have been insignificant. On the same day Prince Milan inspected the Serbian army which is besieging Nisch, and the bombardment of that place was commenced in his presence. Horvatovich has effected a junction with the Russians near St. Nicholas. Fighting is reported to have begun near Pirot. The Porte, on its side, is said to be seriously thinking of proclaiming the deposition of Prince Milan and of the Obrenovich family, having only delayed doing so hitherto on friendly advice from various quarters, which pointed out that the probable consequences of such a step would be but a fresh complication, as Servia was likely to reply by a declaration of her independence.

The siege of Erzeroum may be begun by the time these lines are read. Baron Reuter's agent telegraphed therefrom on Christmas Day:—"The Russian lines have been pushed forward, and Erzeroum is almost invested by a force of cavalry 1000 strong. Russian infantry is massed in the north of the plain, and the bombardment of the town and interruption of telegraphic communication are imminent. The hospitals can hold only 350 wounded, and 950 of the wounded have been sent to their own houses. An English ambulance has arrived, and is working with great activity. The snow is very deep, and the cold is intense. Moukhtar Pasha is making every preparation to defend the town with energy, and both the garrison and inhabitants are resolute." Towards Batoum a Russian division sent northwards from Olti has captured Ardanch, and has thus severed the communication by land on the north-east between Derrish Pasha, who commands at Batoum, and the garrison of Erzeroum.

A telegram has been dispatched by the Porte to its representatives abroad complaining that 2000 of the Turkish wounded at Kars have been sent from that place to Erzeroum, and that out of this number one half succumbed to cold and fatigue, and the other half is in the most lamentable condition. This fact, the Porte says, is a violation of the laws of humanity and an infringement of the Geneva Convention. A Russian despatch from Bogot acknowledges that the Turkish prisoners taken at Plevna are dying with cold, and that it is impossible to afford them any aid. The total number taken at Plevna was 44,000, exclusive of the wounded; 3600 prisoners remained in the town.

The Sultan held a review of fifty-one battalions of infantry, with two batteries of artillery and two cavalry squadrons, together with a number of firemen, at Constantinople, last Saturday. Great enthusiasm was displayed by the soldiers; and the Sultan saluted them, told them that a portion of their number would shortly leave for the seat of war, and concluded by asking God to second his efforts and grant victory to the Turkish arms. Mehmet Ali, who has justified himself before a court-martial, is to have the command of an army especially formed to defend the immediate approaches to the capital of the Sultan.

On Saturday morning last the Czar returned to St. Petersburg. The Daily News Special Correspondent in that city sends by telegraph full details of the reception, and says that his Majesty was welcomed back by the people with great enthusiasm. At the terminus an address was presented to him by the Mayor, in the name of the Town Council. He then proceeded in a sledge, accompanied by his son, the Grand Duke Sergius, to the Kasan Cathedral. At the door of that edifice he was received by the clergy, headed by the Metropolitan, and conducted to the altar. A short religious service was then celebrated, and his Majesty passed out into the street again, the crowd almost blocking up the path in their eagerness to get near him. From the Kasan Cathedral he proceeded to the Winter Palace. There the cheering was continued so long and so persistently that he had to appear again and again at the window in order to gratify the people. On Monday (the occasion being the commemorative fête of Alexander I.) there was a parade of the troops in the grounds of the Winter Palace of St. Petersburg. In addressing the men the Czar said that if it became necessary for them to take part in the war, he was sure they would do their duty honourably and gloriously. In receiving afterwards the delegates of the commercial community, his Majesty expressed a hope that the war would happily terminate. On Wednesday the Czar held another review of the troops of the district of St. Petersburg, consisting of twenty-six battalions of infantry, twenty-five squadrons of cavalry, and forty-two pieces of artillery.

RAILWAY TRAVELLING IN RUSSIA.

There might be, perhaps, some slight exaggeration in maintaining that the wanderer abroad does not know what real comfort is until he travels by railway in Russia; since, throughout Germany and Austria railway passengers are amply provided with comforts, and, on many of the lines, with luxuries. It is, nevertheless, undeniable that a first-class Russian railway carriage is about fifty per cent more habitable than an English railway compartment; at least thirty per cent better than a French, and twenty per cent better than a Belgian one. American railway cars it would be unjust to take as a standard of comparison. They are either gorgeously decorated, and abundantly provided with every needful requisite, as in the "Palace Cars" of the Pacific Line; or they are, vchicularly considered, the vilest of the vile—dirty, ill appointed, "ramshackle," and barely weather tight. Externally, a Russian car is certainly not handsome to look at; indeed, the cars on the Warsaw and Wilna line bear an ominously close resemblance to the "Black Maria," or police van, supposing that a criminal caravan to be multiplied by twenty, to be drawn by a locomotive instead of a pair of horses, and to stand desperately in need of repainting. Inside, however, everything wears a very different aspect. The external embellishments may not be so brilliant nor so tasteful as those of the Pullman cars on our English lines; still the first-class railway carriage in Russia is sure to be roomy, handsomely furnished, and, in winter, thoroughly warmed. There is, indeed, a stove at each end of the car, and the long-bearded satellites of the conductor seem to be perpetually stoking these furnaces with fresh logs of wood. The doors and windows being all double and all hermetically sealed, and the means of ventilation non-apparent—if they be not wholly absent—novices in Russian travelling are apt to experience, especially during the night time, a sensation akin to that of being stifled; and the impression of imminent suffocation is materially enhanced when the traveller is imprudent enough to lie down to rest, wrapped in his fur schoub, and retaining his kalpak or cap of sable marten, or astrakhan, or beaver, and his lamb's-wool-lined boots. He should undress almost entirely; and then there will be no risk of having the nightmare and dreaming that he is Othello, and that Desdemona, taking time by the forelock, is smothering him with one of the carriage cushions to obviate the occurrence of any little accident of an analogous nature to herself. Some of the Russian railway cars are arranged on the old-fashioned American system (prevalent, too, in Switzerland) of parallel rows of reversible seats, with an aisle or gangway running between, and a door at each end; otherwise (as on the St. Petersburg and Moscow line) they are fitted up on the "drawing-room car" principle, with velvet covered couches, "contrived a double debt to pay:"—a lounge by day, but susceptible of being prolonged to a very comfortable couch bed at night. On other lines the compartments are divided into so many private cabins or state rooms, each holding four persons, and containing seats that can be turned into beds, with a public parlour fitted for eight or ten travellers, and equally comfortable at each extremity. Refreshment cars have not yet been introduced on the Russian railways; but the buffets throughout the empire, and in Poland especially, are (in times of peace, at least) abundantly supplied with edibles and potables, at very moderate prices. The service is à la carte, and the traveller ignorant of the language is assisted in his study of the bill of fare by little flags stuck in each joint or entrée, and bearing in plain figures the price of each particular dish:—say fifty copecks—one shilling and threepence—thirty-five, twenty copecks, and so on. Plenty of time is given for refreshment; and a traveller may dine plentifully and succulently, with a glass of Moscow beer or a cup of coffee, and a cigarette afterwards, for a rouble—say two and sixpence. Smoking is universal in the compartments and in the buffets; but, as the Russian ladies are as fond of the Indian weed as the Turkish ladies themselves are, smoking on Russian railways gives rise to no indignant protests from Paterfamilias in the columns of the Golose or the Nori Vremya. The examination of baggage at the frontier custom-houses is about as rigorous as it is in Spain; but just as it is the case in the Peninsula, the traveller may save himself from annoyance at the douane by judiciously and undemonstratively feeling the Custom House officers. Finally, if he will only take the trouble to have his passport properly viséd before he enters Russia and before he quits St. Petersburg or Moscow for the remote interior, the gendarmes will not in any way molest the foreigner. This observation applies obviously to Russian travelling prior to the war. The case by this time may have been altered, and things in general, from railway travelling downwards, may not be at present half so comfortable as they were before. War has a tendency to disorganise and to upset everything. Sir John Chester, in "Barnaby Rudge," characteristically remarked that a murder in a house always led to a distressing amount of running up and down stairs. War is only murder writ "large;" and one of the first subsidiary results of war is to smash all the crockery, put the fires out, bring about there being "something the matter with the gas," delay the delivery of letters and newspapers, and stop our supplies of milk and eggs. It is a domestic nuisance as well as a public shame and curse.

At the annual meeting on Wednesday of the Glasgow National Security Savings Bank, the largest in Great Britain, it was reported that the total funds amounted to £2,954,000, belonging to 103,000 depositors, more than half of whom have deposits under £10. The transactions last year were nearly half a million. Many penny banks connected with board schools do business with the bank.

According to the returns obtained by the Royal Irish Constabulary and the Dublin Metropolitan Police, who acted as enumerators at the several Irish seaports, the number of emigrants who left the ports of Ireland during the quarter ended Sept. 30 last amounted to 11,659—6235 males and 5424 females—being 1158 more than during the corresponding quarter of 1876, but 4379 under the average in the third quarter of the last ten years. The total of emigrants from Ireland during the first nine months of this year was 30,604, being little more than one half of the average for the corresponding period of the last ten years, which was 58,641, the numbers varying from 79,572 in the first nine months of 1873, to 31,105 in the corresponding portion of last year.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Marshal MacMahon went on Saturday last to see how the works for the Exhibition of next year were progressing. He was much pleased with what he saw, and, on being introduced to the foreign commissioners, he thanked them for their zeal and perseverance, especially complimenting Mr. Cunliffe Owen on the advanced state of the English section.

The sessions of the Councils-General were opened yesterday week throughout France. M. Bardoux, Minister of Public Instruction, who is the President of the Council-General of Puy-de-Dôme, in his speech said that the crisis had been solved by the patriotism of the President of the Republic. He added that the aim of the Parliamentary Republic which had been established was to pacify, to appease, and to illustrate the principles of legality and mutual respect. Its chief care was to afford education to all, so that they might become hard-working, courageous men, with a full understanding of their duties.

M. Dufaure has issued two circulars to the procurators-general explanatory of his telegraphic instructions to discontinue the prosecutions for press and political offences. These documents show the intention of the new Government to adopt a thoroughly Liberal and at the same time conciliatory policy.

The Journal Officiel publishes a decree fixing the elections for the renewal of the municipal councils for Jan. 6. M. de Marcère, Minister of the Interior, has addressed a circular to the Prefects in which he gives them instructions with regard to the line of conduct they are to pursue with reference to the municipal elections, and ordering them to reinstate the municipalities which have been dismissed since May 16.

M. Bardoux, Minister of Public Instruction, has addressed to the Prefects a note, which has been approved by the Council of Ministers, recommending that all schoolmasters who have been dismissed since May 16 for political causes should be reinstated in their posts.

All prosecutions of booksellers, newsvenders, and hawkers of printed matter, instituted since May 16, have been adjourned sine die.

M. Lepère, Vice-President of the Chamber, who has long been a leading member of the Republican party, has accepted the post of Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department.

Don Carlos has been requested by the Government to leave France. He started for the frontier on Thursday morning.

ITALY.

The following Cabinet has been proposed to the King:—Depretis, for Foreign Affairs and President; Crispi, Minister of the Interior; Magliano, Finance; Villa, Public Instruction; Perez, Public Works; Brin, Marine; Mancini, Grace and Justice; Mezzacapo, War. The Ministry of Agriculture and Commerce has been suppressed, and a new office of Treasury created, but not yet filled.

The Pope yesterday week received several Cardinals in his bed-room and conversed cheerfully with them for about half an hour. Cardinal Manning arrived at Rome on Monday.

HOLLAND.

The Budget for 1878, as voted by both Chambers, shows a deficit of 15,000,000 fl. The Government proposes, for covering this deficit and those of the preceding years, to contract a loan of from forty to fifty millions of florins. The cause of these deficits is that the Government derives no longer any revenue from India.

The Second Chamber, by 45 to 31, has adopted the bill revising the electoral list and creating six additional seats.

GERMANY.

The Emperor William and the Princes of the Royal family attended Divine service on Sunday in the Russian Embassy Chapel at Berlin, where a Te Deum was sung to celebrate the one-hundredth anniversary of the birth of the Czar Alexander I.

At the closing meeting of the Provincial Committee of Alsace-Lorraine last Saturday a resolution was passed expressing a wish that the country should receive its own constitution as a Federal State, with Strasburg as the seat of Government.

GREECE.

M. Coumoundouros has submitted bills to the Chamber of Deputies for the nomination of officer for the National Guard Mobile and for immediately calling out the reserve of the regular army.

THE CAPE COLONIES.

There has been more fighting in South Africa. A Reuter's telegram from Plymouth summarising the news from Cape Town to the 4th inst., says:—"On the 2nd inst. 800 Galekas attacked a night patrol of 125 volunteers and twenty-two police near Theka. The Galekas were defeated with a loss of eighty men. Mr. Barron, of the Algoa Bay Volunteers, was killed, and seven men were wounded. McKinnon, the petty chief under Krelli, who had taken refuge in the Gaika country, has paid a small portion of the fine imposed upon him. Uneasiness exists respecting the Galekas. Sandilli professes complete loyalty, but it is rumoured that he is raising a war-cry in Sambuland. It is officially denied that the Zulu boundary question is causing anxiety in Natal.

A special telegram to the Times says that the Galekas, who began the fight on the 2nd, were 1000 in number, and that the battle lasted two hours. The same despatch says:—"A mass meeting has been held at King William's Town, declaring life and property insecure, and calling upon the Government to summon a special Session of Parliament for the proper organisation of defence. All the leading men of the town, including Messrs. Dyer, Davis, Byrne, Irvine, Baker, Dick, Fuller, and Gould, were present."

AMERICA.

On the 21st inst. the Union League Club at New York gave General Hayes a brilliant reception. Next day the President opened a Museum of Natural History in the same city, and attended the New England banquet in the evening. Mr. Evarts was present and made a speech, in which he strongly advocated the maintenance of public peace and public faith.

The leading merchants and bankers of Chicago have addressed a petition to the President against the remonetisation of silver and the repeal of the Resumption Act.

A fire broke out on the 20th inst. at Greenfield's Confectionery Works, situated at the corner of Barclay-street and College-place, New York. It was caused by the explosion of a boiler, which blew out the front of the building. Flames instantly broke out and spread rapidly. Two hundred people, mostly boys and girls, were working in the upper floors of the building, and many of them jumped from the windows or escaped by gaining the adjoining roof. Thirty injured persons were taken to the hospital. Twelve persons are supposed to have perished.

It is officially announced at New York that the Mexican troops have amicably joined the United States soldiers in the pursuit of the marauding Indians into Mexico.

The Dominion Parliament has been summoned to meet for the dispatch of business on Jan. 15.

INDIA.

The Legislative Council had under its consideration at its last meeting an important measure called the Indian Arms Bill. Its object (as stated by the Calcutta correspondent of the Times in his weekly telegram) is to extend to all districts, without exception, a provision for making the possession of arms illegal without a license, and to make the sale of arms to persons not holding such license a criminal offence. It was stated in the course of the discussion of the bill that the import trade in cheap arms and ammunition had grown to an unwholesome extent, and that far larger quantities were imported than were required for legitimate purposes. Cheap arms were bought and sold to an extent quite incompatible with the maintenance of peace and good government. In four years 100,000,000 percussion caps had been imported into Calcutta, of which not more than 14,000,000 were legally re-exported. An application had lately been made by a single firm for permission to import seven lakhs of caps and 14,000 lbs. of powder monthly, an amount which could not possibly represent any legitimate demand. The Military Member called the attention of the Government to the fact that an admirable percussion-cap manufactory existed in a city near one of our military stations, which turned out caps almost equal to those supplied to our own troops, and he suggested that the Council should at the same time deal with the Indian manufacture of arms and ammunition.

A telegram from the same correspondent states that active hostilities against the Jawahies have for the present been suspended. They are stated still to maintain an attitude of defiance. The general impression prevails that they will not accept the terms imposed by Government, except under extreme pressure. It is believed, therefore, that it will be necessary to adopt further active military measures in order to compel an unqualified submission. The Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab was to have visited the Shergasha ridge and General Ross's positions, and finally to march through the Kohat Pass with the whole camp. Both expeditions have been managed with the greatest possible care and prudence, and, save in one particular, not a single hitch has occurred. This exception, however, is one of very grave importance. The commissariat arrangements are said to have been found defective.

In the Legislative Council on Thursday Sir James Strachey made a statement of the financial measures proposed by Government to meet the famine charges. We have by telegram an outline of the financial statement, as follows:—

He showed that famines not being exceptional calamities, provision must be made for prevention and relief out of ordinary revenues, not by borrowing. The famine expenditure during the last five years amounted to £16,000,000. The cost of the recent famine was £9,250,000. Such a period of extreme calamity Sir James Strachey believed to be exceptional, but he estimated the average annual amount to be provided on account of famine relief as not less than £1,500,000, omitting famine and reproductive works. Before the recent famine the revenue and expenditure were in equilibrium, with no margin for contingencies. This margin must be at least £500,000, and therefore the total annual improvement required became £2,000,000. The total annual civil expenditure during the last seven years had been reduced by £1,500,000, and further large reductions were impossible. The annual military charges, chiefly in home accounts, have increased by £1,000,000 during the last three years. This matter, Sir James Strachey points out, is beyond the power of the Government of India to deal with, but earnest hopes are expressed that further additions to home charges will not be imposed on India.

Recent measures of decentralisation, continues the statement, relieve the Imperial Treasury without fresh taxation by an amount of £400,000 yearly. There remains to be provided for famine charges £1,100,000, of which £800,000 was provided in March last by fresh taxation, chiefly in Lower Bengal. An additional sum of £300,000 is now required, and this will be obtained partly from a license tax on trades throughout India, the maximum fee not exceeding £1 on any individual or company, and partly by a corresponding addition to the local rates on land in Northern India, not exceeding one per cent on the rental. Thus the new taxation in Northern India will, as nearly as possible, fall equally both on the agricultural and commercial classes. The new taxes will be imposed and collected provincially. Each province, while primarily responsible for meeting its own wants, will contribute towards the relief of other provinces actually attacked by famine, and the system of mutual assistance will thus be established. No fresh taxation on land will be imposed in Madras or Bombay. Sir James Strachey proceeds to state that it is the intention of the Government to equalise and generally reduce the salt duties throughout India and abolish the inland customs lines at an early date. The full reduction of the present Bengal rates to those of Madras and Bombay being financially impossible, an increase in the latter provinces is unavoidable. An ultimate uniform rate is proposed throughout India of 2r. 8s. per maund, and the Madras and Bombay duty is now increased to this amount. The duty in Northern India is decreased by 4 annas per maund, leaving it 2r. 12s. per maund, and in Lower Bengal by 2 annas per maund, leaving it 2r. 12s. per maund.

While the duty is thus increased for 47 millions of people, it will be reduced for 180 millions. The Governments of Madras and Bombay, Sir James Strachey announces, have decided that no advantage would be gained by postponing the measure for a few months, and the bill amending the Salt Law has been passed. The necessity for fresh famine taxation on the agricultural classes in Madras and Bombay is thus obviated. The net temporary increased revenue from salt is £3,000,000, which, with the expected improvement in the revenue, will provide the necessary maximum surplus of £500,000. The sum of £1,500,000, provided for the famine, will be applied, as proposed by Lord Northbrook, to the reduction of the debt or in preventing its increase, and in aiding the construction of railways and canals for the prevention and relief of famine. Sir James Strachey declares that the Government will devote this money solely to the purposes for which it is raised, and apply no part of it to any other objects.

The Viceroy supplemented Sir John Strachey's statement on the financial policy of the Government, with special reference to the famine, by explaining the practical steps contemplated for providing a permanent national insurance against famine. This object, his Excellency said, is only attainable without risk to financial stability or a heavy increase of taxation by an uninterrupted development of the principle affirmed in the last financial statement—namely, the cautious enlargement of the financial and administrative responsibilities of the local Governments. The revenue raised in accordance with this principle will, continued the Viceroy, be applied to the construction of cheap local railways, forming an internal network for goods-traffic in all parts of the empire, and in extensive irrigation works.

AUSTRALIA.

A telegram from Sydney of the 19th inst. reports that, Mr. Parkes having relinquished the task of forming a new Cabinet, a Ministry has been formed which is thus composed:—Mr. Farnell, Secretary for Lands; Mr. Cohen, Colonial Treasurer; Mr. Fitzpatrick, Colonial Secretary; Mr. Burns, Attorney-General.

The annual report of the Board for the Protection of the Aborigines, presented to the Legislative Assembly of the colony of Victoria, states that the number of natives usually frequenting and residing on the different stations during 1876-7 was 527, as against 500 for the preceding year. A census taken on March 15 last showed that the total number of aborigines in the colony was 636 adults and 138 children; and of mixed blood, 134 adults and 159 children.

NEW ZEALAND.

We have news from Wellington, by way of San Francisco, to Nov. 15. In consequence of the Governor's refusal to accept nominations by the Ministry for appointments to the Legislative Council on the ground that a motion expressing want of confidence in the Cabinet was still pending, the House adopted by a large majority the report of the Privilege Committee, to which the matter was referred, declaring the Governor's action to be an infringement of the privileges of the House. The Governor has referred the matter to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, whom the Premier, however, has declared to be officially unknown to the House and the Ministry. The Ministry was saved from defeat on the want of confidence motion by the casting vote of the Speaker. Another similar motion was tabled, but subsequently shelved.

Last year 21,391 persons were killed in British India by wild beasts and venomous snakes, and the number of cattle killed was 48,234. The amount paid to exterminate wild beasts and snakes was £12,001 11s.

At a recent sale of old wine in Bordeaux two bottles of Château-Lafite were sold to the proprietor of one of the Paris restaurants for 310f. (£12 8s.) each. The wine was of the comet year (1811), and had been purchased by the seller a few years ago at the rate of £4 16s. per bottle.

The new Amsterdam University opens with 395 alumni, divided as follows among the five faculties:—Medicine and Surgery, 316; Jurisprudence, 28; Mathematics and Physics, 23; Theology, 22; Literature and Philosophy, 6. The faculty of Medicine comprises 249 military students.

A statistical abstract relating to British India presented to Parliament shows that the area under British administration is 909,834 miles, with a population of 191,065,445. The Native States comprise 573,052 miles and a population of 48,233,978. Including the French and Portuguese possessions, the total area of all India is 1,484,150 square miles, with a population of 239,978,595. Of the 191,000,000 inhabitants of British India, the religious denominations are given as follows:—Hindoo, 139,343,820; Sikhs, 1,174,436; Mohammedans, 40,867,125; Buddhists and Jains, 2,832,851; Christians, 897,682; others, 5,417,304; and "religion not known," 532,227.

The ship Scottish Knight, 875 tons, sailed from Gravesend on the 22nd inst., bound for Rockhampton, and had on board 258½ adults, consisting of 41 married people, 126 single men, 73 single women, 31 children between the ages of twelve and one, and 6 infants. The single women are under the care of Miss Robertson, Dr. W. Gregory acting as surgeon-superintendent. The following vessels dispatched by Sir Julius Vogel, the Agent-General for New Zealand, are reported to have arrived safely at their destinations:—Waitara, which sailed from Plymouth for Nelson on Aug. 24, arrived at Nelson on Nov. 21; Waipa, which sailed from Plymouth on Aug. 26, arrived at Port Chalmers on Nov. 21; Hurumui, which sailed from Plymouth on Sept. 16, arrived at Wellington on Dec. 8; Rakara, which sailed from Glasgow on Sept. 7, arrived at Canterbury on Dec. 10.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The Mansion House Indian Famine Fund has reached £193,000, of which £475,000 has been sent to India.

The trustees of the British Museum have appointed Professor Alleyne Nicholson, of St. Andrews, to deliver the Swinley Lectures on Geology.

The Drapers' Company of London have offered £100 for two years to the Yorkshire College, at Leeds, towards the cost of instruction in practical coal mining; and the Company of Fanmakers have given a donation of five guineas in aid of the funds of the Royal Albert Orphan Asylum.

At the last meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works the financial statement for the year was made. The gross total of the expenditure was reported to be £939,294. The amount to be raised in the rates is £483,435. The debt of the board now amounts to £9,139,000.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers at the end of the third week of December was 83,098, of whom 40,160 were in workhouses and 42,938 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in 1876, 1875, and 1874, these figures show a decrease of 596, 5071, and 13,531, respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 777, of whom 571 were men, 171 women, and 35 children.

An exhibition of pictures has been opened at St. Stephen's School-Room, Hampstead, in aid of the school building and repairing funds. Through the exertions of an influential committee, aided by the good will of several private collectors, quite an important gallery has been got together, comprising valuable works by Turner, Copley Fielding, Alma Tadema, Carl Haag, Marks, Duncan, Dobbs, and other leading artists. The exhibition can only be on view for a few days longer, as the room will shortly be required for its ordinary purposes.

The Saddlers' Company have given the following donations: The Great Northern Hospital, £20; City of London Hospital for Diseases of the Chest, £20; the Cancer Hospital, £20; St. Mark's Hospital, £20; Asylum for Deaf and Dumb Females, £20; National Hospital for Paralysis and Epilepsy, £20; Convalescent Hospital, Seaford, £20; Deaf and Dumb Asylum, Margate, £20; Destitute Children's Dinner Society, £10 10s.; poor box, Mansion House, £10 10s.; ditto, Guildhall, £10 10s.; ditto, Thames Police Court, £10 10s.; ditto, Worship-street Police Court, £10 10s.; Sea-Bathing Infirmary, Margate, £10; Ragged School Union, £10; Field-lane Ragged School, £5 5s.; Christian Blind Relief Society, £2 2s.; Home for Destitute Boys, £10 10s.

The special committee for the laying-out of the Old St. Pancras and St. Giles-in-the-Fields burying-grounds as gardens have reported to the vestry that the Baroness Burdett-Coutts has evinced her great interest by erecting a marble monument to preserve the headstone originally standing over the grave of John Walker, author of "Walker's Pronouncing Dictionary;" also, that they have approved of a very handsome design for a memorial sun-dial to be erected by her Ladyship to the memory of the illustrious dead lying in the grounds, at a cost probably exceeding £3000. The committee report further that the sum of £1000, presented by the Baroness, has been expended in the erection of a greenhouse, in accordance with the suggestion of her Ladyship.

The weather in London on Christmas Day was bright, dry, and cold, and the morning services at most churches were well attended. At Westminster Abbey and St. Paul's there were very large congregations. At the Abbey the Dean preached on the necessity of cultivating the home affections; at St. Paul's the Dean preached on the lessons taught by the festival of Christmas. There were services in several of the larger Nonconformist churches, including Christ Church, where the Rev. Newman Hall preached; the City Temple, where Dr. Parker preached a sermon in which he described the moral condition of England at the present day as worse than at any former period; and at Union Chapel, Islington, where there was a "service of praise," consisting of selections from "Elijah" and "The Messiah." At the Roman Catholic Cathedral, at Kensington, the sermon was preached by Dr. Withers, Bishop of Amycla, in the absence of Cardinal Manning. Although the weather was fine in London, it was very inclement in other parts of the country.

MUSIC.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

The close of the season of Italian opera performances on Dec. 18 has been speedily followed by the reopening of the theatre on Wednesday last, again under the management of Mr. Mapleson, who has prepared a combination of entertainments that will doubtless prove highly attractive to holiday audiences. The special novelty of the season is a grand fairy ballet-pantomime, entitled "Rose and Marie; or, The Reward of Filial Love," which is preceded by "The Swiss Cottage," an English version of Adolphe Adam's pretty operetta, "Le Chalet." In the performance of the latter at Her Majesty's Theatre, the three characters by which the action is sustained are thus cast—Bettly, Mdlle. Helene Crosmund; Daniel, Mr. George Power; and Max, Mr. G. Fox. The lady and Mr. Power made their first appearances on this occasion, and were favourably received, the cast having been efficiently completed by the other gentlemen named. Mr. Weist Hill conducted. The ballet is an elaborate piece of spectacular display, its performance being sustained by about three hundred children, among whom are the students of the National Training School for Dancing. The piece opens with a prologue in Fairyland, introducing us to Rose, who is in great grief because her mother, the Queen of the Flowers, insists on her marrying the King of the Gnomes, a hideous dwarf, instead of the handsome Prince Azur, the favoured lover of Rose, who is banished to earth by the Queen of the Fairies in consequence of her disobedience, her return being dependent on her finding among mortals a child entirely obedient to the will of its parents. The adventures of Rose and the machinations of the Gnome are carried through several scenes, the required model of obedience being found in Marie, the daughter of a poor old blind man, who is restored to sight by fairy influence, Marie being made wealthy, the Gnome defeated, and the crisis leading to the restoration of Rose to her Fairy home. The plot is given in fuller detail under the heading "Christmas Entertainments."

The dancing and pantomimic action of Mdlle. Marie Müller as Rose were of a high order of excellence; especially good also having been the performances of Master G. Craig as Prince Azur, Master G. Wymark as Harlequin, and Master Sextilian as Clown.

The groupings generally were very skilfully arranged, and the training of the children bore testimony to the experience and care of Madame Katie Lanner, by whom the ballet was invented and constructed. Some characteristic music has been supplied by M. Strebing, and the ballet was conducted by Signor G. Francesco. The applause was loud and frequent throughout; and there is no doubt that the piece will prove largely attractive, not only to juveniles, but also to adults.

Two concerts of vocal and instrumental music were given at the Royal Albert Hall on Boxing Day—one in the afternoon, the other in the evening. On each occasion several eminent artists contributed to the programme, the evening concert having included performances by Mr. Sims Reeves.

The last of this year's Popular Concerts at St. James's Hall took place last Saturday afternoon, when Rubinstein's pianoforte quintet in G minor, op. 99, was given for the first time at these concerts. This elaborate work was finely performed, with Mdlle. Anna Mehlig as pianist, the accompanying stringed instruments having been sustained by Madame Norman-Néruda, Messrs. L. Ries and Zerbini, and Signor Piatti. Mdlle. Mehlig's solo piece was Beethoven's great "Waldstein" sonata, which the pianist rendered with much success. Haydn's quartet in C major (No. 3 of op. 76, containing variations on "God preserve the Emperor") and vocal performances by Mr. Santley completed the programme. Sir J. Benedict conducted. The Popular Concerts will be resumed on Monday evening, Jan. 7.

We have already referred to the Christmas performances of "The Messiah" given by the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society and the Sacred Harmonic Society at the Alexandra Palace last week. The oratorio will also be performed, under Mr. W. Carter's direction, on Thursday next, at the Royal Albert Hall.

Mendelssohn's "Elijah" will be performed at Exeter Hall by the Sacred Harmonic Society on Friday next. Mr. Santley will sing the music of the Prophet; Miss Anna Williams, Madame Patey, Miss Ellen Horne, and Mr. Edward Lloyd are the other principal vocalists; and Sir Michael Costa will conduct the performance.

THE NEAREST WAY TO CHURCH.

Sunday is to country people a time for the meeting of those who live miles apart, for renewing expressions of regard and affection, and for clearing off a week's arrears of news, as well as a time for rest and worship, and it is eagerly looked forward to by young and old. So with their best clothes on, cottagers proceed on Sunday mornings, by short cuts known only to themselves, to their village church. On their way thither families bent on the same errand are overtaken or met. If these should chance to be of the well-to-do classes there is a bobbing of heads and much curtseying; if of their own rank in life some hearty recognition, cordial greeting, perhaps a little chat, takes place. For the latter, however, there is not much opportunity; the church bells, importunately clamouring, tell them as plainly as bells can speak, that time is short, while tongues and the way are long. So, shouting hurried messages over their shoulders to one another, they hasten on, following the pathway, frequently no more than a sheep-track, over bits of common, across meadows, up and down steep hills, and through woods, always cutting off the corners. Very pleasant these walks to church are during three seasons of the year at least; and even in winter they are not without their charm; for it is who, rather than what, is to be seen which gives them their zest. Besides, there is pretty sure to be some incident of interest on the way. As shown in our illustration, one young urchin takes advantage of snow still lying in spots where the sun has little influence to make snowballs, which will be popped, be sure, into the neck of the first boy he may chance to meet, even though it be in the churchyard itself. Now that the church comes suddenly in sight to the persons depicted in the engraving, they quicken their pace, for they see some chums ahead with whom they would fain gossip awhile. Their talk must, however, be deferred until after church time; for as they reach the churchyard, crowded with knots of eager talkers, the bell ceases, and all enter the church pell-mell. There is a great clatter of hobnailed boots on the pavement as they hurry to their seats; then a hush, and the sweetly solemn service begins. That over (not, it is to be hoped, without having produced its due effect), there are sundry confabs and handshakings by the churchgoers outside before proceeding homeward by the nearest routes; some of the lads and lasses making still nearer cuts—on the principle, that is, of the farthest way round being the nearest way home.

Princess Louise has sent presents of holly for the decorations and toys for the Christmas-tree to be held at the Victoria Hospital for Children on Jan. 7.

THE NEAREST WAY TO CHURCH.

MY GREAT-GRANDMOTHER'S FIRST DANCING LESSON.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

I rejoice to perceive that at Queen's College, Oxford, on Christmas Day, the immemorial custom of Bringing in the Boar's Head—which was provided by the college "Manciple," and the orthodox medieval term for which is a "browner"—was duly observed. The porcine trophy was borne on the shoulders of two serving-men, and preceded by a procession of choristers headed by the collegiate chaplain; and Dr. Hague's variation on the carol proper to the occasion was chanted—

The Boar's Head in hand bring I,
With garlands gay and rosemary.
I pray you all sing merrily,
Qui estis in convivio,
Caput aprî defero,
Reddens laudes Domino.

Now, I am Conservative enough to prefer the arrangement of the much older carol, the first verse of which runs thus:—

Caput aprî defero,
Reddens laudes Domino.

(This forms really a hearty grace before meat.)

The Boar's Head in hand bring I,
With garlands gay and rosemary.
I pray you all sing merrily
Qui estis in convivio.

The third and last stanza in Dr. Hague runs—

Our Steward hath provided this
In honour of the King of Bliss;
Which on this day to be served is In Regimen atri.

But the ancient chant hath—

Be glad both more and less,
For this hath ordained our Steward
To cheer you all this Christmas.
The Boar's Head and Mustard.
Caput aprî defero
Reddens laudes Domino.

There is much virtue in mustard. An old cookery-book, giving instructions for the service of the Royal table, says emphatically:—"First set forth mustard with brawn; take your knife in your hand, and cut brawn in the dish where it lieth; and lay on your Sovereign's trencher, and let there be mustard." I like the repetition of the admonition as to mustard and the authoritative style in which it is couched. Do you remember the story of the eminent man of letters lately taken from us—the ripe scholar, the thoughtful essayist, the writer of two of the noblest biographies in the English language, who, from an amusing "sic volo, sic jubeo" way he had used to be called by his more intimate friends "Arbitrary Jack?" Entering the dining-room of an hotel one Ash Wednesday, he demanded in a voice of thunder (but it was the most harmless of thunder), salt fish and parsnips. "Very sorry, Mr. F.," quoth the waiter, with a low bow, "but there are no parsnips left." "Let there be parsnips!" vociferated "Arbitrary Jack." The story is not a bad pendant to that of the French marquis of the old régime who asked for stale bread instead of now at dinner, and who, on being told that there was no pain rassis, tranquilly replied, "Qu'on m'en fasse." Let some be made.

Mem: The sobriquet given to the Autocrat of Parsnips rose from an amusingly curious circumstance. Charles Dickens and Daniel Maclise, both intimate friends of the Autocrat, had been one night, with the aid of a four-wheeled cab, on a long tour of exploration in low-life London. On dismissing the cabman they paid him very generously; whereat remarked Jarvey, chinking the shillings in his palm, "Ah! I know your lay. I've 'ad a deal to do with you literary gen'l'm. I've druv one as lives in Lincoln's-inn-fields many a time, all about London." "What kind of a gentleman is he," asked Dickens. "Well," replied the cabman, "E's a Harbiterary Cove." "It must be F.," cried simultaneously the novelist and the painter. And so from subsequent inquiries it proved to be.

There came across me a delightful memory of Charles Dickens, as, late on Christmas Eve, I sat in a corner of the stage of the Theatre Royal, Drury-Lane (at the imminent risk of tumbling into the big drum), watching the night rehearsal of the "Grand Christmas Annual" of "The White Cat." I was among the oldest of old friends. I think that I have known the author of the "Annual" (he is very angry if the entertainment be called a pantomime, just as the late Mr. Robson used publicly to protest against "Vilkins and his Dinah" being called a comic song) full thirty years. This is Mr. E. L. Blanchard's twenty-eighth "Annual" at the "Lane." The chief scene-painter I have known and admired since 1846; I can say the same of the accomplished ballet-master, Mr. Cormack; and last, but not least, the lessee, Mr. F. B. Chatterton, and I are veteran cronies. So for the nonce I was Jack Horner enjoying my Christmas pie to the utmost, and finding that the "talented Vokes family" had stuffed it full of the richest plums. Going afterwards into the stalls and chatting with some friends, one asked how long Mr. Beverly had been a scene-painter. "As to that," replied another, "I can tell you thus much. More than fifty years ago Master William Beverly was a small boy at a select academy somewhere in Camden Town. There was another pupil there, of about the same age, who had a passionate fondness (a fondness which abided by him his whole life through) for theatricals. This young gentleman was the happy possessor of a toy theatre, and had got up, 'regardless of expense,' the melodrama of the "Miller and his Men;" but he was in desperate straits with regard to the "setting" of the last scene, especially as regarded the blowing up of the Mill. In the nick of time Master William Beverly, who had an intuitive genius for painting and mechanics, stepped in. The famous last scene was elaborately constructed and dexterously painted by the future artist of Drury Lane; and poetical justice was vindicated, and the pupils of the Select Academy thrown into ecstasies of delight by the final blowing up of the Mill, with Grindoff and his depraved accomplices. The name of the young gentleman to whose assistance William Beverly had come was Charles Dickens.

I don't object to a little "bunkum" occasionally in journalism. It is the cayenne pepper of prose. In fact, I have sometimes been accused (although I repudiate the imputation as utterly libellous) of indulging in a little "bunkum" myself. But in the following extract, which I cut from the Vienna correspondence of a daily paper, I cannot help thinking that the "Fine Art of High Falutin'" has been rather overdone:—

VIENNA, Tuesday, Dec. 25.
"There yet remains much to be done; may the Almighty aid us in the final accomplishment of our holy undertaking!" Such is the Christmas message of the Emperor Alexander of Russia.

It quite escaped the memory of the ingenious gentleman who wrote from Vienna that the Emperor Alexander and his many millions of Russo-Greek subjects do not keep their Christmas Day until the twelfth day after ours. Until the Sixth of next January orthodox Russo-Greeks will be, not feasting, but fasting.

Still, Christmas, whether we keep it in New or Old Style, is undeniably a season for the manifestation of peace and goodwill to all men. What do you think of the following "manifestation" of pacific and benevolent aspirations which I quote from another correspondent of the journal to which I have alluded. The gentleman is settling the question of European politics generally:—

As for Italy, if she should prove intractable, we need only do again what was done with success in the last century. We could send an Admiral with a fleet and a watch to Naples, with orders to count two hours with the latter, and, in the event of a treaty of neutrality not being signed in the interim, lay the city in ashes with the former. Liassa showed what the Italian fleet is worth.

There's a Christmas Carol for you! Bless the gentleman's tender and merciful heart. Poverissima Napoli! I should like to see the "Admiral," say of the "Gallant Thunderbomb," standing on a hundred-ton gun and, a Benson's chronograph in his hand, looking petroleum shells and red-hot shot at the Chiaja Santa Lucia. But why should Naples be especially doomed? Venice could be knocked to pieces very easily; and there is a good deal in the way of bombardment to be done at Genoa.

It is pleasanter to read that one hundred and two plum-puddings, weighing from four to eight pounds apiece, were made at Chelsea Hospital on Christmas Day for the refectory of the aged pensioners; that the allowance of roast beef was ample, and that the old gentlemen enjoyed themselves, on the whole, immensely. Christmas cheer was provided for nearly five hundred veterans; but I don't know what Sir Wilfrid Lawson and his party will think of the fact that the Christmas Day allowance of beer to each pensioner was two and a half pints. There seems to be a good deal of steady drinking in a quart and a quarter of sound porter. Yet no cases of inebriety were reported from Chelsea on the Twenty-Fifth; and one of the pensioners who had reached the mature age of ninety-four was heard to express the opinion after dinner that "he could have done a little more pudden, and another small half-pint."

The case of the patriarch of ninety-four should be dealt with by the Lancet, in which I read lately an excellent and most seasonable homily on "Temperance." According to the Lancet, if you do indulge in any fermented beverages, you should take your alcohol, in the form of beer or wine, only at dinner. As respects wine, the consumption per person should be limited to a single half-pint. In the matter of wine, you should stop short of "the third glass." Readers of George Herbert will remember the eloquent diatribe of the poet against the "third glass" and the terrible passage beginning "He that is drunken may his mother slay—." It is not consoling to reflect that "Holy Mr. Herbert" penned this poem more than two hundred years ago; and that Dr. Parker, preaching on Christmas Day at the City Temple, told his congregation that, in the way of drinking, our morals had become worse than they had ever been.

CHRISTMAS ENTERTAINMENTS.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

The series of pantomimes this season are led off by one at this distinguished house which has been conceived and executed on a scale of expense which must command attention. It is a ballet-pantomime in two acts, five tableaux, and prologue, invented and composed by Madame Katti Launer, with music by Martin Strebing, and scenery by Messrs. Fox and Messrs. Emden and Telbin. The title is simply "Rose and Marie; or, The Reward of Filial Love." It is a fairy tale—one of singular brilliancy and beauty, opening with the Lake of Sunshine in the Valley of Flowers. The mother of Rose is the Queen of the Flowers, who wishes her daughter (Marie Müller) to wed the King of the Gnomes, a mischievous dwarf who threatens to destroy her kingdom unless Rose be sacrificed to his wishes. Prince Azur, her lover, persuades poor Rose to resist the intended tyranny. The Gnome arrives with an army to claim his betrothed; she is protected by Azur, but his sword of flowers is broken against the iron arm of the Gnome. Whereupon Rose invokes the aid of the Fairy Queen, who promptly appears; but for her disobedience to her mother Rose is banished for awhile from the Kingdom of Flowers. She arrives on earth as an old woman, bearing on her back a heavy bundle of sticks, and is relieved in her destitution by Marie, the daughter of a poor blind old man. The scene then changes to a "grand animated imperial magic Toy-shop," located in an English town. It is Christmas-time, and the shop is thronged with customers. Rose appears as the Toy-dealer. As the evening advances Marie is seen looking in at the window. Rose patronises her, and, plucking a rose from her bouquet, scatters the leaves, which at once quickens the toys with life, and a grand divertissement follows. The next is a scene of contrasts—on one side a richly appointed apartment, on the other a poorly furnished room. In the former a large Christmas party is assembled; in the latter there is a fireless grate, with an old man sleeping in his chair. Marie works quietly, in order not to disturb him, and subsequently goes out to dispose of her work to her wealthy neighbours. The Gnome, however, does her an evil turn, by removing rich jewels from the chamber of the latter into that of Marie; and Madame Pompous, her revelling neighbour, refuses to purchase her articles, and, indeed, accuses her of robbery. She and her father are anon like to perish in the streets. Passengers refuse to purchase her wares, and the snow is falling. The Gnome rejoices when he observes them to be sleeping, thinking them to be at the point of death. A religious song suitable to the season compels him to flee, when the snow disappears, and Rose, surrounded by her fairies, approaches Marie and her father. The clothes of the poor girl fall away, and are replaced by fairy attire. All this proves to be a dream. The afflicted couple are yet plagued by the machinations of the Gnome; but at last, her father being in peril, Marie exclaims to his assailants, "Kill me, but spare my father!" Rose has now found a child who will devote herself entirely to her parents, and therefore her banishment ceases. She returns, attended to the Kingdom of Flowers. The transformation scene includes the apotheosis of Rose. The harlequinade introduces to the audience Master Sextillian as Clown, Master Elliot as Pantaloon, Master George Wymark as Harlequin, and Miss Gertrude Wakefield as Columbine. The novelty and elegance of this story will probably please the fashionable audience for which it was designed.

COVENT GARDEN.

Mr. Rice places before us the pantomime of our old familiar "Puss in Boots." Fondalin, the genteel and youngest son of the recently deceased Miller, returns from school to learn that he has not been named in his father's will. Mealy-mouth and Branbruiser express doubts of his being their brother at all, and he is expelled, taking with him the Cat, who steals the miller's boots. Outside the mill villagers are making holiday. Flora, Daisy, and other young females, seeing Fondalin about to quit the village, declare their willingness to accompany him, but he leaves them behind, taking with him his friend the Cat only. The new mill-stone arrives, and while the wicked Branbruiser is assisting to move it the Cat flies at him. His helpmates, alarmed, leave go their hold, and the huge stone falls, flattening him: ill luck attends their wicked brother also, who, chasing the Cat, tumbles into the mill-dam, and is rescued in a most unpleasant plight. Baron Burleyboy next appears on the scene. A letter arrives from the giant Fee-Fi-Fum demanding the hand of the Baron's daughter for his nephew; but the Baron resolves to substitute his maiden sister, who willingly agrees to take the place of her niece. Mignonnetta, being tired of her home, resolves to outwit her, and to that end induces the page to lock her aunt in the chamber while she takes her place in the coach. Now, Fondalin is really the Marquis of Carabas, whom the giant years since slew in battle. Scene 4 shows the pool where fairies disport themselves, who, overhearing the approach of Fondalin, withdraw. Fondalin, delighted at so cool a spot, undresses and bathes, while the Cat amuses itself by tearing its friend's clothes to tatters. The Baron arrives, and the Cat informs him how robbers have waylaid his master, who, rather than show himself in the old rags they have exchanged for his handsome clothes, is now hiding in the bullrushes. The Baron generously resolves to lend his court-suit, and, going to the carriage to obtain it, discovers his daughter instead of his sister. Fondalin, availing himself of the fine clothes, assumes the title of "Marquis," and so imposes on the Baron, who gladly consents that his daughter shall become "Marchioness Carabas." But they are on an enchanted ground, where every stick and stone answers directly as a telephone; so the Ogre's elves arrive to conduct Mignonnetta to Castle Carabas. At their appearance servants and horses flee in alarm. The Elves duly arrive at the castle with their prize, who, although annoyed at her detention, becomes rather enamoured of her captor. She is taken in charge until Rover can procure the village parson to marry them. Spiderlimbs the lawyer and other villagers endeavour to find her and serenade her, to the amazement of the Ogre's Elves, with whom a battle takes place. The villagers ultimately retreat, and Mignonnetta is discovered suspended in a cage near the Giant, who quarrels with her. The Cat arrives with a hare as a present to the Giant, and is permitted to remain. The Giant states that he is not only a giant but a necromancer, and can change himself into anything; and, as a proof of his art, he becomes a lion. Fondalin, who has been admitted, is alarmed, and begs him to become something smaller; this he agrees to, and changes to a mouse, when the Cat instantly pounces on and kills him. Fondalin rescues the lady, and, finding the Ogre's mystic scroll, pronounces the cabalistic word; the castle dissolves, reveals the Giant's salt-cellar and glacierium, where he has for years kept those human beings in store that he did not immediately wish to eat. These forms, all blanched, revive and dissolve their icy coating under the influence of the sun's rays, and rejoice accordingly. We now return to the Baron's home, where Fondalin brings Mignonnetta; but Rover, having fallen in love with her, demands her. She is nothing loth, and, to save a fight, Fondalin's rustic sweetheart reminds him that she was willing to have him before he acquired his estate. He relents, but Spiderlimbs is already engaged to her. Another quarrel arises, which is terminated by the arrival of the Fairy Queen, and the usual transformation. This pantomime will no doubt prove successful.

DRURY LANE.

We are spared the necessity of furnishing the plot of the pantomime at this house, having given it fully in our last Number. We have now only to state that "Harlequin and the White Cat" attracted an overflowing audience. Mr. E. L. Blanchard has developed his subject with his usual skill, and judiciously provided the auxiliaries best adapted to its ornamentation. Mr. William Beverly may score an extraordinary triumph in his transformation scene, which all good judges agree exceeds even his previous efforts for its gorgeous and dazzling effects. The harlequinade, also, was a great success, and provocative of infinite mirth.

STRAND.

A new burlesque, entitled "The Red Rover," by Mr. Burnand, is designed for the Christmas attraction, and, on account of its originality, certainly merits success. The scene of the opening is Newport Harbour, while speedily we make the acquaintance of Madame de Lacy and her niece Gertrude, as also of the Red Rover himself (M. Marius), and Lieut. Wilder (Miss Rachel Sanger), who are both in love with the young and charming lady. The Red Rover disguises himself as a lawyer, and induces Madame to seek her long-lost son in Carolina, and with her niece takes her passage on board a pirate craft. The wicked designs of the Rover are partly counteracted by a negro named Guinea, well played by Mr. Henry Cox. By his means, Wilder is discovered to be Madame de Lacy's son. The pirate, too, meets his deserved doom. There are many other characters who contribute to the humour and interest of the piece, which is placed on the stage with great care, and furnished abundantly with all needful accessories. The performance was well received, and will doubtless become a popular favourite.

ADELPHI.

The pantomime of this year, like that of the last, is performed by children. It is founded on the story of "Robin Hood," and begins, as it ought, with the Forest of Sherwood and the Greenwood Tree. The Fairies are indignant that the Sheriff of Nottingham has threatened to inclose the forest, and resolve to oppose the design. Robin Hood, under fairy protection, commences his career, and we soon find him at Nottingham Fair, disguised in a butcher's blue smock, selling American beef. The market prices are fabulously low, and excite discussion. Robin Hood sells mutton at twopence a pound. Detected by the Sheriff of Nottingham, he winds his horn, and is rescued by four-and-twenty merry men, and so escapes. The Sheriff follows to the forest, and, finding Friar Tuck in a drunken condition, fines him five shillings. Moreover, he nearly succeeds in arresting Robin himself; but the fairy Sylvia intervenes. All the characters meet in her enchanted grot. This is altogether a brilliant scene. The performance was completely successful.

GAIETY.

The pantomime, which is designed for the afternoon audiences, revels in the old story of "Valentine and Orson," with Princess Eglantine, the prize of the combat between the handsome knight and the rude savage. Mr. J. d'Auban will in this scene become immensely popular. He has gone in for ravelling Mr. George Conquest in those astonishing trapdoor feats which render the fights at the Grecian so marvellous. Mr. J. G. Taylor is droll as the conventional monarch of burlesque; and the Masters Linton shine as acrobats, as does also Mr. W. Warde as Harlequin, in the comic business. The evening performances consist of the "Faust" and "Cigale" adaptations. The most facile of dramatic penmen is probably Mr. H. J. Byron, who rivals the fertility of the Spanish playwrights in the number and lightness of his pieces. His manner of dealing with the Faust legend, notwithstanding its obvious faults, is as lively as it is frivolous, and suits alike the artistes on the stage and the audience in the pit. The manager has now come to the aid of the prolific dramatist, and furnished an extra part to Miss Farren, who presents to us the comic side of the character of the Grasshopper, with the approbation of a large public, and, indeed, winning a positive triumph for the house and for herself.

FOLLY.

A new extravaganza was produced on Saturday, entitled "A Night of Terra, a Musical Madness in Three Fyttes." It is by Messrs. Charles Wyndham and Arthur Matthison, and is set forth as a "flat burglary as ever was committed from the French." Nevertheless the scene is laid in London, in connection with the modern plan of house-life, or the lately introduced practice of living-in-flats. This is supposed to give rise to many novel complications, and afford opportunity for flirtation, an art in which Mr. Frank Murray (Mr. Philip Day) is adept. Pretending he is going away to the seat of war, Frank invites all his sweethearts to a fête, with the design of getting back his love-letters; and succeeds with the majority. But Marguerite Vere de Vere (Miss V. Cameron), declines to comply with his request, and, after a series of odd and laughable accidents, gains from him a promise of marriage. The situations and tricks are rather of a pantomimic than a dramatic order, and agree with the season well enough. The fun and rolic are wild and extravagant. Miss Violet Cameron, as the determined widow, acted charmingly. Her fascinations are invincible. The piece achieved a decided success.

ALHAMBRA.

The Christmas novelty here is a spectacular and musical version of "Le Diable à Quatre," written by H. B. Faruie and R. Reece, entitled "Wildfire; or, The Village Bewitched." Wildfire (Miss Emma Chambers) has issued a summons for the appearance of the witches. Their victims are to be Daisy (Miss Lennox Grey), the wife of Kit, the obdurate, a would-be lord of the creation, and the Baroness Miss Patti Laverne), wife of the Baron Hey Derry Downe. The witches unanimously agree that these ladies should change places. The Baroness is a decided home-ruler, and keeps her husband, the Baron (Mr. J. H. Ryley) and his daughter, Azurine (Miss Adelaide Newton), under perfect control. Kit, the cobbler (Mr. H. Paulton) teaches us how the world ought to be governed, and how he would soon put stop to all strong-minded women. The third scene concludes with a danse rustique by Mdlles. Sismondi, Rosa, Richards, Melville, and the corps de ballet. Scene 4 is the haunted fen in which the transmigration of Daisy and the Baroness takes place. In act ii. the first scene is the home of Kit, where we find the Baroness, who has been transformed into the counterpart of Daisy, dwelling with Kit. Scenes 2 and 3 take place in the castle of Derry Downe, where Daisy is residing. Wildfire appears and informs her of the mysterious change that has taken place, and commands her to keep up the persecution of the Baroness, to which she has no objection, and becomes greatly delighted with the attentions of the Baron and his Court. Kit, the cobbler, is brought before her on a charge of poaching, and Daisy reads him a good lesson. The act concludes with the lamp-lit gardens of the castle, in which a grand military ballet takes place in honour of the approaching nuptials of Prince Sigismund with Azurine. Mdlles. Pertoldi and Gillert and Mons. A. Josset appear in the ballet. Act iii. commences at the mill on the borders of the forest. The Baron and Daisy are enjoying the delights of the country, whilst the Baroness is endeavouring to escape from the officers of justice, who hold a warrant for her apprehension for an assault. Kit and the Baroness have a "Trial by Jury" for their different offences. After various speeches from the Prosecution and Defence, and by the assistance of Wildfire, they are allowed to return to their respective partners, being simply bound over to keep the peace. This happy denouement is celebrated by a grand ballet of swells, and then comes the transformation and the Rowella family, who appear as Harlequin, Columbine, Clown and Pantaloon, to pay their respects to Old Father Christmas.

STANDARD.

The action opens in Vulcan's smithy, where Prince Prim (Miss Kate Neville) asks to gain from Vulcan (Mr. Bishop) the magic horseshoe, which gives a knowledge of the future to its possessor. Vulcan shows him his future wife, and then, in revenge for his temerity, transforms the Prince into a ferocious bear. The Fairy Brillante (Miss Alice Tayner), overhearing his doom, interferes, and, although she cannot undo the spell, limits the period of the enchantment until some fair maid shall love him for himself in spite of his ugliness. Scene 2 presents the "Home of Nouredin," a photographic artist, of Teheran (Mr. John Barnum), who is at his wits' end how to obtain money. To add to his misfortune, his own daughter, Snow White (Miss Eugenie Alkenaire), is shamefully treated by her stepsisters. The "Gate of Teheran" succeeds, where Nouredin plies his trade. Snow White being observed by one Prince Ahmed (Miss Milly Iowes), the Prince demands her hand of her father. The sisters are furious, and Nouredin dares not oppose them, but says he will go away. The wild bear is devastating the country, and the Shah offers a large reward for the extermination of the monster, and Nouredin accepts the commission. His servant, Shackabac (Mr. Cyrus Bell), who is continually causing quarrels in the house, goes with him, and also Prince Ahmed. In Scene 4, a lonely spot, they begin to find difficulties, and, wishing for fine weather, the storm abates, and the scene changes to "The Woods, outside the Bear's domain." Here Nouredin remembers he has promised his eldest daughter, Gulnare, an Indian shawl, and Emmarina some money, whilst Snow White only asked for a rose. After having refreshment in a sumptuous manner, Nouredin picks a rose, and a very uninviting guest appears—the Bear (Mr. Valter Laburnham), in disguise as a gardener. He gets all their secrets, and then offers to take them where they can kill the beast while he sleeps, and leads them into his den in "The Python's Haunt," consisting of glens and caves inhabited by serpents, snakes, and noxious reptiles. He next tells them that, unless within a day the fairest of Nouredin's daughters consents to come to his haunt, the merchant will form his next meal. In proof of his power, the dwellers of the Python aunt make their appearance. The stage is covered with fantastic forms, pythons and hissing serpents. A grand ballet takes place, called the "Charming of the Serpent"—principal dancers, Madame Sidonie and Miss St. Pierre. The Beast condemns Shackabac to a surprising metamorphosis, tormenting him with the appearance of a double (Mr. Will Orkins). In the time Snow White arrives at the Bear's palace; the Bear lls in love with her, and exhibits the palace gardens—magnificent arched, poetic bowers, tenanted with Eastern birds—gather with a novel and picturesque ballet. An assembly of birds go through various groupings to the musical songs of feathered tribes; culminating in a picture of "The Glory of Nations." Snow White at length returns home, having obtained leave of absence from the Bear; she avows her love, thus breaking the spell and disenchanting the Prince. The grand transformation scene represents "The Vision of the Lily," in thirteen changes, introducing as Harlequin Mr. Vincent; Columbine, Miss St. Pierre; Clown, Mr. Will Orkins; Pantaloon, Mr. C. Bishop; Policeman, Mr. Perren. The performance was successful.

SURREY.

"Whittington and his Cat" form the subject of the pantomime. The action commences with King Rat's Castle. King Rat receives a visitor in the shape of a beetle from Colorado, and another in that of Beau Bell, an emissary from Fairyland, on his way to London. We are next conducted to the shop of Master Hugh Fitzwarren, to whose door a waggon from Gloucestershire brings some bales of cloth, Dick Whittington (Miss Topsy Venn), and his Cat (Master Forrest). A 'prentice riot takes place in the street, and Alice, Fitzwarren's daughter (Miss Nellie Moon), being in danger, is rescued by Dick, to whom she becomes attached. Scene 3 represents Highgate-hill, with a bird's-eye view of old London, with the historical milestone and the usual business. We soon visit in "Fairyland, the Floral Retreat in the Emyrean Realm of Bliss." The Fairy Queen resolves that the promise to make Dick Lord Mayor shall be carried out. We are then treated to a grand ballet; and in the next scene, at the Port of London, we find the good ship Saucy Polly on the point of sailing. Dick is persuaded to join the crew, followed by Alice in male attire. Scene 6 is the Court of Sago, King of Barbary. The baby has disappeared from the cradle and a large rat is found in its place. News arrives of a shipwreck on the coast, and the crew and passengers of the Saucy Polly, comprising Dick, Alice, &c., are brought in as prisoners by Mazourka, the Captain of the Guard. Dick is selected for death, when Alice, still dressed as a boy, volunteering to take his place, reveals her identity. King Sago is so overcome at this example of love and generosity that he pardons them all, and appoints them to high offices in his household. A grand Barbaric ballet introduces dinner, when the rats overrun the tables. Here Dick's faithful cat, which has accompanied the party, comes to the rescue, kills all the rats, even the King Rat himself, and is loaded by the grateful Sago with enormous wealth, with which Dick and his friends depart for England, the King accompanying them. Scenes of the Guildhall and old London on Lord Mayor's Show Day furnish an interesting panorama of metropolitan antiquities, leading up to the "Fairy Home of Pomona in the Umbrageous Groves of Fruit and Fancy," a transformation scene designed and painted by Charles Brooke.

AQUARIUM.

"A Frog He Would A-Wooing Go; or, Harlequin, the Sleeping Beauty, and the Wicked Demons of the Mystic Pool," is the title of the pantomime, which has been constructed, arranged, and produced by Mr. J. A. Cave, while Mr. Oswald Allen has supplied the words and songs. The story is as follows:—Scene 1 shows us the abode of King Envy (Mr. W. H. Gilbert) in the regions of Hate, and we see that monarch, with his attendant demons, exulting over the possession of a certain magic diadem, by means of which the good Princess Loveliness, a protégée of the fairies, has been sent into a deathlike sleep, from which she can only be awakened by means of the diadem aforesaid. To them appear the Fairy Queen, Kindness (Miss Barrie), and Papillo, her sprite (Miss Amy Hatherley), who express their determination to regain the magic gem and restore the Princess. Scene 2: We see the Court of King Timido (Mr. H. C. Sidney) and his Queen Furiosa (Mr. James Fown), with the courtiers, lamenting the fate that has befallen the poor Princess. Two suitors for Loveliness's hand arrive, in the persons of Radiant (Miss Bessie Bonehill) and Reckless (Miss Jenny Hill), who both resolve to regain the diadem, the King offering to bestow his daughter's hand on the one who is successful in his search. Scene 3 gives us the marshy domains of King Frog (Mr. Simpson), and we see that monarch, who is in love with the Princess, upon a bed of sickness, attended by his Mother (Mr. C. Pascal) and Dr. Dosun, (Mr. Sault). Upon hearing of King Timido's proclamation, he miraculously recovers, and Froggy starts on his wooing. Scene 4: We witness the magic pool into which the demons throw the diadem for safety. Prince Reckless, who has fallen in with King Froggy and established a temporary friendship with him, persuades that monarch to dive into the pool and recover the gem. Froggy no sooner has done so than it is seized upon by Reckless, who summons a lily-white duck, who gobbles Froggy up. Radiant, meeting Reckless with the diadem, fights for and obtains it, and humanely fishes Froggy out of the duck's mouth. Froggy, however, instead of appreciating his kindness, summons his demon friends to persecute Radiant. The Sprite Papillo appearing to the rescue, they are beaten off, and a grand ballet of fairies takes place. Scene 5: We are treated to a mournful procession of little frogs outside their master's castle. Froggy, however, turns up all right again. Here Timido and his considerably better half, Furiosa, call, on their way to meet Radiant with the diadem. Scene 6 shows us the revels in honour of the marriage of Loveliness (Miss Lilian Adair), now restored to wakefulness, and Prince Radiant, which are interrupted by King Froggy, who snatches away the diadem, and bears off the Princess, petrifying the spectators, who on his departure vow vengeance. Scene 7 is the swamp to which Froggy has carried the hapless Princess; and in this and the next scene we witness the vain endeavours of Radiant and the others to recover poor Loveliness—efforts which are in the end, by the assistance of the Fairies, crowned with success.

THE CRYSTAL AND ALEXANDRA PALACES.

The Sydenham Pantomime is by Messrs. Augustus Harris and W. R. Osman, and entitled "The Sleeping Beauty; or, Harlequin and the Fairy Dream of the Magic Mirror." We have here the Demon Arsenal, with the fiends of war, who are making cannon for the campaign of mischief—an evident political allusion, from which, however, we are soon carried away to a christening party, attended by seven fairy godmothers. The stage is filled with a glittering throng, including grotesque as well as stately characters. The babe grows with time into a comely woman, a Princess (impersonated by Miss Isabelle Bryant), with whom all goes well until the time of the fatal curse, when she pricks her finger with the spindle. The rest of the story is well known. The transformation scene is very splendid, depicting the seasons after an Arcadian fashion. The scenery is by Mr. Julian Hicks and Mr. Charles Drew; it is exceedingly artistic.

The pantomime at the Alexandra Palace deals with the story of "St. George and the Dragon, and the Seven Champions of Christendom." Notwithstanding the want of novelty in the subject, it is rendered interesting by skilful treatment. The scenery, by Mr. Henry Emden, is of rare excellence. The piece is by the Brothers Grinn, and in its performance gave great satisfaction to the audience. The music, by Mr. Frank Musgrave, is good; and the harlequinade particularly recommends itself by its briskness and brevity.

We shall resume the subject next week, supplying some omissions in our present notice.

The slight fall of snow on the morning of Boxing Day appears to have had the effect of keeping a large number of persons indoors in the early part of the day, for the number of holiday-makers abroad was rather less than is usually observed on so fine a day. At several of the popular places of resort there was a falling off in the number of visitors compared with last year. At the Zoological Gardens in Regent's Park the numbers were 7949, which was about 2000 fewer than last year. The National Gallery was visited by 14,870 persons, against 19,173 last year, and the South Kensington Museum by 11,298, against 12,101 last year. The Crystal Palace, the Alexandra Palace, the Westminster Aquarium, the Polytechnic, St. James's Hall, and other popular places of entertainment were thronged, and it is stated that about 20,000 persons went to Messrs. Sangars' circus at the Agricultural Hall. In the evening all the theatres and other places of amusement were crowded.

HAYMARKET.

The cynical muse of Mr. W. S. Gilbert retains its ascendancy at this house, and the farcical comedy of "Engaged" its place on the boards. If we judge of the work as the author desires, we shall not object to its fitness for the season, nor fail to find amusement in its performance. We must credit him with good intentions, and accept the production as a palatable jest, sporting with and not condemning our common humanity. That there is comedy as well as satire in it is made evident by the laughter which it provokes; and it is so well acted, and with such an apparently serious aim, that there is no room for severe criticism. The audience is therefore fain to be content—and, indeed, to acquiesce—for the nonce in the author's interpretation of society and man. It is not that either of the poet or divine, but that of an eccentric individual whose meaning is distorted by an habitual jest, and who is wickedly laughing at you while you are innocently laughing with him. We trust that holiday folk will regard the enigma on its merry side, and prefer to see the ridiculous in its utterances rather than any earnest design to point a disagreeable moral.

PRINCESS'S.

It is satisfactory to find Mr. W. G. Wills's metrical play of "Jane Shore" still on the boards of this theatre, and addressing a Christmas audience; though, probably, its success is owing to the sensational scene of the snowstorm, with the persecuted famishing woman so providentially rescued from impending death. After a few weeks' further run it will be followed by a fairy drama, entitled "Elfinella," in which Miss Heath will enact the heroine.

At other theatres the playbills present little that is original. Mr. Henry Irving reappeared on Wednesday at the Lyceum in "The Lyons Mail;" and at the Globe Mr. J. L. Toole amuses his audience in "Artful Cards" and "Trying a Magistrate."—At the Prince of Wales's it is a treat to witness Mrs. Bancroft as Hester Grazebrook in Mr. Tom Taylor's comedy of "An Unequal Match."—At the Vaudeville "Our Boys" was performed on Boxing Night for the 953rd night; and at the Criterion is, at the end of nine months, still found "Pink Dominoes" high in favour with the audience, having survived adverse criticism. This result is partly due to the excellence of the cast.—"The Turn of the Tide" has been revived at the Olympic.—At the Duke's Lord Byron's tragedy of "Sardanapalus" appeals to a Christmas audience, and will no doubt do so with continued success.—At St. George's Hall, Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's petit dramas attract a fashionable public. "Once in a Century" has proved a favourite; and we have now in addition "A Musical Almanac," by Mr. Conny Grain, which is likely to become exceedingly popular. To conclude the varied entertainment, Mr. W. Wye's "Our New Doll's House" has been revived. It is illustrated with new music by Mr. Cotsford Dick, and new scenery by Messrs. Gordon and Harford. Morning as well as evening performances are given.

The Polytechnic Institution adds to its usual entertainments a new lecture by Professor Gardner on Chemical Mysteries, in which he displays many philosophical experiments that cannot fail to stimulate profitable inquiry. We have some very curious conjuring marvels exhibited by Dr. Holden, which we could not undertake to describe, but some of which the Doctor pretends to explain. Some dissolving views by W. R. Hill, under the name of "The Rose and the Ring," adapted from Thackeray's Christmas Tales, cannot fail to please the numerous holiday visitors who delight in the acquisition of science on easy terms.

Moore and Burgess have transferred their performances to the St. James's Grand Hall, where some 5000 seats are provided for the audience. An entirely new programme also is supplied, many songs in which are secure of popularity. Mr. G. W. Moore has, in particular, an attractive repertoire, which, with a new burlesque on the Girards, add to the value of the usual entertainments.

Messrs. Maskelyne and Cooke continue to mystify the numerous class of sight-seers who like to be bewildered by the apparently miraculous, and have not yet made up their minds as to the secret implied in the famous automata Psycho and Zoë. Some new feats by Mr. Maskelyne in his Japanese imitations merit attention.

A DAHOMEY PRIEST SPINNING SACRED COTTON.

It may seem strange to those persons who connect priestcraft with idleness and ignorance that a Dahomey priest should know how to spin cotton or to do anything useful; but in that land of the fetish, the skull, and the human sacrifice, "it does not necessarily follow that a priest should not also be a tradesman," says the authority. Indeed, the Dahomey priest in one respect, and one only, may be said to resemble St. Paul: he knows a craft, and can work for his living with his own hands. And so, when his sacred functions require it or permit it, or do not interfere with it, he can spin cotton, squatting amidst the exhilarating accessories, such as fetiches, human skulls, &c., which abound in the illustration. Among the gods of Dahomey, as most people probably are aware, a high place is assigned to "lofty and beautiful trees," among which "the silk-cotton is the most revered." The "cotton is not cultivated at all," say the authorities, "the supply being obtained from the wild growth." And the ordinary way of gathering and spinning it, which appears from the picture to be that adopted by the priest, is thus described:—"It is gathered, and picked, and spread out on nets to dry in the sun. When wanted, it is placed in little heaps, and a small bow is used to separate the fibres and give it a 'fluffy' appearance. It is then fastened to a stick about a foot long, and is ready for spinning. The instrument for this purpose is a thin slip of bamboc about a foot long, stuck through a heavy round piece of clay which acts as a fly; and the whole is then twisted by the fingers, the weight of the fly generating sufficient momentum to keep it in motion for a considerable time. The end of the thread twisted from the bundle of cotton on the distaff is attached to this; and, as it twists round, the cotton is disengaged with the right hand, and, when a thread of sufficient length to allow the spinner to touch the ground has been spun off, it is wound round the spindle-stick, hitched over its top, and the operation continued."

"WILLIAM, PRINCE OF ORANGE, AT THE AGE OF SEVEN."
IN THE NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY.

MY GREAT-GRANDMOTHER'S FIRST DANCING-LESSON.

A hundred years ago, in what have been fallaciously called "the good old days when George the Third was King," when Ranelagh was a nightly promenade of fashionable gaiety, and the beaux and belles of quality drank the waters at Tunbridge Wells, there was a little maiden of eight summers, whose memory I cherish with tender respect. Not that I ever saw her with my own eyes; but she was grandmother to my own dear mother, through whose eyes I have often beheld her as a venerable dame attired in the finest muslin and black silk of aged widowhood, seated at her drawing-room window, on a bright sunny morning, with a task of embroidery in hand, while talking with a visitor—Old Dr. Mapleson—of persons and places now historical, and of manners and customs long since obsolete, which she could well remember. The good old lady was thus led on to tell of her first dancing-lesson, when she had on a pair of gold-coloured satin shoes with rosettes, and a purple sash round her waist, to be presented to the company at her father's house in Leicester-square. How the waiting hour before their arrival was beguiled with a little instruction of this kind by sweet Aunt Dorothy, who had finished dressing much sooner than the other ladies, and who tried to initiate young Missy in the steps of the courtly minuet, accompanied by the tuneful strains of Cousin Peter's ready violin! It pleased my great-grandmother to recall such incidents of her far-off childhood; and the girl who heard her speak of them, being her descendant of a second generation, repeated many of these fond recollections, forty years ago, to some other children in the home of my birth. O. P. Q.

Mr. J. S. Dugdale, of the Midland Circuit, and Recorder of Grantham, has been appointed to the Recordership of Birmingham, in succession to the late Mr. Adams.

GOING TO A CHRISTMAS PARTY A LONG TIME AGO.

When my great-grandmother was that little girl taking her first dancing-lesson, her mother used to be conveyed to the festive assembly at Lady Betty's, in Soho, by the vehicle formerly known as a Sedan chair. Indeed, I have myself seen this genteel convenience in frequent use, under the reign of his late Majesty William IV., in a certain provincial city of the West, where even gentlemen of robust bodily condition, wearing black velvet knee-breeches, and silk stockings with buckled pumps on their feet, would not disdain to be carried by a couple of sturdy porters. The one-horse cab had not then been invented; but there were two-horse hackney-coaches, which were both cumbersome and costly to hire, for the accommodation of a family party. It was the Sedan chair, a modification probably of the ancient litter, that seemed in those days, and in the old time before them, most available for a single street-passenger whose elegant dress must be protected from rain and mud. The name of this French contrivance was probably intended to be a compliment to the Grand Monarque upon one of his triumphs, or intended triumphs, in the wars on the Flemish frontier, at an early period of the last century. How greatly it was desiderated in London, as well as in Paris, with the grievous state of metropolitan thoroughfares at that time, we learn from Gay's amusing poem of "Trivia, or the Art of Walking the Streets;" and from many passing allusions in the writings of Pope, Swift, and Addison, and the practical Defoe. In the later time, of which Fielding, Smollett, and Richardson have left such vivid portraiture, and which is nearer to that of my respected ancestress, the watchmen and scavengers, in their different proper charges of street quiet and street cleanliness, had become more efficient; but the darkness, except in business quarters of the town, was a source of continual danger. Flambeaux, or torches of pinewood dipped in pitch or grease for better burning, were held by attendant "link-boys." O. P. Q.

"WILLIAM III. AT SEVEN YEARS OF AGE."

We can see by the large eyes, the feminine mouth and chin, the soft hair, and long, taper fingers of this portrait indications of their delicacy from which our King William III. may be said to have suffered through life. The picture was painted, in 1657, by Cornelius Jonson Van Ceulen, when the boy was seven years of age. In the original, which hangs in the National Portrait Gallery, the hair is dark brown and the eyes very dark blue. The ribbon of the order across his breast is of light blue, and the dress he wears is orange in colour, slashed with white satin. The buttons are white, and the lace which edges his collar and forms his cuffs is of the most dainty workmanship. A little above his wrists, his sleeves are loosely confined with a red ribbon, as was the fashion of the time; indeed, the whole costume is authoritative in that respect.

We need scarcely remind our readers that the subject of our remarks was the posthumous son of William, second Prince of Orange, grandson, paternally, of William the Silent, who was assassinated, and, maternally, of Charles I. of England, who died on the scaffold. He married Mary, daughter of James II. and his Queen, Anne Hyde, in 1677; landed at Torbay in November, 1688; and in February following, conjointly with his wife, accepted the sovereignty of these realms. He fought the Battle of the Boyne in the summer of 1690; and, after a dozen years of active life, controlling in a great measure the politics of western Europe, he was thrown from his horse and broke his collar-bone. A fortnight afterwards—viz., on March 8, 1702—he died, and was buried in Westminster Abbey.

RUSSIAN SKETCHES.

FINE ARTS.

BEHAM'S ENGRAVINGS AT THE BURLINGTON CLUB.

Hans Sebald Beham, of Nuremberg, is among the first of those German artists in whose works Gothic strength is tempered by Italian beauty. Sometimes we see in him the individuality, the fearless rendering of fact, the lingering over uncouth and often grotesque models, which characterised the pencil of his illustrious townsman, Albert Dürer; at other times the precise formality of his graver gives place to the flowing line of Italy, to the generous sweep of contour which we associate with classic beauty. Like Holbein, he has mediæval quaintness on the one side, and the suavity of the renaissance on the other; and, like the master he is, the practice of both comes familiarly to his hand.

To have acquired this practical knowledge of the amenities of Southern art it was by no means necessary that he should have followed his elder brother, Bartel Beham, to Italy. The commercial intercourse between the two countries was at this time very great; and, when the return waggons and long line of sumpter horses belonging to the Fuggers and the other merchant princes of Augsburg and Nuremberg zigzagged their way down the northern slopes of the Alps, the fabrics of the south and the spices of the Orient were not the only wares with which they were laden. These great mine-owners, bankers, and merchants had a speculative eye for other things besides the material objects of commerce; and packed away carefully in their homeward-bound caravans often came to them the precious products of Florentine and Venetian art.

It was from the study of such imported works that men like Beham and Holbein became acquainted with Italian practice. During the first half of his life John Sebald Beham, who was born in 1500, lived and laboured in his native city of Nuremberg; but afterwards he carried on his profession at Frankfurt. His woodcuts and copper-plate engravings are numerous. The former are free and bold, and exhibit in the main a Gothic spirit; the latter are much more careful in composition, and the figures, in their arrangement and in the air of their heads, have often a beauty and delicacy quite Titianesque. He deals freely, moreover, with the undraped model; and the correctness of his drawing and the daintiness of his finish—the figures often not exceeding a couple of inches in size—have called forth the unqualified admiration of the many connoisseurs invited to their gallery by the members of the club.

It is but proper that the contributors to a collection so instructive in itself, combining as it does the characteristics of two epochs, should be known to the public, and we rejoice in this opportunity of publishing their names. The Burlington Fine-Arts Club have never put themselves forward in any ostentatious way as great æsthetic reformers, yet they do more good than any other art society that could be named. Their catalogues invariably are authoritative, scholarly even in their very get-up, and they give such an exposition of the works under inspection that it is the visitor's own fault if he leaves the gallery without having fairly mastered the characteristics of the school or period.

A catalogue of the present collection is now, we are happy to say, being compiled; and the men who have so kindly made such a thing necessary are W. Mitchell, Esq., who sends over a dozen prints; W. Bell Scott, Esq., who contributes about thirty; while to R. Fisher, Esq., we are indebted for more than a hundred; and to the Rev. W. J. Loftie, for more than two hundred examples, and many of them in the choicest states.

The subjects chosen by Beham are those belonging to the period in which he lived, and in a general way come under two heads—viz., Scriptural and mythological. In the former, with the exception, perhaps, of his Adam and Eve—compositions which are among the most Italian-looking things in the collection—the quaint mediæval spirit is retained; and in the latter, the artist strives after the sweetness and beauty of the South. Nor is there any lack of allegorical subjects—personifications of the planets, of fortune, misfortune, and the like; and genre episodes, designs for architectural capitals and masques, and the coarse frolics of the village festival come all readily to his hand. Altogether, the exhibition is one of great interest, and the master illustrated is precisely one of those whose acquaintance the ordinary art-lover has little chance of making unless through the friendly medium of such an institution as the Burlington Fine-Arts Club.

In further connection with the "Burlington," we have much pleasure in announcing that the works of that most accomplished landscape-painter, the late J. S. Raven, whose death the art-world has so much reason to deplore, are now being collected, and will be exhibited in the gallery of the club about the middle of next month.

In the meantime the committee are extending their collection of Beham prints, and adding to them others executed in the same school.

THE GUARDI GALLERY, HAYMARKET.

The second winter exhibition of this gallery, which is now open, consists of about one hundred cabinet works, which have been selected by Mr. Martin Colnaghi from the studios of Continental artists of European renown. The famous "Frozen River," by L. Munthe—the only picture of gallery size in the collection—fills the far end of the well-lit saloon. One can easily understand why this picture created such a sensation at the Vienna International Exhibition, when looking at its great level waste of ice and snow trodden on by quaint crows and gambolled over by boisterous boys, while the whole scene becomes weirdlike under the long streak of yellow light that creeps low down on the far horizon and presages the fall of the winter gloaming. It is undoubtedly Munthe's chef-d'œuvre. But it is for small cabinet pictures that this gallery is chiefly noted; and the artist, for a knowledge of whom we are entirely indebted to Mr. Colnaghi, is the Spaniard, Domingo. His works are on a similar scale to those of the French Meissonier, and embrace similar subjects. In manipulative dexterity, power of modelling, and knowledge of chiaroscuro the Spaniard stands on the same level with the Frenchman; while in absolute subtlety and delicacy, both as to colour and light and shade, the former, we think, has the advantage. Almost any of the half score examples now in Mr. Colnaghi's gallery will on examination bear out our remarks; but if one picture substantiates them more than another it is the one named "Au Désespoir," showing a cavalier, in pale green attire, reading, with sad countenance, the letter in his hand. His sword and plumed hat are on a chair beside him, while his violin lies foreshortened on the table before us. The strength, and breadth, and daintiness of this work in miniature it is impossible to laud too highly, and the English art-public are certainly obliged to Mr. Colnaghi for introducing to them so consummate a master.

The council of the London Art-Union, encouraged by the great popularity which attended the issue of Stanfield's "Tilbury Fort" and of Cooke's "Dutch Trawlers," have wisely resolved to follow up their success by the production of another marine subject. The artist whom they have selected has gained laurels on these equal to those of almost any painter that could be named, albeit he is no Royal Academician, and works in water instead of oil. The veteran Edward Duncan is, as our readers are aware, a distinguished member of the Water-Colour Society, and his "Return of the Life-Boat" is one of the most important pictures he ever painted. In the immediate foreground are some seagulls hovering over drifting spars to the left, while on the extreme right stands, on the surf-beaten shore, a group of eager people, whose movements are directed by a man on a grey horse. The centre of the picture, which is also the focus of interest, is filled with great masses of broken waves, on the crest of one of which the life-boat, with its precious freight from the brig which we see foundering in the offing to the left, rides triumphantly towards the land. The fishermen on the shore have already caught the rope thrown to them by the man at the prow of the boat, and we can see that a hundred ready hands will soon haul her high and dry on the beach. Such an episode is common enough on our eastern coast, but it was never so nobly set forth till now. Up against the murky sky flash the white wings of the circling seagulls; the pier and lighthouse gleam grey in the stormy distance, and the ruins of Whitby Abbey look shadowy on the heights above. All this grand massing of light and dark and nice proportioning of quantities have been ably followed in line by the cunning graver of A. Willmore, who in this respect has made "The Return of the Life-Boat" a worthy pendant to his "Dutch Trawlers." The original picture will be one of the chief prizes, and every subscriber of one guinea before the end of March will receive, besides a chance of a prize, an impression of this fine plate.

At the distribution of the prizes to the students of the Manchester School of Art on the 21st inst. Sir Henry Cole, C.B., remarked that one of the chief functions of schools of art was, in his opinion, to train workmen to reproduce works of art for the benefit of the public. The problem was to unite the artist and the workman—to gratify, not one person only, but millions; and this, he maintained, was being successfully done. Fine art as applied to industry had made great, and would make still greater, strides in this country, conducing enormously to the pleasure, the material prosperity, and the elevation of the people. He also strongly urged that the ratepayers of Manchester should get the Corporation to undertake the work of forming and maintaining an art-gallery for the city.

ILLUSTRATED HISTORIES.

Though not specially intended for Christmas or New-Year's gifts, there are some books here claiming notice for their pictorial illustrations and adornment, as well as for their merits as literary works. The bound yearly volumes of several popular histories, which have before appeared in monthly or weekly issues, now demand a just recognition. Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin are the leading publishers of these not less instructive than attractive historical compilations lately made current in a convenient serial form. They are fortunate in having obtained the literary services of such accomplished scholars and writers as Professor Henry Morley, Mr. Edmund Ollier, and others perfectly competent to deal with the subjects intrusted to them. The History of the United States, by Mr. Ollier, is completed in three quarto volumes, the first two of which have already been received with due commendations, and we have now to express our unabated satisfaction with the third. It should be remembered that the first volume comprised the whole of the colonial period in North America; the settlements of Virginia, of Massachusetts and New England, of Maryland, Delaware, Pennsylvania, and South Carolina, in the seventeenth century; and their progress to the date of the conquest of Canada, about the end of George II.'s reign. The second volume was fully occupied with the history of the Revolution, in which the disputes between the English colonists and the Government of George III., and the consequent War of Independence, resulting in the establishment of the Federal Republic, were related with laudable candour and impartiality, and in a vigorous narrative style. In the third and last volume, beginning at the deaths of Adams and Jefferson in 1826, which marked the end of the Revolutionary era, Mr. Ollier traverses the half-century of modern American history, including the great question of Slavery, the Abolitionist movement, the conflicts between the North and the South, the Secession and the Civil War. There is certainly no other book written in England which is to be compared with Mr. Ollier's for its value in this respect, as presenting an adequate account of those grand transactions, the American Revolution of 1775, and the War for the Union, with the Abolition of Slavery, from 1861 to 1865. We consider it of the highest social and political importance that Englishmen should learn to think correctly and fairly, as too many of us have not yet been taught to do, of the circumstances and motives which determined the public conduct of English Americans in those momentous struggles of their prosperous commonwealth against its most dangerous foes. Mr. Ollier has performed his task in a manner which proves him to be not only a friend of both nations, or rather both the kindred branches of one nation, but a friend of humanity, of justice and freedom. We trust that Messrs. Cassell and Co. will find a large sale for this work on the other side of the Atlantic, as well as in our own country.

The second volume of Professor Morley's Library of English Literature, a work produced by the same enterprising publishers, has remarkable unity and originality of interest, and forms in itself a highly acceptable book. It is entitled, Illustrations of English Religion, and consists of brief historical, biographical, and critical notices, with selected prose or verse specimens, of all the notable writers upon devotional or theological subjects in our language. They extend from the Early English, sometimes called Anglo-Saxon, of Caedmon and King Alfred, down through "Piers Plowman" and Wiclif, Fisher, Tyndale, Latimer, and Knox; Hooker, Donne, Andrewes, Giles Fletcher, and others; Fuller, George Herbert, and Jeremy Taylor; Howo, Baxter, Fox, and Bunyan, and so on, with Butler, Paley, and those of the eighteenth century, to the Chalmers, Newman, Keble, Pusey, Arnold, Maurice, and others, of our own day. This noble series, which is, in our judgment, unequalled on the whole by the religious literature of any foreign nation, seems to deserve study for its importance as a monument of literature, as well as a consistent testimony on behalf of essential Christian truth. The editor is careful not to obtrude his own persuasions, but we should say that his choice and arrangement of so many samples of excellent divinity will be gratifying to liberal and enlightened members of the Broad Church. It is worthy of remark that Tennyson's "In Memoriam," not too far removed from the works of Dean Stanley and of Frederick Robertson, is made to close the historical series. This would indicate a change in the temper of the present age, from the period when John Foster wrote his essay "On the Aversion of Men of Taste to Evangelical Religion."

The inexhaustible printing and publishing establishment of Belle Sauvage-yard continues also to bring forth the History of Protestantism, by the Rev. Dr. Wylie, copiously illustrated, like those above mentioned, with appropriate woodcuts. The third volume, which has just appeared, treats of the great struggle for religious liberty in the Netherlands, contemporary with the reign of our Queen Elizabeth, the persecutions in Poland, Bohemia, Hungary, and Transylvania, the Thirty Years' War in Germany, the suppression of the Huguenots in France and the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes by Louis XIV., the Reformation in England, the Papist reaction under Queen Mary, and the Elizabethan policy, secured by the defeat of the Spanish Armada, in defence of our national Church of England; also, the history of the Church of Scotland, from Hamilton and Wishart, precursors of John Knox, through the troublous times of the Covenanters, to the Revolution of 1688, and the final establishment of the Presbyterian system. These are passages in the development of European Christendom, with which every intelligent and serious-minded person ought to be acquainted, and Dr. Wylie's narrative is well adapted to convey that knowledge to the general reader.

The fifth volume of Old and New London, which was begun, several years ago, by the late Mr. G. W. Thornbury, and is continued by Mr. E. Walford, has come out, likewise, under the auspices of Messrs. Cassell and Co. The third and fourth volumes were occupied, nominally, with "Westminster and the Western Suburbs," but they found enough to do between Temple Bar and Whitehall and the Abbey, St. James's and Piccadilly, with Covent-garden, Lincoln's-inn-fields, Oxford-street, and Bloomsbury; so that the western suburbs did not then get their share of description. This portion of the programme is now discharged by Mr. Walford in the fifth volume, which comprises "the Western and Northern Suburbs." Belgravia and Pimlico, Knightsbridge, Chelsea, Kensington, and Brompton, Tyburnia and Paddington, Bayswater and Notting-hill, the Underground Railway, which coincides with that part of the circle round London, Kilburn, St. John's-wood, Regent's Park, Chalk Farm, and Camden Town, with Somers Town, Agar Town, and Euston-square; then Holloway, Highgate, and Hampstead, Hornsey and Hackney, Stoke Newington, and Tottenham, are successively dispatched with entertaining chapters of minute topography and literary or personal reminiscences, which will be agreeable to readers of antiquarian taste. The London of a past generation is sure to be interesting, if not to the Londoners of the next age, at least to the fresh new-comers from provincial towns and shires, whose imagination is apt to be strongly impressed with the superior genius, wit, and grace of metropolitan society in the old time before them. The engravings in this volume, which are very abundant, help much to enliven its pages.

The second volume, finishing the work, of Cassell's History of India, by Mr. James Grant, must also be acknowledged. Its frontispiece is a portrait of her Majesty Queen Victoria, Empress of India, and the narrative is brought down to her adoption of that title; indeed, a few months later, to the measures recently taken for the relief of the famine in Madras and Bombay. The Burmese War of 1825, the administrations of Lord Amherst and Lord William Bentinck, the mistaken policy in Scinde and Cabul, the Afghan war, Lord Auckland's ill-luck and Lord Ellenborough's triumph, the conquest of Scinde by Sir Charles Napier, Sir Henry Hardinge's Sikh war and conquest of the Punjab, with other transactions which elderly men can still recollect, fill about two hundred pages. Lord Dalhousie's busy Administration, from 1848 to 1856, with the perilous annexation of Oude, and other daring acts of power, is soon after followed by the Sepoy Mutiny and the great revolt of native princes and nobles. The tragedies of Delhi and Cawnpore, the memorable campaigns of Havelock and Outram, the defence of the Residency at Lucknow, the siege of that city and of Delhi, the military exploits of Lord Clyde, Sir Hope Grant, Sir Hugh Rose, and others, are recounted by Mr. James Grant with his usual animation. Lord Canning's government of India, that of Lord Elgin, and that of Sir John Lawrence, but more particularly Lord Mayo's, with his valuable reforms and economic improvements, are in turn described. In the period under the rule of Lord Northbrook there is the famine in Orissa and Lower Bengal, and there is the Prince of Wales's visit to India. The more recent transactions and experiences of British government in that country, since Lord Lytton was set over it, find place towards the end of this record. We cannot say that it is a work of profound and accurate research, or that it gives a full and complete account of India; but it may be read with interest by those who are content with a superficial knowledge of the subject.

BURKE'S PEERAGE AND BARONETAGE.

The appearance of the fortieth edition of Sir Bernard Burke's well-known work presents a favourable opportunity for our usual retrospect of the hereditary ranks of this kingdom, comprising as they do "the most ancient, the most historic, and most patriotic nobility of Europe." From the volume before us we learn that seventeen peers and forty-two Baronets have died in the interval between Dec. 1, 1876, and Dec. 1, 1877. The whole number of peers, it must be remembered, is 574; of Baronets, 861. Thus, there has been one death in every thirty-four peers and one in every twenty Baronets. The peers who have died have been the Marquis of Northampton, the Earls of Bandon, Lindsey, Orkney, Shrewsbury, and St. Germans; Viscounts Gage, Canterbury, and Guilford, and Lords Boston, Ongle, Sudeley, Erskine, Ormathwaite, Grantley, Headley, and De Clifford. One extinction has occurred in the Peerage—viz., the Irish barony of Ongle, and only one in the Baronetage—viz., Tyrell. In point of fact, the remarkable incidents in the Peerage and Baronetage have during the past twelve months been inconsiderable, although we must not forget the marriage of the first Peer of the realm. "This event," says Sir Bernard, "celebrated with befitting ceremonial interested all classes of the community, and elicited a spontaneous and cordial expression of popular feeling, arising not only from the pride every Englishman takes in the prosperity of the most illustrious perhaps of our great historic houses, but also from the high character and personal worth of the Duke of Norfolk." Curiously enough, 1877 has not added a single new title to either Peerage or Baronetage; and the Committee for Privileges has done little or nothing. The only question of importance that has been raised refers to the ancient earldom of Mar, and the report of the special committee seems to suggest that the nephew and heir of the late Earl of Mar, John Francis Erskine Goodeve Erskine, may still urge his right to that ancient earldom.

Having said so much relating to the incidents of the Peerage and Baronetage, it is but fair to add a few words as to its standard authority, Burke's Peerage and Baronetage, now in its fortieth edition. It is obvious that on this new edition extraordinary care has been bestowed; completeness and accuracy have been fully attained; the Key has been augmented by the insertion of married daughters of Baronets; the Royal lineage has been thoroughly revised, and a tabular pedigree annexed, which shows at a glance the ancestry of our Royal House; and Precedence, which so often gives rise to perplexing questions and disputes, is explained and simplified in a special chapter. Burke's Peerage and Baronetage contains 1441 closely-printed pages, narrates the genealogical histories of some 1500 families, comprises about 150,000 dates, and includes, it is computed, the names of more than 200,000 persons. Need we say more in its commendation than that this vast mass of details has been brought before the reader in a most attractive and befitting form?

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

"Lyrical Illustrations of Modern English Poets," by John Barnett (Hutchings and Romer). This is a welcome reprint of a work by the composer of the operas "The Mountain Sylph," "Farinelli," "Fair Rosamond," &c., which attracted very favourable attention more than forty years ago, and has long been out of print. Some of the pieces are in the style of an elaborate scena, others of a simpler form; all being characterised by expressive power and charm of melody—the vocal writing being that of one who is thoroughly acquainted with the singer's art; while the pianoforte accompaniments are highly picturesque and varied, and frequently suggestive of orchestral effects. Three songs, composed about the same period as the others, have been added to the present collection, which is calculated for soprano, contralto, tenor, and bass voices—the particular voice being specified at the head of each song. The poets illustrated are Byron, Shelley, Wordsworth, T. K. Hervey, Sheridan Knowles, and Leigh Hunt. This volume, containing fifteen charming compositions, published at the price of six shillings, can scarcely fail to meet with a large sale.

"The Old Organist" is an expressive and characteristic song by Ciro Pinsuti, to words by H. B. Farnie—published by Messrs. J. B. Cramer and Co., who have also issued "The Lay of the Chicken" ("The Notaries' Chant"), the popular two-part song from Offenbach's opéra-bouffe, "The Crooks"—and "Gran Pa," ballad from the same piece. "The Fisher's Daughter," song by John Cheehire (Messrs. J. B. Cramer and Co.), has a prominent, tripping melody, which will please, and is easy of execution.

Technical Guide to touch, fingering, and execution, on the Pianoforte, by Lindsay Sloper (Ashdown and Parry). This is a compendious and cheap elementary work on the art of pianoforte playing by an eminent pianist, who has here put forth a large amount of valuable instruction, didactic and practical.

Three musical sketches by Sir W. Sterndale Bennett. These charming pieces, entitled respectively "The Lake," "The Millstream," and "The Fountain," form number 5 of the re-issue of the composer's pianoforte works now in course of publication by Mr. J. Williams, of Berners-street. The form is full music size, and the engraving and printing are worthy of the compositions.

"Mine Own," song by Henry Gadsby, has much melodious expression combined with simplicity of character. Mr. G. B. Allen's song, "Far from home," is also a good specimen of the sentimental style, as is Mr. Walter Austin's song "The past is but a troubled dream." All three are published by Messrs. Metzler and Co.

Messrs. Duff and Stewart publish "Jenny's Wedding," by Louisa Gray, and "Rappelle Toi," by P. de Faye, two characteristic vocal pieces. The same publishers have also issued "Danse Grotesque," "Danse des Bayadères," and "Morcean à la Cracovienne," by Michael Watson, all brilliant and effective, but not difficult, pianoforte pieces.

Six transcriptions for the organ by George Shinn (Novello, Ewer, and Co.) consist of extracts from the works of classical composers, well arranged as short voluntaries for the "king of instruments." "Sweet Sounds" is the title of six short pieces for the pianoforte by Arthur Lester, published by Forsyth Brothers. They consist of a series of bagatelles, each with a distinctive and characteristic title, very easy of execution, and calculated to interest juvenile students. The same publishers have issued "Twelve easy Transcriptions for Violin and Piano," by Siegfried Jacoby. These are adaptations of well-known themes, arranged so as to be suitable to very limited powers of execution.

Of a similar character to the last-named publications are "Morceaux Faciles, pour le Violin, avec accompagnement de Piano, par Otto Booth" (Weekes and Co.). Here the violin has rather the predominance; still, however, with the avoidance of difficulties.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

A large number of prize-distributions took place last week.

The annual distribution of prizes to the members of the London Irish took place on the 21st inst. at St. James's Hall. There was a large number of prizes, of the value of between £500 and £600. Lieutenant-Colonel Ward, in opening the proceedings, said that the London Irish Regiment had done its duty well. Four thousand and eighty members had been enrolled, and of those 896 now constituted the corps, leaving 3184 who had passed through the ranks, very many of them well drilled and available in case of an emergency. This year they had 856 efficient, and 815 were present at the inspection. The Hon. Colonel Fielding, the inspecting officer, had reported most favourably of them. Lady Harriet Ashley, the daughter of the Colonel, the Marquis of Donegall, distributed the prizes. The gold challenge medal and badge, given by the Marquis of Donegall to the best shot in the battalion, was won by Private Rodgers; the Daubney Challenge Cup (an antique silver cup, originally presented by his Royal Highness the late Duke of Cumberland to his Volunteer Regiment of Sharpshooters in 1811), given by Major-General Sir H. C. B. Daubney, K.C.B., was won by Captain Despard, and the Burke Challenge Cup by Colour-Sergeant Watts. At the conclusion of the distribution the room was cleared for dancing, which was vigorously indulged in until a late hour.

Lady Abinger presented the prizes to the members of the Tower Hamlets Brigade in their commodious drill-hall at Hoxton. Lieutenant-Colonel Mapleson said that the brigade had, during the past twelve months, continued to progress in every way: their enrolled efficient strength now reaching 773. In the year 201 recruits had joined, whilst the non-efficients had considerably decreased. The principal prize-winners were Sergeant J. Sage, who, in addition to other trophies, secured the Regimental Cup; Private A. Ridgway, Private E. Tempest, Private J. Shaw, Private Curnow, and Private W. Sage. A ball closed the proceedings.

The prizes of the 4th Middlesex (West London) were distributed last Saturday evening at St. George's Hall by the commanding officer, Lieutenant-Colonel Lord Truro. His Lordship stated that the members on the roll of the regiment had increased from 664 to 676, while the non-efficients had also increased from 47 to 81. The Challenge Vase is held for the year by Private G. Walker, No. 6 company, who also won the 1st battalion prize.

The distribution of prizes to the 29th (North) Middlesex took place at St. Pancras Vestry-Hall, Colonel Logan, C.B., commanding officer of the 50th Sub-district, presiding and presenting the prizes. Lieutenant-Colonel W. J. Brown opened the proceedings. In 1877 the corps numbered 683 efficient and only seven inefficient. He hoped that next year they would be up to their maximum state of 800 strong, and every one efficient.

The 36th Middlesex had their prizes presented at St. James's Hall by their commanding officer, Lieutenant-Colonel Gordon Ives. The chief winners were Private Campbell, Colour-Sergeant Rowland, Colour-Sergeant B. G. Barter, Corporal Mandy, Sergeant Davis, Private Parey, Private Palmer, Sergeant Heath, and Private Turner (best shot). In a short address, Colonel Ives mentioned that at present the Paddington corps were the strongest in London, they having 1000 men enrolled. After a few words from Colonel Cecil Ives, Royal Horse Guards, Colonel Moncrieff, Scots' Guards, Lieutenant-Colonel Malet, Lieutenant-Colonel Hope, V.C., and Lieutenant-Colonel Du Plat Taylor, the business was brought to an end, and the ball began.

Sir A. Luak, M.P., presided at the distribution of prizes to the 39th Middlesex in their drill-hall at Penton-place. Lieutenant-Colonel Radcliffe, in his opening speech, stated that the total enrolled strength was 800, all of whom are efficient. The total capitation grant earned during the year was £1382, the corps having reached their full establishment. He had applied to the authorities for an increase, which was granted, and they had now nine instead of eight companies. The chairman, after a few remarks upon the greatly increased efficiency of the corps, presented the prizes, the principal winners being Lieutenant-Colonel Radcliffe, Major Young, Corporal Gillham (best shot), Major Morris, and Sergeant Wolfe. After the ceremony a dramatic performance took place.

The shooting prizes of the 46th Middlesex, commanded by Colonel Routledge, were distributed by Mrs. Routledge at St. James's Hall. The commanding officer stated that the corps had increased in efficiency during the past year, the efficient numbering 525 out of 540. The Hawkshaw Challenge Cup was won by Sergeant J. T. Mackay, the Company Challenge Cup by B company, and the Badge by Private W. Edwards, the Regimental Badge by Sub-Lieutenant Raw, and the first grand aggregate by the same officer.

Colonel Gardiner, the commanding officer of the 1st Surrey, presided at the distribution of prizes to the members of that corps at their head-quarters in Camberwell. After touching on some changes in the uniform and minor details with reference to the regiment, the Colonel gave some figures, which showed that since 1874 the enrolled strength of the corps had gradually increased from 360 to 406, the efficient in the same time rising from 282 to 321. The prizes were presented by Mrs. Gardiner, the chief winners being Armoury-Sergeant Watkins (the champion shot of the battalion), who took the Shanghai Challenge Cup, the Ladies' Challenge Cup, and the Irvine Challenge Trophy; Private Hancock, Private Foster, Private Sparks, Corporal White, Lieutenant Nevill, and Private Gunston.

The 19th Surrey had their prizes presented to them at the Horns, Kennington, by Madame Stapylton, wife of Major Stapylton. Colonel Labrow, who presided, in his opening speech said their present strength was 611, of whom 565 were efficient, this being the largest number they had ever returned, the corps by this means earning the greatest amount of capitation grant that it had ever received, a result owing greatly to the staff of the regiment. The principal winners were Private Foster, Colour-Sergeant Sexby, Private Clifford, and Colour-Sergeant Russell.

DR. SCHLIEMANN'S COLLECTION.

The antiquities found at Hisarlik, on the plains of Troy, by Dr. Schliemann during his remarkable excavations, have been arranged for exhibition, and are now on view, in one of the courts of the South Kensington Museum. Into the much-versed question of the antiquity and historical value of these remains we do not enter: it being our desire simply to give some notion of the number and variety of the objects to be seen, filling more than twenty large cases, which form but a part of the whole disinterred by Dr. Schliemann. We give on the next page illustrations of some articles in this exhibition, so deeply interesting to art-students and archaeologists; and append here a few remarks on the articles engraved written by the artist who drew them.

Selected from this remarkable find, we illustrate a globular bottle of hammered gold (Fig. 9) weighing 1 lb. troy, nearly 6 in. in height, and 5½ in. in diameter. Fig. 10 represents a cup of pure gold, weighing 7½ oz., 3½ in. high, and 3 in. broad. Fig. 13 is another cup of pure gold, weighing 1 lb. 6 oz.; it is in the form of a boat, and has two spouts: one of these lips may have been used for drinking, the other for pouring out a libation to the gods: it is constructed of cast gold, with the handles fused on it. Similar vessels are still used in China. Fig. 8 is a small cup of electrum, containing four parts of gold to one of silver. Fig. 15 represents two sizes of six pieces of hammered silver in the form of knife blades, one end rounded, and the other in the form of a crescent. The sizes of the larger are 8½ in. by 2 in., and they weigh a little under 6 oz. The smaller ones weigh a trifle over 3½ oz. They are probably Homeric talents. Fig. 7 is one of two small beautiful silver vases, with protuberances for rings for suspension; it is nearly 8 in. high, with its hat-shaped lid, and 3½ in. in diameter across the bulge. Fig. 11 represents one of three vases, rather above 7 ft. in height and 8 ft. in diameter. In one of these vases were found some ladies' gold ornaments (Figs. 1, 2, and 3) and two gold diadems. Figs. 4, 5, 6 are three of four golden earrings. Fig. 16 is three of fifty-six gold rings, Fig. 17 being a portion of 8750 small gold beads or rings perforated, and buttons obviously belonging to different ornaments. Fig. 14 is the remains of a copper key: it is probable that some members of the family of King Priam hurriedly packed the treasure, and, not having time to take the key out in consequence of conflagration or the enemy, were obliged to abandon the chest, which was soon covered with red ashes and stones from the adjoining palace to the depth of five or six feet.

In our next Number we hope to illustrate some of the Trojan weapons and pottery.

For the following particulars of the collection we are indebted to the Times:—

The objects shown from the lowest and most ancient city—one of four settlements or cities—consist first of pottery and fragments of terra-cotta, chiefly of a greyish-black colour, ornamented with graceful patterns in white. They are of a better quality than any found in the higher strata. Some specimens are of a brilliant black, red, or brown colour, and the delicate patterns have been cut out and filled in with some white substance. Only one specimen of painted pottery was found in this stratum, and one in the city above—Troy proper. Vases of various shapes and sizes have also been found in the lowest stratum, but, as a rule, of far inferior workmanship to the fragments of ornamental terra-cotta, though the forms are in all cases graceful. These rougher specimens may have been for use among the poorer, the more decorated among the richer inhabitants. There are a few fragments from vases of an immense thickness and size, probably wine-coolers. Double vases are not uncommon, and vases with very long, narrow lips, peculiarly convenient for pouring out liquids. One curious vase from this lowest city is in the form of a pig. One skeleton of a woman was found at a depth of 42 ft., with some simple gold ornaments, which are shown in one of the cases—a finger ring, three earrings, a dress pin, and some gold beads. The gold is nearly pure. Both the ornaments and the skull (also shown) bear marks of fire. Another case contains some of the stone implements found in this earliest settlement. Knives of obsidian, arrow-heads, hatchets of stone and flint, and metal implements are also shown from the same stratum; copper nails, knives, and bracelets, silver pins, and a crescent-shaped ornament in silver. In one case are various moulds in mica schist for casting the metal implements.

One object appears to have been found in all the four cities—i.e., the so-called whorls, round pieces, chiefly of terra-cotta, with a hole through the middle. According to Dr. Schliemann, these were not used for spinning, hardly any of them showing traces of friction or usage, but were votive offerings. They are ornamented with suns, stars, altars, animals, and various unknown symbols. Specimens of these whorls almost fill one case; they are arranged according to their patterns.

It was in June, 1873, that Dr. Schliemann found the gold treasure occupying the two central cases of the Court. It was at a depth of 28 ft.—therefore in Troy proper. The eye is at once attracted by the two large head-dresses of fine gold worn so as to fall over the forehead, with the long pendant on each side covering the ears. Close by are numerous chains of gold beads and a large collection of rings and buttons, which were all found together in a silver jug, four earrings, or rather ear-tassels, nearly 4 in. long, a golden fillet and gold bracelets, in some cases welded together by the conflagration which destroyed this city. Above, in the same cases, are a bottle and vases of pure gold, and a remarkable gold cup weighing 1½ lb. troy, in the form of a ship, with a handle at each side, and a mouth for drinking out of at each end. This vessel is of cast gold, and the handles have been fused on to it. The other objects are of wrought gold. Several silver goblets are also shown in these two cases, and six objects like knife-blades of purest silver. These Dr. Schliemann conjectures to have been the Homeric Talents. One cup is in electrum—i.e., four parts gold to one of silver. Battle-axes and lance-heads of copper belong also to this treasure, and a large copper shield and chaldron. Three large silver dishes were too much injured in excavating to be exhibited. One curious bent piece of copper, with a silver vase soldered to one end by the conflagration, and two fixed wheels at the other, Dr. Schliemann thinks may have been a hasp of the chest containing the treasure. The key of the chest, distorted by fire, is shown. The chest had perished, but the objects composing the treasure were all found packed together in a rectangular mass, and the copper key lying close by them.

It is impossible to mention all the smaller objects belonging to this city, such as ivory lyres and flutes, a lion-headed sceptre-handle of fine crystal, combs of stone, terra-cotta brush-handles, copper weapons, and stone and bone implements of all kinds, which will be found in one of the cases; but the terra-cotta vases deserve special notice for their number, size, and beauty of form. The largest have curious wing-shaped handles, with covers like a crown or diadem. The tall, slender, double-handled vases, mostly of a brilliant red colour, collected together in one case, are singularly graceful. They are round below, so that they can only stand on their mouths. A few vases, with the owl's face on the covers, which Dr. Schliemann considers as proving the worship at Troy of Pallas Athene, were found in this city, but they are more abundant in the higher strata. A man's skull is shown, found near the treasure.

The visitor cannot but be struck by the various stages of civilisation shown in the diverse objects apparently belonging to one period—delicate gold ornaments and silver goblets, graceful vases of fine terra-cotta and lyres of ivory, side by side with stone, flint, and bone implements as rough as any found in the Swiss lacustrine dwellings. It is difficult, without very detailed plans of the excavations, to account for these incongruities. In the specimens from the two highest cities we find a few forms of vases not met with in the lower settlements, as, for instance, one in the shape of a bugle, on two feet; a small vase standing on three feet, with one handle and two ears; cup-handles in black terra-cotta in the shape of an ox's head, and the fragment of a vessel shaped like a horse's head. The most curiously marked of the whorls belong to these two upper strata, either flat discs, with two holes and some sort of potter's stamp on them, or globes, divided into eight compartments, each with a separate symbol. These markings are often filled in with white clay, and must have been engraved while the clay was soft. As already stated, most of the vases with the owl-faced covers, which the visitor will find grouped together in one or two cases, belong to these upper cities.

DR. SCHLIEMANN'S EXCAVATIONS IN THE TROAD.

On former occasions, in our notice of Dr. Schliemann's book on "Troy and its Remains," and in other articles, we entered fully into the subject of these excavations, of which we give an Engraving on page 629. As early as 1870 Dr. Schliemann made some preliminary excavations on the Hill of Hisarlik, an elevated plateau of about eighty feet above the plain of Troy, but he was then forced to suspend his operations for more than a year, while waiting for the necessary firman from the Turkish Government authorising him to continue the explorations and forcing the private proprietors to part with the ground at a lawful price. All through the fine weather of 1872 and 1873 Dr. Schliemann persevered in his labour, which was carried on entirely at his own expense, the Turkish Government even obliging him to pay the salary of the official employed by him to watch his proceedings. During these months Dr. Schliemann discovered the remains of four settlements or cities, one below the other, besides the Greek colony of the time of Alexander the Great. Of this colony he shows at South Kensington a very spirited metope of Apollo and four horses, and some small terra-cotta figures. It is, however, with the four ancient cities, and chiefly with the second from the virgin soil, that we are concerned. Roughly speaking, the two most recent settlements (below the Greek colony) extend from just below the surface to a depth of 23 ft. The third city, which Dr. Schliemann calls Troy proper, Ilium, where he found the so-called Priam treasure, reaches to 33 ft. below the surface, and the most ancient to a depth of 50 ft., or in some places to nearly 60 ft. These four cities are separated from each other by layers of ashes and other marks of conflagration.

1, 2, 3. Gold Head-dresses. 4, 5, 6. Gold Earrings. 7. Silver Vase, with Lid. 8. Cup, mixture of Gold and Silver. 9. Gold Bottle. 10. Gold Cup.
11. Silver Vase (much charred). 12. Silver Cup. 13. Gold Drinking-Vessel with Two Handles. 14. Copper Key of Wooden Box containing the Treasure.
15. Pieces of Pure Silver. 16. Various Gold Ornaments. 17. Selection from numerous small gold objects found amongst the Treasure.

NEW BOOKS.

Seldom, indeed, is a book recommended to the world, and recommended apparently upon the best grounds, on such high authority as belongs to Dr. Georg Schweinfurth, who has contributed a prefatory and commendatory notice to the large volume entitled Upper Egypt: Its People and Its Products, by C. B. Klunzinger, M.D. (Blackie and Son), a work which is almost, if not quite, unique—not, perhaps, in the whole of its matter, but in its manner. The author's qualifications for his task are of the first order, as will be readily seen from the following statements. From 1863 to 1875 he resided constantly, with but few breaks, "at the little Upper Egyptian seaport of Koseir, on the Red Sea." And in what capacity did he reside? As "sanitary or quarantine doctor, appointed by the Egyptian Government;" and he was not quite buried in the little town, but "was also much occupied, both on private and official business, in the neighbouring portion of the Nile Valley." Moreover, he is not only a physician, but also a naturalist and a student of language, besides being a "friend of humanity;" so that there is variety as well as novelty and copiousness in his narrative of experience acquired "among fishermen and mariners, among pilgrims and camel-drivers, among petty dealers and lowly scribes." This enumeration of the classes among which he, without eschewing what is called superior society when he could get it, was chiefly thrown, will be sufficient to indicate the sort of information which is principally to be looked for in his pages. It is, in fact, the information which is, for the most part, conspicuous by absence in the general run of books about Egypt. We have already been regaled, even to nausea, with entertaining accounts of Egypt, as it appears to the superficial, though acute, observer of the habits and manners prevalent among the upper and highest classes of modern Egyptians, or to the pleasure-seeking or health-seeking voyager by dahabiyeh, or to the curious traveller on the borders of the Suez Canal. But the great Lane himself, as Dr. Schweinfurth observes, though his well-known work may still be, so far as it goes, incomparable, unapproachable, incapable of improvement, un-susceptible of correction, "concerned himself in the main with such conditions of life as exist in a large town only;" and, whilst his "field of observation was the old and splendid city of the Caliphs, with the innumerable festivals and the pleasure-loving populace of an absolute monarch's capital," another "weak point in his work is its insufficient description of the Egyptian Christians." Dr. Klunzinger is more of a Baedeker; and he has undertaken to give "a descriptive account of the manners, customs, superstitions, and occupations of the people of the Nile Valley, the Desert, and the Red Sea Coast, with sketches of the natural history and geology." He has undertaken, in fact, to supply a want. And there was still room for what he has done, though grateful remembrance suggests that late publications, such as those of Mr. McCoan and Mr. De Leon have, to a certain extent, occupied his ground. The author's method of arrangement is peculiar and happy. In his first chapter, we are supposed to spend with him "four days in a country town;" each day is dedicated to a certain series of such spectacles as are considered worthy of contemplation, and each spectacle is presented and commented upon under a separate heading. In the second chapter we are invited to undertake a little "travelling by land and water;" and, in this case again, a certain number of pages is devoted to every subject of discourse under its special title of "preparations," or "embarkation," or "eating and drinking on board," or whatever else it may be considered worth while to descant upon. And the same form of procedure is adopted in the third chapter, wherein "working days and holidays, days of jubilee and days of mourning" are the theme; in the fourth chapter, wherein "the Desert" and all that appertains to it are brought under notice; in the fifth chapter, wherein we find ourselves "on the Red Sea;" in the sixth chapter, wherein we are instructed as to the "natural treasures of the Red Sea;" and in the seventh, which is also the last, chapter, wherein "popular beliefs and superstitions" meet with their proper share of attention. This sort of arrangement, having its divisions and subdivisions duly set forth, with the corresponding numbers of the pages, in the table of contents, renders an index almost unnecessary. At any rate, there is no index. Illustrations, however, there are, to the number of two dozen; and they are both useful and ornamental. The work, in the English form, is, of course, a translation; and the translator, whose name is not given, appears to have accomplished a creditable and satisfactory version. It should be mentioned, in passing, that the author is of the out-spoken sort; he does not beat about the bush, and, although no fault can be found with his tone, he describes what he has seen and experienced with true German plainness of speech and with something of what a Frenchman might call "brutal" frankness. As regards that Koseir which was for many years his home, a few words concerning its history may be welcome. It was originally a fortress, built by Sultan Selim III.; "it first became a permanent settlement of importance under Mohammed Ali, and under the favour of this Pasha soon rose to a flourishing position." At one time, "the overland route for the English to India passed through Koseir." It continued to flourish "under Abbas Pasha, and, up to the beginning of the government of Said;" but it received a severe blow by the construction of the railway between Cairo and Suez, and, being "deserted by the greater number of its inhabitants almost at once, it sunk more quickly than it had risen." The population, which "in the first thirty years of the present century," it is said, consisted of from six thousand to eight thousand souls, "can now scarcely amount to more than eight hundred." In consequence of "injuries formerly received mainly at the hands of the Government, the town is now in the condition of a sick person waving away through some internal complaint; it can neither live nor die, but every year becomes worse and weaker, and will hardly as such last more than half a score years." In the meanwhile it has given a diligent man of science an opportunity of writing a good book.

A generous as well as a sound reason is given for the title of Sir Robert Walpole: A Political Biography, by Alex. Charles Ewald, F.S.A. (Chapman and Hall), the author whereof frankly acknowledges that Archdeacon Cox's well-known work, entitled "Memoirs of the Life and Administration of Sir Robert Walpole," is so exhaustive as to preclude anybody else from claiming to be, so far as facts and materials are concerned, the great statesman's biographer in the sense in which the term is generally understood. Still, though the Archdeacon's industry may leave nothing to be desired and his thoroughness may render hopeless the efforts of a would-be gleaner after him, there may be an opening for improvement in his method of arrangement and there may be a chance of refashioning the whole biographical fabric in such wise as to present, especially to the political student, a clearer and a more characteristic portrait of the great statesman than was presented by the Archdeacon. Hence this "political biography," the epithet marking the aspect in which the subject has been chiefly regarded. The author, in fact, has "endeavoured to write the political life of Sir Robert Walpole as interpreted by his policy and correspondence;" and, in pursuance of that endeavour, he has found that his "views of the character of Walpole, and of the motives which influenced his ambition, differ considerably from those of Archdeacon Cox." This is quite a sufficient apology for a new biography, though constructed from the same data. Sir Robert Walpole, we are bidden at the outset to observe, was the first of the English "prime ministers," as they now exist; for though, in a sense, Buckingham was the prime minister of Charles I., and other men might fairly be termed prime ministers of previous kings, yet Sir Robert Walpole, we are bidden to remark, was the first of that long line of premiers, each of whom "became the recognised leader of the Cabinet, responsible for its actions, the channel of communication between it and the sovereign, and dissolved the entire Ministry at his resignation." There is, probably, no living creature, of English race and of tolerable education, who is not perfectly familiar with the two most prominent points in the political career of Sir Robert Walpole. It was his glory that he was the "minister of peace;" it was his shame that he was the "minister of corruption." But until this "political biography" appeared it is doubtful whether there was any book in which the story of his rise and fall, and of his administration during the intermediate period, could be found so accurately, lucidly, justly, and instructively related. It is impossible to read the narrative without seeing that Walpole was a great minister; and it is equally impossible to read it without seeing that he was not a great man, in the best sense of greatness. It is, after all, the personal character with which a reader of biography is most impressed; and the personal character of Walpole, for all the whitewash applied by the author of the "political biography," comes out a very bad colour. The best defence that can be made for him is that which has been made for the Father of Lies—he was not so black as he has been painted; he "was not the monster he has been represented." Nevertheless he was undoubtedly black, and he was undoubtedly a monster. He is exonerated from the charge which has been made against him of saying that "every man has his price;" but "in his eyes," it is admitted, "the world revolved upon the axis of self-interest, and between the poles of venality and corruption." So that he must, at any rate, have thought something very like what he is falsely reported to have said; and men generally found their actions upon their thoughts rather than upon their words. Moreover, he is allowed to have said, as well as thought, that it was a "schoolboy's dream, the flight of a raw ignorant lad," to suppose that "human nature ever performed anything for nothing, or was actuated in the objects it undertook by lofty and unnecessary motives." He is confessed, in fact, to have been a cynic; and he is confessed, also, to have been a sceptic, though this latter confession is not likely to weigh very heavily against him in these days of wide-spread scepticism. But even his whitewasher can find no better epithet than "disgraceful" to qualify his conduct when he was base enough to advise an injured and insulted Queen that she would do well to pay court, for political motives, to her Royal husband's paramour. Already, it would seem, the age of chivalry had departed. He had the puerile weakness, again, as his whitewasher admits, to affect the reputation of a successful rake, and to value that questionable, and certainly groundless, character above his celebrity as an able minister. He had learned to drink deep, too, without paying a visit to Elsinore; but that was an accomplishment in which thousands of his fellow country squires were equally proficient; and in which, perhaps, many a coal-heaver of to-day would be a match for him. Of course, he had his good points. Though a cynic, "he never affected the spleen of the misanthrope." It is agreed that "in his private life he was a singularly cheerful, and, unless his own interests were at stake, a very kindly man." It would be absurd, now that he is removed from the sphere where the prejudice of party might lead to blindness, to deny him the possession of talent, of eloquence, of intellectual eminence, of huge sagacity; and it would be the wantonness of a contradictory spirit to gainsay the statement that, as a minister, a financier, a dexterous pilot, he deserved well of his country. But, granted all this, and even more, it only shows how sad a moral leper may be a great statesman, and do excellent service in the government of a great nation, even as the physical leper, Naaman the Syrian, wrought wonders for his king and people.

A very creditable work, although it cannot be accepted as a full and exhaustive treatment of the subject manipulated, is concluded in the third volume, lately published, of the History of French Literature, by Henri Van Laun (Smith, Elder, and Co.), dealing with the period between the end of the reign of Louis XIV. and the end of the reign of Louis Philippe. And a rare treat it is to accompany the communicative, well-informed, judicious author through his interesting pages, whether the writers of whom he discourses be our old familiar friends, or almost strangers, of whom we have heard, indeed, but to whom we had never before been introduced in such fashion as to make their personal acquaintance. We are very soon engaged in light and pleasant chatter rather than in deep conversation about the elder Rousseau, Fontenelle, Crébillon, and the incomparable Le Sage, whom our author, in a fit of temporary denseness, considers it necessary to seriously defend against the accusation of having been "an author of one book." Surely the "sweeping remark" contained in this epigrammatic saying meant no more than that the masterpiece of "Gil Blas" would have established the fame and popularity of Le Sage for ever, though he had never written anything else, and though, to say nothing of the play of "Turcaret" and the satirical fiction of "Le Diable Boiteux," he had not "produced about sixty farces, parodies, and opéra-comiques for the minor theatres, of which a few may even be read at the present time with pleasure." Some observations are made regarding the "later Port-Royalists," of whom the illustrious Daguesseau certainly deserved, had the restrictions of space permitted, more than the page or page and a half accorded to him. After this, our attention is directed to Montesquieu, his "Persian Letters," his "Spirit of the Laws," and his other works; and from him, with a glance at Turgot, Quesnay, and Bernardin de St. Pierre, whose "Paul and Virginia," ridiculed at first by the "wits," was destined to win the hearts of the people, we arrive by a natural course of progression to the man who wrote: "The human race had lost its titles: Montesquieu has recovered and restored them to it." That man was François Marie Arouet de Voltaire, of whom our author justly says that "it is now close upon a hundred years since his death, and the definite judgment of posterity has scarcely yet been passed upon" him. That is one reason, perhaps, why so many pages, compared with the number allotted to less known writers, whose works and claims, it may be thought, a history of French literature should have vindicated from unmerited neglect and obscurity, are devoted to Voltaire, whose light has by no means been permitted to lie hidden under a bushel, and who might, therefore, if space were an object, have been fairly passed over, in favour of others among his countrymen, with a comparatively short notice, accompanied with references given to easily accessible authorities. A similar objection may be offered to the comparatively lengthened account of J. J. Rousseau. Monographs concerning both Voltaire and Rousseau, if memory be not at fault, have quite lately been published by Mr. John Morley, among others; and the monographs have been remarkable for great fullness of detail and for elaborate criticism. But this fact seems to have had a different influence from that which might have been expected upon our author, who, in dealing with Voltaire, acknowledges how much he has been indebted to two French gentlemen for the contents of his chapter. However, to proceed. We quit Voltaire for the "Encyclopædists"—of whom, by-the-way, he was one—for Diderot, for d'Alembert, "the man who wrote a preface," and their colleagues; and then we come to Buffon and J. J. Rousseau, both having to some extent co-operated with the "encyclopædists." Beaumarchais next appears upon the scene, in the character of a "literary parvenu." The orators of the Revolution, headed by Mirabeau; Republican and Royalist pamphleteers; the literature of the Reign of Terror, with André Chenier conspicuous in its ranks; the writers of the Empire and the Restoration;—all these are passed in review. Some very interesting pages are devoted to Beranger; and then we come to the reign of Louis Philippe and to the writers of whom some have but just passed away, and some are still living and honoured among us. Of the historians, Guizot and Thiers stand out conspicuously; of the poets "of the romantic school," Victor Hugo, De Lamartine, De Musset, and Gautier; of the critics, Villemain and Sainte Beuve; of the philosophers, Victor Cousin; of the novelists, Victor Hugo again, Balzac, Dumas, Georges Sand, Eugène Sue; of the dramatists, Dumas again and Victor Hugo once more. The volume concludes with some brief but pointed remarks upon the interdependence of literature and history as exemplified in the annals of France, much more strikingly than in the annals of England. However that may be, the author has undoubtedly performed a Herculean task with much credit; and, although we may be sometimes inclined to grumble at the meagreness of the fare set before us, when we sadly want more, and at the superabundance, when we could gladly do with less, we are, on the whole, more disposed to wonder that he should have been able to give us any taste at all of so many various dishes, than to regret that he was not more liberal in the case of the rarer and more sparing in the case of the commoner. And it is due to him, also, to let it be known that he has not omitted the ever desirable index.

Diogenes in search of an honest man, or Cælebs in search of a wife, had scarcely a harder time of it than the students of St. Andrew's University had lately in their search after a Rector; and this fact may tend for the moment to invest with more than ordinary interest whatever has any sort of connection with the relations which have at any time existed between that place of learning and its Rector. And some idea of those relations is to be gathered from Addresses and Sermons, delivered at St. Andrew's in 1872, 1875, and 1877, by Arthur Penryhn Stanley, D.D. (Macmillan and Co.), the celebrated Dean of Westminster having served the office of Rector in that Scottish University. As the Dean himself observes, in his short preface, the "addresses and sermons are connected chiefly by the circumstances under which they were delivered;" still, he thinks it "possible that the choice of subjects suggested by the common interests of two institutions at once so similar and so different as the Church of England and the Church of Scotland may give them an interest beyond any local and passing occasion." The natural inquiry, then, is: What are the subjects chosen? Answer: The study of greatness; the hopes of theology; the succession of spiritual life; the principles of Christianity; the two great commandments. The first two were the themes of addresses; the other three of sermons. And on such themes it will be generally allowed that the accomplished Dean is at least as well qualified as anybody else to deliver either an address or a sermon. What sort of greatness he would recommend young men, in accordance with an inscription familiar to the scholars of St. Andrew's, to study, may easily be surmised. Not merely the greatness which may be derived from a Rectorship, or other elevated position, but that which is inherent in the "whatsoever things are honest" of the apostolic precept, and in the habit of mind suggested by Sir Launcelot when he said,

And in me there dwells
No greatness, save it be some far-off touch
Of greatness to know well I am not great.

As for the "hopes of theology," by which, of course, is meant the chance which religion, as it is popularly understood, has of withstanding what it is the fashion to speak of as the assaults of science, the Dean's views may be inferred from a single bold statement uttered by him—"Whatever is bad theology is also bad science; whatever is good science is also good theology." The difficulty for nine persons out of ten is, of course, to decide whether of the two epithets is applicable upon any particular occasion. In his sermon about the "succession of spiritual life," the Dean discusses the question—"How can we carry on to the future the electric spark of moral, intellectual, and spiritual life, which is the essence of true religion? How shall Elisha catch the mantle of Elijah?" The point of the next sermon, touching "the principles of Christianity," lies in the sentence expressing a belief that "the enforcement of these principles does not necessarily supersede or conflict with the various doctrines or institutions which any of us, in our several sects or churches, may have learnt in childhood, manhood, or old age." The last sermon, touching "the two great commandments," receives emphasis from the date of its delivery; for it was preached upon the tercentenary of the never-to-be-forgotten Massacre of St. Bartholomew. It is well, however, that any Englishman who may be inclined to thank God that he is not as other men are, should be reminded that the aforesaid saint's name "recalls the mournful day on which 2000 Nonconformists were, by the hardness of our forefathers, on St. Bartholomew's Day in 1662, estranged from the Church of England."

The annual festival of the Commercial Travellers' School took place on the 21st inst., at the Freemasons' Tavern—Mr. Bass, M.P., in the chair. The subscriptions, headed by a donation of 1000 guineas by the chairman, amounted to £2523.

The Board of Trade inquiry respecting the loss of the European near Ushant on the 5th inst. was concluded on the 21st inst. at the Wreck Commissioner's Court, Westminster, before Mr. Rothery, and Admiral Aplin and Captain Nicolas, nautical assessors. The Commissioner, while admitting that the manner in which the boats were got ready after the vessel had struck reflected the greatest credit on the master, officers, and all concerned, was of opinion that the charge of culpable negligence brought against the captain for his navigation of the vessel at the time of the wreck had been proved. The Court, consequently, was compelled to suspend Captain Ker's certificate for six months.

CLOWN IN THE PANTOMIME.

Is it still the earliest and the strongest ambition of every young male Londoner to become, as soon as manhood has enfranchised him, Clown in the Pantomime at Drury Lane? I hope so; it has been the first wish of many distinguished men, and it is a desire which must tend to make him quicker and readier, both in mind and body. Yet—times change; and, as we unluckily do not change with them, we feel the difference acutely; Clown is no longer what he was, especially in London. Grimaldi is dead, and hath not left his peer; worse, he is forgotten, and it is doubtful whether his peer could pick up an honest living at Christmas-time.

For, look at the harlequinade of a pantomime of the present day. It is very short and insignificant: it is always the same—never contains the least approach to originality; its actors are gymnasts rather than comedians; it is often made what is called an "advertising medium," people, as a rule, do not stop for it, and very seldom see it out; and—what is almost worst of all—it is generally played by a double company of pantomimists, so that the clown can have no individuality, no distinct personality, in the eyes of his little spectators. This is at its worst in the leading London theatres, where mere money swamps everything; elsewhere the gorgeous scenery and the doubled clown cannot be afforded, and the patrons of the house pay less and are better amused. In a small country theatre one can even laugh, moderately; but what is this to the Pantomime of the old days—with Grimaldi in it? Then, it had its regular plot: Harlequin and Columbine were lovers, pursued by Pantaloon (Columbine's guardian) and his comic servant, Clown; and on this framework were embroidered merry scenes of every sort, in which Pantaloon and Clown were constantly discomfited—the latter usually managing to lay all the worst of it upon the former's back. Really, the humour, the art, the technical skill underlying Grimaldi's apparently impromptu buffoonery must have been very great. The world, though I think it does know something of its greatest men, very rarely appreciates the care, the toil, which must accompany greatness—even of the smallest sort. Modern clowns cannot work as Grimaldi did, because they have not the heads. An artist sees the possibility of an amount of work in the slightest thing which an ordinary man would not dream of putting into it. I have no doubt that Mr. Du Maurier gives more thought to one of his Punch sketches than your ordinary "clever amateur" could put into a dozen pictures of ten times the importance—in size.

It was in those days that a doctor could advise his patient to go and see some famous pantomimist (Lun, was it not?) as a cure for low spirits. Unfortunately, it turned out that the patient was the pantomimist himself; an interesting story, which perhaps gave rise to the curious theory that—as Thackeray says in Vanity Fair—"Mr. Merryman" is generally a very dismal person in private life. This idea is so widely spread that, while one is speaking of clowns, it is worth discussing; especially as it is, I believe, as false as most epigrammatic assertions.

Some noted examples have, of course, been given of it, and not among mere clowns only—as the sad and quiet manner of the great humourist Hood—but I imagine that they are generally examples founded on misconceptions, on imperfect knowledge of the facts. Hood was probably what his writings show him, a naturally humorous and merry man (though he was also much more than this); but, as it happened, he was poor, very delicate, and had a family to bring up and provide for—circumstances which might make any man unhappy. Other "comic men" have had preternaturally solemn faces, but these were very often assumed to give additional point to their fun. Liston, for example (much as he wished to play tragedy), was an inveterate practical joker. The theory has probably arisen in this way: people who really knew comedians in private life found that they were funny off the stage, took it for granted, and said nothing about it; but others who happened now and then to meet such men when—by no unnatural chance—they were suffering from poverty, or the pangs of despised love, or the toothache, and, finding those who were so merry at night so grave by day, were astonished at the contrast, and proclaimed it loudly.

Then, it must be said that the character of what we have called a "funny man" is peculiar. His is a nature easily moved—little makes it laugh, and, as a rule, little makes it weep. It is a nature quick to detect the drollery of things—so it makes others laugh; and it so becomes quick to examine things and find out their characteristics—and thus it sees pathos soon, and is quick to weep. It is a nature that, gaining the applause of others, comes to love that applause, and to be sensitive to opinion; and it is a nature that, habituated to a certain amount of display before others, does not strive to conceal its emotions, as many do, and thus does not obtain the mastery over them possessed by the more reserved.

The truth of this may be found by anyone who will notice the "funny men" he meets in society—I speak of the funny men who are genuinely amusing: not of those whose natures, containing little but conceit and vulgarity, think there is nothing to be lived for but horse-laughter. But, if we take the really famous funny man of the stage, another element comes in—or at all events is present in a far higher degree. To convey fun—or pathos, or passion, or any other feeling—to the public, a man must be an artist: he must have the power of presenting his thought in the most striking, complete, and concise way—nothing necessary omitted, nothing unnecessary kept in. That the artistic nature is sensitive may, I think, be taken for granted; and, more even than the sensitive poet or painter, the sensitive comedian may be expected to be shy and reserved in society. There is always the feeling that he is expected to be funny; there is the fear that he is only invited to amuse; and there is the exquisite pain of imagining that he is looked down upon by graver (often duller) natures—that beautiful and poetic women, earnest men, would not admit him to share their serious thoughts; would only chat with him as a relaxation, only enjoy, or tolerate, him as a droll. They have seen him roll about a stage, in the most undignified attitudes, for the amusement of unwashed street-boys in the sixpenny gallery; at the mercy of costermongers—actually unhappy if they do not laugh, pleased if he can tickle their vulgar fancy. Poor artist! doomed by a turned-up nose, an active frame, a keen sense of the incongruity of things, of the lack of the beautiful in everyday life—in short, by a too searching philosophy—to tumble for a living: how can we wonder at a shy and sad reserve for which there is so evident a cause?

But, in really private life, among his own intimate friends, the comic man of the stage is nearly always (when his health is good and his pocket full) the life, the leading spirit of the room. It is, of course, his nature to be funny; if it were not he could by no effort amuse us; and a man's nature rules him everywhere. Even kings have found it pleasant to hob-and-nob with professed drolls; so, if you want to pass your festive hours merrily, and if your exalted social position do not stand in your way, make of the Clown in the Pantomime your bosom friend.

The National Society's life-boat, aided by the coast-guard, rescued twenty-five men from a wreck, at Hartlepool, on Sunday.

CHESS.

S. PHELPS.—The rule is as follows:—Only Pawns standing on the 4th squares can take en passant, while only Pawns moving for the first time and advancing two squares can be taken en passant. If so taken, they are assumed only to have moved one square, and the capture proceeds upon that basis. Your opponent, therefore, is in error. Your Pawn which you have advanced, and legally advanced, to Kt 5th cannot be captured by his Pawn at B 3rd. His statement that the privilege he claims is in force at the City of London Chess Club is likewise erroneous. No such eccentric rule prevails there.

E. BURKARD.—We have not now your former communication by us, but presume you have overlooked that, in No. 1760, if 1. Kt takes P (ch), the Black King, in moving, discovers ch; and if then 2. Kt takes B (ch), Black replies, P takes Kt, no mate following on next move.

CLIFTON.—1. R to Q 4th will not solve No. 1762, if, instead of the move you give, Black plays 1. B to K 5th.

W. H. MACKETT.—Receipt acknowledged in our issue of the 26th ult. We cannot reply to correspondents through the post.

A. E. (Freckenham).—Your solution of Enigma 14 is perfect.

W. T. AMAN.—The leading variation is sufficient to secure an acknowledgment.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 1764.
WHITE. BLACK.
1. B to Q 2nd P to K 3rd
2. B to Kt 4th Any move
If 1. P to K 4th, then 2. B takes P, mating next move with Rook or Bishop.

PROBLEM No. 1767.

By J. J. WATTS.

BLACK.

WHITE.
White to play, and mate in three moves.

SIMULTANEOUS CHESS.
One of twenty-one Games played by Mr. WICKER at the City of London Chess Club in 1875, his opponent being Mr. S. J. STEVENS.
(Two Knights' Defence.)

WHITE (Mr. W.)	BLACK (Mr. S.)	WHITE (Mr. W.)	BLACK (Mr. S.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	18. P to Q 4th	B to Q 2nd
2. Kt to K B 3rd	Kt to Q B 3rd	19. P takes P	P takes P
3. B to B 4th	Kt to K B 3rd	20. P takes P	B to Kt 3rd

8. Kt to R 2nd	Q to Q 2nd	25. P to B 6th	Kt to Kt 3rd
No sound attack can accrue to Black from his previous move; but such as there is will not be made the most of this way. B to K Kt sq is evidently best now.		26. K to Kt sq	P to K R 4th
9. Q to B 3rd	Q to K 2nd	27. P to B 7th	P to B 5th

A reply which Black had clearly not foreseen.		37. B to Kt 6th	P to B 4th

DELTA sends us a sparkling little Partie, which he states is the only game played by him this year, he having almost given up playing at Chess. We may venture to hope that our old and esteemed contributor will not entirely forsake the recreation with which he has been identified for so many years past, and that his familiar alias will from time to time recur in this column. Delta, through us, sends his "best respects to the London Chess Players," and we have pleasure in being the medium of this salute from one of Howard Staunton's old friends. The above-mentioned Game is given hereunder. It was played with Mr. JAMES.

WHITE (Delta).	BLACK (Mr. J.)	WHITE (Delta).	BLACK (Mr. J.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	10. Castles.	K to Q sq
2. P to K B 4th	P takes P	11. Castles.	Q takes Kt
3. Kt to K B 3rd	P to Kt 4th	12. R to Q sq (ch)	B to Q 2nd
4. B to B 4th	P to Kt 5th	13. Kt to B 3rd	B to Q 7th
5. P to Q 4th		14. B to K 5th	Q to Kt 3rd (ch)
Koch and Ghulam Kassim's attack. It has generally been held inferior to A. Castles; but the latter continuation, as we had occasion lately to observe, has been much damaged by modern analysis.		15. K to R sq	Kt to K R 3rd
6. Q takes P	P takes Kt	16. B takes B	Kt takes B
7. B takes Q P	P to Q 4th	17. Q takes Kt	Q to B 4th
8. B to Kt 3rd	P to Q B 3rd	18. B to B 6th (ch)	B to K 2nd
9. Q takes P	Q takes P	This is immediately disastrous. However, the game cannot well be saved, for if K to B sq or B 2nd, the King's pawn advances with fatal effect.
10. B takes P (ch)	Q takes Kt P	19. Q to B 8th (ch)	K to B 2nd
Staunton here gives 14. Q to B 5th, but		20. B takes B, and wins.

CHESS INTELLIGENCE.
The fourth pairing in the City of London Chess Club Handicap Tournament has taken place, and the combatants were drawn together as follows:—Division A (for the two chief prizes): Huckle v. Lord, Beardsall v. Eschwege, Potter v. Harris or Manning, Busby or Botterill v. Hoon or Long. Division B (for the two lesser prizes): Walthew v. Clarke, Israel v. George, Heywood v. Kindell or Meller, Earle v. Hopkinson or Carter.

The winter session of the chess club established in connection with the Jewish Working Men's Institute was opened on the 15th instant by a match which took place with the Bermondsey Chess Club. The Jewish club was represented by Messrs. Mocatta, Gunsberg, Louis Cohen, Hausmeister, Harris, Poles, Samuels, and Israel. The Bermondsey Club had for its representatives Messrs. Weaver, Beardsall, Philip, J. Holeman, Watts, Cooper, A. Holeman, and Huttly. The Jewish players were victorious by four games to two, with two draws.

Eight more games have been played in the match between Mr. Thorold and Miss Budge, at the odds of a Knight, since we last alluded to that interesting contest, and the score now stands as follows:—Miss R., 8; Mr. T., 6; there being still no draws. The balance has therefore turned in favour of the lady player, for she is now two games ahead, whereas she was before two behind. By the conditions of the match the winner of the first eleven games is to be the victor or victress.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will and codicil (dated May 23, and July 15, 1877), of the Right Hon. Eliza, Countess of Oxford and Mortimer, late of The Cottage, Braywicke, Berks, who died on Sept. 14 last, were proved on the 28th ult. by Captain John Delves Broughton, Edward Howley Palmer, and Arthur Ranken Ford, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £3000.

The will (dated July 3, 1877) of Henrique Jose Da Costa, Visconde de Porto Salvo, late of Brescia, in Italy, who died on Aug. 11, has just been proved in London by Giovanni Sabino Vianna, the personal estate in England being sworn under £80,000. There are several bequests to charities in Italy and Portugal, and considerable legacies to friends and servants; the residuary legatees are his great nephews, Giovanni Sabino Vianna, Giuseppe Sabino Vianna, and Antonio Sabino Vianna.

The will (dated July 23, 1877) of Mrs. Julia Ann Dobie, late of No. 7, Houghton-place, Amphil-square, who died on Sept. 14 last, was proved on the 12th inst. by Hall Plumer and Alexander Gowan, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. Among numerous devises and bequests, the testatrix leaves £1000 to the Royal Naval School, New-cross; £500 to the Royal Naval Female School, Isleworth, and £300 each to the Hospital for the Paralyzed and Epileptic, Queen's-square, Bloomsbury, the National Benevolent Institution, Southampton-row, the Royal Asylum of St. Anne's Society, Streatham, the Victoria Hospital for Children, Gough-square, Chelsea, the Royal Free Hospital, Gray's-inn-lane, the University College Hospital, Gower-street, the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, St. Pancras Almshouses, Haverstock-hill, and the Seaside Convalescent Hospital, No. 8, Charing-cross.

The will (dated Aug. 28, 1875) of Mr. William Hubbard, late of Lyndhurst Lodge, White Horse-lane, South Norwood, and of No. 53, Borough High-street, hop merchant, who died on the 24th ult., was proved on the 10th inst. by Mrs. Ellen Hubbard, the widow, the sole executrix, the personal estate being sworn under £50,000. The testator gives to his daughter, Anne Dorcas Welch, £2000; and the rest of everything else he possesses to his wife.

The will (dated July 31, 1877) of Mr. William Charles Caldwell, formerly Captain H.M. 47th Foot, late of Chobham, Surrey, who died on Oct. 29 last, was proved on the 5th inst. by James Butler Fellowes, Robert Hindley Wilkinson, and Charles Underwood, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £40,000. The testator devises all his real estate to his nephew, Charles Henry Bulwer Caldwell; and there are legacies and annuities to friends and servants. The residue of his personal estate he leaves upon trust for his brother and sister, Charles Benjamin Caldwell and Charlotte Louisa Caldwell for their lives. On the death of the survivor of them legacies of £5000 to each of his nieces take effect, and the ultimate residue is given to his said nephew.

ASTRONOMICAL OCCURRENCES IN JANUARY, 1878.

(From the "Illustrated London Almanack.")

The Moon is near Jupiter on the 3rd; but, it being the day of new Moon, both are near the Sun. She is near Mercury on the 4th, near Venus during the evening hours of the 7th, Saturn during the evening hours of the 8th, Mars during the evening hours of the 11th, and near both Mercury and Jupiter on the last day, but on the 31st the Moon is visible only a short time before sunrise. Her times of change are:—

	3rd	after 2h.	in the afternoon.
First Quarter	11th	47	6
Full Moon	19th	11	0
Last Quarter	25th	49	8

She is nearest the Earth on the afternoon of the 20th, and most distant from it on the afternoon of the 8th.

Mercury sets on the 1st at 5h. 29m. p.m., or 1h. 29m. after the Sun; this interval decreases rapidly till on the 12th, when both the planet and Sun set nearly together, and from this day till March 21 the planet sets in daylight. On the 15th he rises nearly one hour before sunrise, on the 26th he rises at 6h. 22m. a.m., or nearly 1h. 30m. before the Sun, and on the last day at 6h. 20m. a.m., or 1h. 23m. before sunrise. He is near the Moon on the 4th, at his least distance from the Sun on the 5th, in inferior conjunction with the Sun on the 10th, near Jupiter on the 13th, stationary among the stars on the 22nd, and again near the Moon on the last day.

Venus is an evening star, setting on the 1st at 8h. 6m. p.m., or 4h. 6m. after sunset, on the 11th at 8h. 14m. p.m., on the 21st at 8h. 8m. p.m., and on the last day at 7h. 41m. p.m., or 3h. 1m. after sunset. She is due south on the 1st at 3h. 11m. p.m., on the 15th at 2h. 49m. p.m., and on the last day at 1h. 58m. p.m. She is in her ascending node on the 4th, near the Moon on the 7th, at her greatest brilliancy on the 16th, and stationary among the stars on the 29th.

Mars sets on the 1st at 0h. 31m. a.m., on the 12th at 0h. 26m. a.m., on the 22nd at 0h. 21m. a.m., and on the last day at 0h. 18m. a.m. He crosses the meridian or is due south on the 1st at 6h. 1m. p.m., on the 11th at 5h. 43m. p.m., on the 21st at 5h. 26m. p.m., and on the last day at 5h. 10m. p.m. He is in quadrature with the Sun on the 4th, and near the Moon on the 11th.

Jupiter sets on the 5th at about the time of sunset, and from this day till July 26 he sets in daylight. He rises at sunrise on the 6th, at 7h. 50m. a.m. on the 11th; at 7h. 19m. a.m., or 36 minutes before the Sun, on the 21st; and at 6h. 47m. a.m., or 56 minutes before sunrise, on the last day. He is due south on the 1st at 0h. 18m. p.m., on the 15th at 11h. 37m. a.m., and on the last day at 10h. 50m. a.m. He is near the Moon on the 3rd, and again on the last day, and in conjunction with the Sun on the 5th.

Saturn is an evening star, setting on the 1st at 9h. 49m. p.m., on the 11th at 9h. 14m. p.m., on the 21st at 8h. 41m. p.m., and on the last day of the month at 8h. 7m. p.m., or 3h. 21m. after sunset. He is due south on the 1st at 4h. 25m. p.m., on the 11th at 3h. 49m. p.m., on the 21st at 3h. 13m. p.m., and on the last day at 2h. 37m. p.m. He is near the Moon on the 8th.

A report containing the details of an important improvement to be carried out in St. Paul's-churchyard has been adopted by the Common Council. The chief features of the scheme are that the present graveyard is to be laid out and maintained as a public ornamental ground, the roadway is to be widened on the south side, and on the north-east a fence will be removed and a fountain erected.

A few months ago the Zoological Society voted a gold medal to the Prince of Wales for his kindness in allowing his collection of Indian animals to be exhibited in the society's gardens. At a recent meeting of the council of the society the president, the Marquis of Tweeddale, proposed that the silver medal of the society should be awarded to Mr. Robert Hudson, F.R.S., in acknowledgment of the valuable services he has rendered to the society for the fifty years that he has been a Fellow thereof. The motion was carried unanimously.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. Browne (late Army Medical Staff) discovered a remedy, to denote which he coined the word CHLO-DYNE. Dr. Browne is the Sole Inventor, and it is therefore evident that, as he has never published the formula, anything else sold under the name CHLORODYNE must be a piracy.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE.—All attempts at analysis have failed to discover its composition.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W.
Pere Wood stated publicly in Court that Dr. J.
Collis Browne was undoubtedly the inventor of Chlorodyne, that the whole story of the defendant was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say that it had been sworn to.
See the "Times," July 13, 1866.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE is a Liquid Medicine which assuages pain of every kind, affords a calm and refreshing sleep, relieves all cases of HEADACHE, and invigorates the Nervous System when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE.

COLDS, BRONCHITIS,
COUGHS, ASTHMA.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE.

Extract from the "Medical Times," Jan. 12, 1866.
"Is prescribed by scores of orthodox practitioners. Of course it would not be thus singularly popular did it not supply a want and fill a place."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE.

From Surgeon Hawthorne, Henry-street, Banbridge.

"I have been in the habit of prescribing your preparation of Chlorodyne pretty largely these last three months. I have invariably found it useful particularly in the latter stages of Phthisis, allaying the incessant harrowing cough; also in Chronic Bronchitis and Asthma."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE.

From F. J. Freeland, Esq., Surgeon, Chichester.
"Mr. Freeland presents his compliments to M^r. Dr. J. C. Browne, and requests another supply of Chlorodyne. It has been of marked service in a case of Dysentery, in allaying the cough, and relieved very severe 'after-pains' in another person."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE most effectually relieves those too often fatal diseases
GROUP and DIPHTHERIA.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE

is the great specific for CHOLERA, DYSENTERY, DIARRHŒA.

Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians that he had received a despatch from her Majesty's Consul at Manila to the effect that Cholera had been raging fearfully, and that the ONLY Remedy of any service was CHLORODYNE.—See "Lancet," Dec. 31, 1866.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE.

The General Board of Health, London, reports that it acts as a charm, one dose generally sufficient.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE.

Dr. Gibben, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states:—"Two doses completely cured me of diarrhoea."

THE WAR.

The "Times," Aug. 12, 1877.
"From our Correspondent with the Russian Army.—'Okoun, July 25.—The want of sanitary arrangements in the Russian camp was dreadful. I myself acquired a reputation as a doctor, owing to being provided with a small bottle of Chlorodyne, with which I effected miraculous cures.'"

THE WAR.

The "Standard," Aug. 12.—The climate in Shumla, and, in fact, in all towns in this country, seems fever laden. Quinine and Chlorodyne are consequently at a premium."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE

rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, PALPITATION, SPASMS, HYSTERIA,
COLIC.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE

is the true palliative in NEURALGIA, RHEUMATISM, GOUT, CANCER,
TOOTHACHE.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

The immense sale of this remedy has given rise to many unscrupulous imitations.
M.B.—Every Bottle of GENUINE CHLORODYNE bears on the Government Stamp the name of the INVENTOR.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE.

Sold in Bottles, 1s. 11d., 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d.

MARAVILLA COCOA,
DELICIOUS AND INVIGORATING

MARAVILLA COCOA.
"It may justly be called the perfection of prepared Cocoa."
British Medical Journal.

MARAVILLA COCOA.—The "Globe" says,
"TAYLOR BROTHERS'
MARAVILLA COCOA has achieved a thorough success, and supercedes every other cocoa in the market. Entirely soluble, of a delicate aroma, and a rare concentration of the purest elements of nutrition, distinguishing the Mar-villa Cocoa above all others. For invalids, dyspeptics, and consumers of Cocoa in general, we could not recommend a more agreeable or valuable beverage."
